Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think, Mr. President, when the Constitution directed Congress to create courts inferior to the Supreme Court of the United States, while, of course, Congress had the physical power not to do it, it was nevertheless a mandatory duty. Congress would have itself violated the provisions of the Constitution if it had not created the courts. Having created them, I can not concede the proposition that it can deprive them of all jurisdiction of all cases and thereby in substance abolish them.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Utah let me make a statement in justice to myself?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, I will conclude in one sentence, and then the Senator can take the floor.

Mr. BACON. I want to correct something that I said. I spoke of the Spanish commission as a court. Of course, I know it is only a commission, and I used it simply by way of illustration. If they had been justices what I said by way of illustration would have been apt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That was the point of my inquiry when the Senator made the statement.

Now, Mr. President, just a sentence to conclude. An act of Congress getting rid of these five judges would perhaps have no serious consequences, but that sets, as I view it, an exceedingly dangerous precedent. If Congress undertakes to pass legislation which will abolish the offices of these five judges against the provision of the Constitution that they shall hold office during good behavior, at some future time it may be cited as a precedent for going as far as the Senator from Georgia suggested a while ago, abolishing all the circuit judges and abolishing all the district judges, if we happen to have some party in power that does not agree with what the courts as a whole are doing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] offers an amendment against which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] raises a point of order. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend, by substituting for lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, on page 147, the following words:

> The five additional circuit court judgeships provided for by the act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, are hereby abolished, and the authority in said act of Congress for the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint five additional circuit judges is hereby repealed, and the number of circuit judges is hereby reduced to 29.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that that is offered as an amendment to the paragraph on page 145, which is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. OVERMAN. This amendment is offered to perfect the text before the amendment of the committee comes up to strike out. Therefore I think it is in order, because it is offered for the purpose of perfecting the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming will state his point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, if I have sinned I ought to apologize, but I understand when a point of order is raised here by a Senator in charge of a bill that point is to be decided without debate on the merits of the case, though the point of order may be discussed, the Chair permitting.

I withheld the point of order so that the Senator from Georgia could speak upon it, and I assume that when the Senator from Utah was speaking he understood that under our rules I would have to withhold the point of order if he could proceed, unless he spoke entirely to the point of order. Hence, my suggestion that we may have a ruling upon the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not hear what the Senator from Wyoming is saying.

Mr. BACON. None of us can hear on this side.

Mr. WARREN. It is unimportant, anyway. This is an appropriation bill and the rules are clearly against general legislation on an appropriation bill. Besides, all the smaller matters, lack of estimate and lack of presentation by a committee, lie against the amendment as it was stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is clearly of opinion that the amendment proposes general legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Chair to submit that question to the Senate under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. OVERMAN. I appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators who are of opinion that the decision of the Chair is correct will vote "yea," and those of a contrary opinion will vote "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] has been assigned to service in attendance on a funeral, and I consented to stand paired with him to-day on this question.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. GARDNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE] and withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I see that he is absent from the Chamber, and I will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I am also informed that if the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] were here he would vote as I do, but I am not certain enough to vote without transferring my pair. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], but on this question he stands paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). In the absence of my general pair I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who, I understand, has been called away from the city. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire if the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Having a general pair with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer that pair to my colleague, the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, noes 26, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bradley	du Pont	Oliver	Stephenson
Brandegee	Jones	Page	Townsend
Burnham	Lippitt	Perkins	Warren
Burton	Lodge	Smith, Mich.	Wetmore
Catron	McCumber	Smoot

NAYS—26.

Ashurst	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Shively
Bacon	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Bourne	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Bristow	Gore	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Gronna	Percy	Swanson
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Poindexter
Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene

NOT VOTING—49.

Bailey	Dillingham	Lea	Sanders
Bankhead	Dixon	Lorimer	Smith, Md.
Borah	Fall	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Briggs	Foster	Nelson	Stone
Brown	Gallinger	Newlands	Sutherland
Chilton	Gamble	O'Gorman	Thornton
Clapp	Gardner	Owen	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Guggenheim	Paynter	Watson
Crane	Heyburn	Penrose	Williams
Crawford	Johnson, Me.	Rayner	Works
Cullom	Kenyon	Reed
Curtis	Kern	Richardson
Davis	La Follette	Root

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the names of the absentees may be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The names of the absent Senators will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. When the vote was taken I announced my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I see that he has since entered the Chamber. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I will take occasion to transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON. Since the transfer by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] of his pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HEYBURN. When my name was called I announced my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If I may under the rules, I now transfer that pair to my colleague, the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and vote. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the question whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate the yeas are 22, the nays are 29, and the decision of the Chair is overruled. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the argument of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] was as strong and persuasive as an argument from that point of view could possibly be. When I remember, however, as every reader of the history of his country must remember, the relations of Justice Story to the famous controversy referred to in his work upon the Constitution, it diminishes somewhat the confidence that I always or nearly always feel in any utterance from that distinguished jurist. I recognize, as every Senator must, that it was the spirit of the forefathers when they framed the Constitution to make the tenure of judges permanent, to give them that fixedness which would inspire the independence of which my friend from Utah so eloquently spoke; but we must not carry the inhibition of the Constitution to the point reached by the Senator from Utah. The Constitution, in speaking of the judiciary, says:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

There is no prohibition in the Constitution against the termination of an office, the abolition of an office. I agree that if Congress was so disposed—swept, if you please, with passion—it might by indirection do the very thing which the Constitution intended that it should not do; but our forefathers did not see fit to provide against that contingency, and it can not be assumed that for light or trivial or vengeful reasons Congress will abolish an office which it has solemnly created or established. The Constitution left us free, therefore, to abolish offices, even though through their abolition a judge or the person who filled the office might cease to be an officer of the United States.

It would be most interesting and instructive if we were to enter for a little while, and I do not intend to do it, upon the consideration of the term "good behavior"; there is a prevalent notion throughout the country that judges of the Federal courts are appointed for life. That is not true. They are appointed during good behavior. I recognize that I am not now speaking directly to the point at issue, but we so often hear the expression that Federal judges are appointed for life that I want to give some publicity to the real language of the Constitution, which is "during good behavior." I am not one of the persons who believe that the determination of what is good behavior can be had only in an impeachment trial. My friend from Utah says that unless a Federal judge is removed from his office by the process of impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors he must remain there during his natural life. I can not agree to that statement. I do not intend to pause to even discuss what procedure could be established by Congress in order to determine what good behavior is and what it is not; but I believe that there is misbehavior on the part of a judge for which he can be removed from office that does not rise to the dignity or the severity of either a crime or a misdemeanor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Either I did not express myself as I intended to do or the Senator from Iowa did not quite understand me. I did not mean to say that a judge could hold his office until he had been impeached. I recognize that there is a great deal of force in what the Senator from Iowa says. I am not at all certain but that there may be such behavior upon the part of a judge short of an impeachable offense that would enable us to get rid of him. I did not mean to antagonize that position.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad indeed that I misunderstood the Senator from Utah, because in these days when clouds are rolling around the judiciary, when various remedies are proposed for their recall, I think it is well to remember that we have somewhere, somehow, the power to determine the good behavior of the judges of the United States, and that therefore we do not need, at this time at any rate, those severer changes that are suggested in the recall by a popular vote.

I think that Congress has the power to provide for the removal of judges of the United States whenever they violate the rule which is established in the Constitution, namely, the rule of good behavior; and that means that these judges must obey, and as I am very glad to say they generally have obeyed, the fundamental principles of propriety and of ethics.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator a question in that connection. As the Senator well knows, the provision during good behavior for the judges of the inferior courts is based upon the act of settlement of the English Crown of 1704, on which the tenure of English judges rests. That provides that they should hold, in the Latin phrase, quamdiu bene se gesserit, during good behavior; but the English act of settlement carries with it a provision for determining the good behavior—that is, the removal by address. Our Constitution provides no means of doing that unless it be by impeachment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assent at once to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. I know the English act provided that the will of Parliament should be the rule for determining good behavior. It is not so with our Constitution; and neither is it so that the only way of determining good behavior is through a court of impeachment. We have never yet had the occasion; it never became necessary for us to legislate upon that subject, but when it does I predict that Congress will find that it may upon giving the judge affected opportunity for trial and for hearing prescribe a procedure which shall erect some other test, some higher standard than the low and ineffectual test and standard of the commission of a crime or a misdemeanor.

I mention that only in passing, in order that we may not fall into any assent to the doctrine that I understood to be announced by the Senator from Utah, but which I am very glad to know now that he did not intend to announce.

Mr. LODGE. The proposition just made by the Senator from Iowa, that the judge should have opportunity to be heard in his defense and that Congress should then have power to take such means as it saw fit to remove him without impeachment, after all is removal by address. It might not be in the form of addressing the President to remove him.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not the arbitrary removal by address, merely.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly; but it would be substantially that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The removal by address does not involve a hearing; it does not involve a trial; although both may accompany the removal by address.

Mr. LODGE. The universal practice in England has been for the judge to have a full hearing by committees of both Houses of Parliament. In my State, which has had a provision for removal by address, that hearing has always been accorded to the judge.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will not attempt to put limits on or to define the power that we have in that respect; but I know very well, as time goes on and these questions become more acute, it will be discovered that we have a remedy which hitherto we have never exercised and of which most people have been entirely insensible.

I now advance to the question we have before us. It is a serious question as well as an interesting one. Whenever we attempt to exercise a power under the Constitution that, so far as I can remember, was exercised only in one instance referred to by the Senator from Utah, we ought to give the matter the most careful thought, and we ought to decide only after full debate and mature deliberation.

I do not agree with the Senator from Utah, but I do recognize his great ability as a student of the Constitution. I do not want this matter to be decided until every Senator shall have considered it with that care that it so well deserves. I have already said that the framers of the Constitution did not prohibit us from abolishing an office which we have the authority to create. The framers of the Constitution simply said that the salary of a judge—one of these judges—should not be diminished during his continuance in office. They said that he should be appointed to the office during good behavior. I have no doubt that these provisions were inserted for the purpose of procuring the independence and the permanency which I think all students of government believe the judiciary ought to have; but it is a long step, I think an unwarranted step, from that proposition, to which I think we will all agree, to the further proposition that because these limitations were put upon us, namely limitations as to the reduction of salary and limitations as to the removal of the judge from his office, whatever those limitations are—and I have just indicated that they are not entirely what they have been understood to be—it is a long step from that position to the further one, that the Congress of the United States is prohibited under the Constitution from abolishing an office and from terminating the connection or the relation of the man who holds it with the Government on account of the abolition of the office.

I put to the Senator from Utah the question, Suppose that the Commerce Court had been created—as it was—suppose that these judges had been appointed as judges of the Commerce Court without any relation whatever to any other judicial tribunal of the land? We all agree that we may abolish the Commerce Court, and, so abolishing it, we would be confronted with the anomalous and the absurd condition that five men, without duties, without power, without station, should for their lives or during their good behavior continue to draw their salaries from month to month from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, suppose in that event we wanted to remove one of them under the Constitution with respect to good behavior, what would constitute good behavior in a man formerly a judge dissociated from a court and pursuing a purely private life? It seems to me incredible that under those circumstances the judges could survive the abolition of the court.

Now, I take one further step. We have authorized the President to appoint these men as additional circuit judges, and they are by law assigned to the Commerce Court to hold the Commerce Court. I will not go into the question, which was debated yesterday, respecting the quality of these circuit judges as compared with other circuit judges who are appointed for particular circuits and for particular circuit courts of appeals, but it nevertheless is true that each one of these men holds an office. He holds an office that is entirely apart and distinct from the circuit court of the United States or the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States. He holds the office of circuit judge. If we abolish the office of circuit judge, that is the office which he holds—and there seems to be no reasonable doubt with regard to our power to do that—then he becomes again without any power whatsoever; he is not attached to any court; his office of circuit judge is gone, and the Chief Justice of the United States under those circumstances might have no power whatsoever to assign him to work or duty upon the circuit court of appeals or to any other judicial tribunal.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to make a suggestion right in that connection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BACON. I suggest that the only case in which the Chief Justice is authorized to assign a judge of the Commerce Court to duty in a circuit court is when there has been a place made vacant by that circuit judge having been assigned to the Commerce Court. Consequently, if the Commerce Court is dispensed with there can be no vacancy occasioned in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was referring, however, to the obvious intention of the House bill. The House bill seems to contemplate that these judges shall remain in existence and that, as rapidly as vacancies occur in the circuits, they shall then be assigned to those circuits; that if for temporary purposes the Chief Justice desires to assign any one of them to any circuit he shall continue to have the authority to do so; but the Chief Justice can only assign one of these judges because he is a judge, because he holds the office of circuit judge. The very moment—I am speaking entirely without regard to what he may do in the way of drawing his salary—the very moment we take his office away from him—and that it seems to be agreed we may do—we abolish that office. Will it be contended that the Chief Justice could assign one of these men, whose office is gone, to work upon the circuit court of appeals? I do not believe so, and I can not concur with the idea or with the conclusion that we are powerless in this respect.

The term "during good behavior," as used in the Constitution, is no more sacred or effective in protecting one who holds the office than a definite term in the Constitution. Suppose the Constitution, instead of saying that these inferior judges should be appointed during good behavior, had said they shall be appointed for a period of 10 years—I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] has proposed an amendment looking to just that change in our Constitution—suppose these judges, therefore, were holding their offices during a term of 10 years, and the 10 years had not yet expired, can any Senator doubt that we could abolish the office within the period of 10 years?

I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to many cases, though I have not them on my tongue's end, and I can not cite them at this moment, but I know that it is the general law of the country, as evidenced by the decisions of many supreme courts of the various States, that an office with a definite term, whether it be established by statute or whether it be established by the constitution, if the constitution has given to the State the power to deal with it, it may be abolished, and then the occupant of the office has no vested right in the remainder of his term and no moral or legal claim upon his government for the salary which he would have drawn if the office had not been abolished.

I concur with the Senator from Utah that we ought to approach such questions as this with great seriousness and to consider them with great care. We ought not to fall into the habit—and I hope we never shall fall into the habit—of removing judges for any personal reason through the indirect method of abolishing their offices, and then re-creating those offices, to be filled by other appointees. That course would subject us, and properly subject us, to the censure of all right-thinking men, but this is not that kind of case. We have concluded, and I believe we have concluded wisely, that the jurisdiction exercised by the Commerce Court will be better exercised if it is again given to the general courts of the country. Having reached that conclusion, which is entirely free from any political animosity, from any political differences of opinion, having reached that carefully and after much debate, it seems to me that the disposition of the judges themselves ought to follow as a necessary consequence.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, without detaining the Senate, I wish to read an authority on the question as to whether or not the abolition of an office abolishes the officer who holds the office, or rather abolishes his tenure of office. I read this case, Mr. President, in the Senate on the 9th of February of last year, when a debate upon the question as to the effect of the abolition of the circuit courts of the United States was in progress. I read then from the original book; I am now reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which contains the extract as I then read it. It is a decision of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky in the case of Bruce v. Fox, in 1 Dana's Reports of the Court of Appeals, the highest court in Kentucky, and one which stands very high as a State court. In that case, discussing this very question, the court said:

> The office must continue as long as the law which created it shall continue, and no longer. The legislature, when it declared that the law should continue in force for two years, meant no more and could have done no more, than to say that the law should continue for two years, unless sooner repealed, and should continue to operate no longer than two years, unless, before the expiration of that time, its operation should be prolonged by the legislature. Had the law been enacted without any legislative attempt to limit its operation, the office which it established would have continued to exist as long as the law should have remained in force, and no longer. A repeal of the law by the legislature next succeeding that which enacted it would have abolished the office; and there being no office, there could be no officer; for, if the constitutional tenure be "good behavior," and the continuance of the office (and not the continuance of the circuit courts), then, as the office is only legislative in its creation, it may be abolished by legislation, and when thus abrogated, the incumbent is ipso facto out of office.

That is about as explicit and as directly to the point as it could be possible for any court in the same limit of space to express itself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Was that the case which involved the controversy in Kentucky, which lasted, as I remember, several years, between what was called the new court and the old court?

Mr. BACON. I do not know.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] is here, and he can tell. That was a different matter, was it?

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Kentucky, who is present, says he does not think so.

Mr. PAYNTER. I remember the Senator from Georgia read from this same opinion when the legislation was under discussion at a previous session.

Mr. BACON. Yes; it was read in February a year ago, and is from First Dana's Reports.

Mr. PAYNTER. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that I have no doubt if Congress creates an office it can by legislation abolish it; but that is not the question that is involved here, as I understand the matter.

Mr. BACON. But that is the question upon which I am invoking this decision, because that is the question which has been discussed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood there was a controversy in Kentucky some years ago growing out, as I remember, of the action of the legislature, which had abolished existing courts and set up other courts in their place. A contest as to which of those courts existed was carried on for a number of years, and there were decisions both ways upon the subject.

Mr. BACON. The utterance of the court in that case is not confined to the circumstances of any particular case, but is the ruling upon a general question—whether or not the abolition of an office abolishes the tenure of the officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to perfect the amendment by the insertion of a reference to the last judiciary act as well as to the original act of 1910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to have the Secretary read the amendment as perfected. It is simply a reference to the ninth chapter of the judiciary act as well as a reference to the act of 1910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In place of the lines proposed to be stricken out on page 147, lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, it is proposed to insert:

> The five additional circuit judgeships provided for by the act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, and by chapter 9 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, are hereby abolished, and the authority in said acts of Congress for the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint five additional circuit judges is hereby repealed, and the number of circuit judges is hereby reduced to 29.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has submitted two other amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 147, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "Thirty-four" and insert "Twenty-nine," so that it will read:

> Circuit Courts of Appeals: Twenty-nine circuit judges, at $7,000 each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 147, line 10, in the total, it is proposed to strike out "$272,500" and to insert in lieu thereof "$237,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry, possibly of the Senator in charge of the bill. Would an amendment relating to section 10 be now in order? I desire, Mr. President, either now or at some other time, to offer an amendment such as I suggested yesterday with regard to the issuance of preliminary injunctions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that beyond question the amendment would be in order when the bill goes into the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I will defer the amendment until that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one amendment passed over which will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 153, the Committee on Appropriations proposed to strike out section 4 and in lieu thereof to insert a new section, as follows:

> SEC. 4. The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted; it shall also provide a maximum rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted; it shall further provide for a maximum rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Copies of all records of efficiency shall be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission for record in accordance with the provisions of this section: Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer as an amendment to that amendment, after the word "dropped," in line 17, to insert the words "or reduced in rank or salary."

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator tell me what his object is? The amendment itself provides for demotions as well as for dropping.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The purpose of my amendment is to extend the privileges, if they may be so called, of honorably discharged soldiers so as not only to protect them from being discharged, other things being equal, but from being reduced in rank and salary.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think the language is insufficient now? If their rating is at least good, they will not be disturbed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not be dropped.

Mr. WARREN. No soldier will be dropped.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask the Secretary to read again that portion of the amendment with reference to soldiers.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Provided, That in the event of reductions being made in the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 154, line 17, after the word "dropped," it is proposed to insert "or reduced in rank or salary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber for a few moments, but I understand the question now under consideration is the amendment of the committee inserting section 4 in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to take this occasion to express my views in regard to the tenure of office of Government employees. I regret that this matter comes before the Senate in connection with an appropriation bill, because it is one to which more time and consideration should be given than I would feel justified in occupying at this time, but I have long favored the system of a limited tenure of office for all Government employees. I think a tenure of office limited to 10 years would perhaps be a fair measure.

The right to hold office under the Government is as clear a right as that to vote. It does not seem to me that any person or class of persons should be continually in office by appointment or otherwise. All the people are entitled to participate in the performance of the functions and duties connected with the administration of the Government. If we limit the tenure to 10 years, it will afford an opportunity to these employees, through the practice of economy, to acquire enough capital to enable them to enter upon the individual responsibilities of life at the end of that time; it will avoid superannuation in office; it will promote efficiency in office.

If an employee of the Government knows that at the end of 10 years he is going to be thrown upon his own responsibility he will practice economy and live within his income, and at the end of that time he can very readily have sufficient capital to enable him to go out into the controverted fields of enterprise and industry and take his chances with other people. It will also give a more frequent opportunity to the young generations of this country to become acquainted with the affairs and the management and methods of government in order that they, too, may have an opportunity to acquire a sufficient sum of money to enable them to go out into the fields of business, and so on, generation after generation. It will afford to the younger portion of each generation an opportunity to have learned the science of government to the extent of the duties that they perform. I have been impatient with the existing condition where people, acquiring an appointment early in life, are tempted to live up to the limit and even beyond the limit of their income, who save nothing, on the assumption that they will always have the position and its emoluments. I think it is bad for the people.

We have nearly half a million people in the Government service now—460,000 or 470,000, I think, according to a statement before me. Now, those people are planning to occupy those positions, as they may under existing law, during their lifetime, and they are, in their judgment, relieved of the necessity of practicing that economy which would be desirable in order to provide for themselves after they go out of office. It tends to carelessness and to a spirit of independence that sometimes amounts to insolence in office. They remind me sometimes of the English sparrows, who hold their ground against you when you walk along the street and make you walk around them.

That is not the best condition. It would militate nothing against efficiency in office, because the man who is there 9 years is perhaps as well equipped to perform the duties of the 10-year man, or substantially so, as the man who has been there 10 years, and they come up, one rank after the other, each as it approaches the limit of tenure competent to take the place of the man who would go out under this system.

There is nothing in the proposition of trained men being absolutely necessary to carry on the business as against other men equally competent. It is safe to say that in every class—that is, in the class of those who have served 6 or 7 or 8 years—are many as competent or more competent than the man who has been there 10 years, and especially against those who have been there 20 or 30 years. I think that suggestion is worthy of consideration. We must solve this question one of these days or we will have the affairs of government in the hands of superannuated people without limit.

I had hoped that when this question came before Congress it would come as an independent proposition, which we might take up on statistics and experience and exercise an independent judgment, without the embarrassments that surround the consideration of such a question when it comes in as an amendment on an appropriation bill.

But even with the tenure of five years, as is provided in the House bill, I should feel inclined to support the House provision rather than the amendment proposed by the Senate committee. The amendment proposed by the Senate committee is an evasion of the question. It will afford no more efficient method than we have now. It merely goes to the question of the manner or the particularity of the selection of these appointees.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate committee amendment will not be adopted. If we find, upon the adoption of the House provision, that five years is too short a tenure of office, then we can deal with it afterwards, without taking it up in connection with an appropriation bill. We can extend that limit. But we want fresh blood in the ranks of our employees—those who deal with the details of government. We want a new deal on that proposition. We want a freer opportunity for the hundreds of thousands of the younger generation, just as competent or more competent than those who are in office under existing conditions; we want an opportunity for them, because they are entitled to it under our system of government.

Then, again, we are practically disfranchising three or four hundred thousand people. We are drawing them away from the environment of their lives, placing them in office in the District of Columbia, where they neither feel the duty nor the inclination to participate in responsible citizenship or to contribute to responsible citizenship in the affairs of government. I would not undertake to estimate the number of people who have been dwarfed by the present system. Young men come here and accept by appointment positions in the Government service who, if thrown back into the body of the people, would doubtless afford a vast amount of intelligent, energetic citizenship that would be useful and would represent a growing usefulness as these people reassume the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. We are dwarfing a half million of our people by giving them what amounts to a permanent employment under the Government, when they had better be thrown back into the field of responsible citizenship.

It has been suggested that many of them do not save any margin over and above their salaries. If they do not, then that is an admission that they are not fit for the performance of responsible duties. A person who holds for 10 years a position under the Government with a salary of $1,800 and who saves nothing is not fit for anything at all. He is lacking in the sense of responsible, individual action. Then it would be an incentive to them all to save something out of their salaries extending over so many years.

I had an application only a few days ago from a person, one of a family, man and wife, both of whom had been in the Government service over 20 years, and the application was for a pension based upon the allegations that they had no property, and that one of the parties was absolutely destitute. That is a reflection upon those people. It is a reflection upon the character that tends efficiency. I am speaking now of clerks in the departments of all grades.

We have been legislating here to protect them against their lack of prudence and frugality by punishing those who would trade upon their necessities. There is no Government position—I will not say none, but they are so few as not to be worthy of consideration— which does not afford sufficient compensation to keep the employee out of debt, and yet we stood here for many days enacting legislation to prevent people from loaning them money. The only ones who have to borrow money probably—with the rare exception of accident—are those who lack prudence and who anticipate their salary and go to the "money sharks," as they are termed, to borrow something upon the future.

At that time I made some suggestions that there ought to be no occasion for such legislation. This is the time to put the whole service upon a different footing. The civil service can just as well sift and select persons for the Government service for five years or for a longer term as they can for life. It militates nothing against the performance of the duty of the Civil Service Commission.

The age limitation in the House provision is perhaps about where it ought to be, but there should be none of these clerks in the service longer than 10 years—neither men nor women.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho, as I think was suggested by the member of the committee who now occupies the chair [Mr. GALLINGER], that there ought to be some legislation along the line of preventing people, sometimes 20, 30, 100, or 150 miles distant, from attending the civil-service examinations and paying out $20 or $30 or $100 to take them to the point, when there is no earthly chance for them to be appointed. There are 40,000 on the roll, and yet the commission goes on holding civil-service examinations all over the States, and applicants pay their money and go down and stand the examination, when there is no earthly chance for them ever to be appointed.

I wish we could suspend these examinations for a while or get a number of these persons off the rolls and give the others a chance.

I think there are a good many employees here, as the Senator says, who ought to go back among the people. But why hold these examinations? I asked one of the members of the Civil Service Commission why hold these examinations two or three times a year and invite the people to go to the points where they are held and stand the examination, when the Civil Service Commission knows there is no chance for them to be appointed. It is a great tax on the men and women of this country.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is an objection to the method of administering the laws. But there is a thought arising out of that. The Senator says they should go back, and I was just approaching that question. If you could send back class succeeding class from the Government service to the communities of the country, you would send back teachers, people who knew something that those people do not know and can not know. They would be instructors, qualified by their experience of 10 years or less in the Government service, who, as the occasion might arise, would be able to teach or instruct or make suggestions to the people of the communities to which they would return, and thus convey to them invaluable information in regard to the methods of administering the Government.

Returning classes, going back every year to the communities all over this country, would exercise a very beneficial influence; and it would give more frequent opportunity to the younger generation of the country to attend this great school of government, in which they would each and all learn something that they could not learn elsewhere. It would tend to educate the people in the details of administering the Government.

We have all seen, in our own communities, people come back from the Government service who became, by reason of their education in the practical operation of the Government, exceptionally useful citizens, capable of answering questions and of making suggestions, all of which tends to the better enlightenment of those who are to come. And it would be an inspiration to the younger generation to seek position under the Government in order that they might the better fit themselves for the duties of citizenship.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I want to say that I have been greatly interested in the Senator's argument on this subject, and I concur almost wholly with him. Last week we had before the committee of which I am a member an application by a man for a pension upon the ground that he had been 50 years in the civil service of the United States. I think that shows the tendency of this legislation which keeps people in office, and I think there should be periods for them to pass out.

Mr. HEYBURN. After a reasonable tenure. Why, the people who come to Washington even on these excursions go home better-equipped citizens than before. The people at large have little conception of the methods of government. They have ordinarily a very incorrect conception of the methods of government and of the men who administer the affairs of the Government. Anything that brings the young mind here in contact with the concrete government is beneficial to the whole people—not only to the person, but to all who come in contact with him in his home.

There is another side of the matter. The temptation to remain single on the part of those who have what they may consider a permanent provision in life is one of the important things to be considered. Take the young women who come into the Government service, and, because their positions are comfortable, refrain from performing that highest function of civilization, marriage. Life is comfortable to them, and they are not willing to take the chances of a change. With a tenure of 10 years, those people would go out while comparatively young, while yet within the age where they would seek mates and establish homes. With the thousands of them now in the service in Washington, it is safe to say that a very large majority of them, had they known that at the end of a given period they would be thrown upon their own resources, would have married. That is an important consideration.

The same is true of young men, though perhaps not to the same extent. But a young man who knows that at the end of every month he will receive a check for so much money often does not care to take the chances of changing his condition, and he, too, drifts along into the years, and if he can remain here 30 or 40 years, as a rule, he remains in that condition. You have only to look down the working files of these departments to see the silver heads of both sexes who, had they been out on their own responsibility at a proper age, would have lived a different and a more useful life.

I would regard the Government service as a Government school for the education of its citizens in government. That is the way I always have looked at it. I knew a man who, when I was a very young man, came down here and secured an appointment in the Treasury Department, intending to stay here three years. I knew the Member of Congress who appointed him. He was a prosperous young man. He was intelligent. He was a writer and a newspaper man. He said: "I will just go down there and stay about three years, until I get the run of things." As a matter of fact, he stayed here until he was sixty-odd years old, and died in the service. After he came here he never advanced one foot beyond a position of competence and usefulness as a citizen. In his later years he received, I think, $2,240 a year, or some such sum. He found the position so comfortable and the temptation to remain here so great that he never returned to the field of activity and citizenship. We are breeding up generations of that kind of people, who fritter away their lives because the Government guarantees them a given number of dollars at the end of every month.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. As chairman of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, I have given a good deal of study to the subject the Senator from Idaho is now discussing. I do not intend to go over it at this time; but I should like to ask him if he has observed that the bill as it comes from the House will not accomplish the purpose the Senator from Idaho has in view.

The bill as it comes from the House provides for a five-year term of appointment; but it also provides that the head of the department may reappoint, at the end of five years, all who are competent. My idea is that if the House bill were to prevail the head of the department would reappoint all those who had any political influence behind them. I think it would introduce into the departments one of the most evil influences that can be imagined, and one that we have tried very hard to exclude.

I recognize that there is a great deal of force in the limited term. But if the idea is embodied in the law, the person who serves the term ought to be ineligible for reappointment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am in thorough accord with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. But I have observed all through life that I can walk only one step at a time. If we can once limit the tenure, we shall have made one step. In the future I hope we shall make other steps along the line suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

I have observed, in legislation by Congress, that it is not good policy, simply because you can not get everything in one bill, to strike it all down. To my mind, the keynote of the whole situation is a limited tenure. Let us get that first. We get that here. I would be in favor of striking out the part of the House bill that gives the right to reappoint. I should like to amend this provision as it comes from the House by striking out "five" and inserting "ten," and give no right to reappoint. I recognize the force of what the Senator says; but if we can not get it all at once, why not take what we can get to-day, and then, at an opportune time, strive to get the balance?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I fear the Senator from Idaho is giving me credit for a concurrence that I do not deserve. I say there is great force in the argument for a limited tenure or term. But, on the whole, I believe the better thought of students upon the subject is that the term should be during good behavior, as is the term of our judges.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was not attempting to anticipate the vote of the Senator from Iowa upon this question. I was taking occasion to express my concurrence in the views that he expressed, so far as he expressed them along the lines for which I was speaking.

But we must do something with this question. We can not continue successfully to conduct the affairs of the Government under existing conditions. The sooner we begin upon the improvement of those conditions the sooner we shall have reached a conclusion that will be satisfactory to all except those who may be affected by it.

If this bill were to provide that from and after this time no appointment should be made for a longer term than 10 years, we should have accomplished that much. We should have laid the foundation for wise legislation.

I do not know whether there is any ground upon which to base a hope that we shall upon this occasion start in the right direction. Of course, the question now is on the adoption of the Senate amendment and not upon the amendment of the House provision. I understand that very well as the parliamentary situation. But before Members vote for the Senate amendment they ought to consider whether we can not agree upon something that will be better than the Senate amendment. If we vote down the Senate amendment, we then shall be in a position to amend the House provision.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an interruption?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. I was very much interested in the remarks of the Senator from Idaho when he spoke of the tendency of the employee to retain a position because of the ease it brought. I want to call his attention to another phase of the question and that is that aside from a well-settled appetite for strong drink, there is no slavery so binding as the slavery of salary.

I can not agree with the Senator to a 10-year term because of the tendency to rob a man of all self-reliance, of all courage to face the problem of life which goes with the taking of a salary. I believe we should limit the tenure to five years in order that we may give the employee the benefit of the education the Senator has so well described, and at the same time, as far as possible, save the employee from the terrible slavery of the salary, which, when it has once fastened upon a man, robs him of his reliance, robs him of his courage, and makes him a slave to a position which, if it were not for that slavery he would get out of and face the problems of life.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the greatest disfigurement to the American people is what I call the pay-window stoop, the man who looks down and peers through the window for his check at the end of every month. The Government is to be estimated by the number of free people in it. The man who works for himself is a weightier and more self-respecting man than the man who works for another. He steps a little firmer; he holds his head a little higher than the man who is the employee of somebody else. The larger the percentage of citizenship that are engaged in industrial enterprises on their own account the higher the standard of the Government which those citizens constitute.

That enters into this question. Take these people out of their long tenure of office and let them assume the responsibilities of life and there will be thousands of them who will develop into master men, men who are capable of taking a place in the foremost rank of men of affairs; but they are smothered up, covered up, by this condition that surrounds them. They have not the opportunity, and they generally lose the ambition to become self-respecting participants in Government. You can take this vast army of Government employees, amounting to nearly a half million, and turn them into the body of our citizenship, and a very large per cent of them will develop those self-reliant and sterling qualities that make them really valuable citizens.

Of what value is the citizenship of one of these Government employees? They do not vote. They do not exercise or assume the responsibility of expression or action in the Government. They live here in the District of Columbia as long as they are in office, and their children are not even citizens of the United States. I will undertake to say that there are to-day disfranchised in this city three people for every one in Government position, who, if the head was not in this position, would be out in the world of responsibility. Let us send them there. Let us not be cruel about it. We can not do this thing by just turning a knob. We must take care of those who would be affected by it who are too old to turn out into the field of active duties in life, but we do not want to establish a system that will compel us to be always taking care of succeeding generations of superannuated Government clerks. We must first stop it, and then take the material before us and sift it and deal with it as may seem wise.

If we now incorporate it into this bill, either through the amendment or through the defeat of the amendment and the reconsideration of the House provision, we will say that no more appointments shall be made for more than the number of years that may be deemed wise, and we will have stopped the growth of the evil; and we will deal with the evil that we then have on our hands.

Mr. President, I can not, of course, introduce any amendment to the House text until after we have disposed, as I understand it, of the amendment, but I hope that in disposing of that amendment Senators in casting their vote will have in mind that if we do reject the Senate committee amendment we will be in a position where we can deal with this question and consider it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I understand the parliamentary status of this amendment, it is to strike out sections 4 and 5 and insert in lieu thereof the new number 4. That being the case, and not knowing how the vote might be upon that, I assume the proper way to secure an amendment that ought to go, in case the committee amendment is not adopted, is to perfect section 4 of the bill as it originally stood. I therefore move to amend section 4, on page 152, line 8, after the word "Bureau," by inserting "and employees of the Bureau of Pensions," so that the same shall read:

That during the fiscal year 1913 no vacancy occurring in the classified service of any executive department or other Government establishment within the District of Columbia, except forecasters in the Weather Bureau and employees of the Bureau of Pensions, shall be filled except by promotion or demotion—

And so forth.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that, of course, does not pertain to the amendment which is under discussion. That is another section—the section which proposes to permit no vacancy in employees' places to be filled in any department of the Government during the next fiscal year.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. WARREN. It is stricken out by the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Also the succeeding section is stricken out, and another section is inserted in lieu of both those sections.

Mr. WARREN. No; not that. We renumbered it section 4, because it becomes section 4 if the other sections are stricken out; but the matter refers entirely and only to the section containing the five-year clause, so called. Of course, if the Senator is going to amend the bill in that way we shall have to take up all the departments, because complaints have been made by every single department that such a restriction will cripple its work. Hence in striking it out, if the evidence before the conferees demands it, it would go back in. Of course, if there should be a contention over it and, as it has been sometimes stated here, it should be held that the conferees could not insert any language—not even a word—that is not in the bill, we would have to amend in a great many places now.

Mr. McCUMBER. The committee amendment strikes out section 4 and also strikes out section 5. I understand that the committee amendment has not yet been agreed to upon those two propositions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from North Dakota will permit the Chair, the Chair is advised that by the action of the Senate sections 4 and 5 have been stricken from the bill, and the only question now is upon the amendment offered.

Mr. McCUMBER. If those sections have already been stricken from the bill, I do not think that my amendment would be necessary. But I would ask this question of the Senator from Wyoming: As the bill is now amended, does it prevent future employees from being certified from the civil-service register to any of these departments?

Mr. WARREN. I do not so understand it.

Mr. McCUMBER. And does it allow free access from one department to the other? The reason why I asked this question is because we have passed a new general pension bill. Under that pension bill already, I understand, over 200,000 applications for increases have been filed, and as a matter of fact the Pension Bureau really needs additional employees in order to dispose of the great number of new applications, if they dispose of them in a reasonable length of time. While within two years they may be able to take care of everything with the force they now have, if there is anything in the bill which prevents them from adding to their force as that force is diminished by death or resignation, either from other departments or by new appointees, they will be greatly crippled. This bureau is not in the position of other bureaus.

Mr. WARREN. I understand perfectly what the Senator wishes to bring about, and I am in entire sympathy with him, but I have contended, and I shall so contend until the Senate by some affirmative action shall say I am wrong, that when legislation like that is inserted in a bill, and it is stricken out, the conferees will have authority to except every one or any of the departments, if they can get an agreement upon it, because this seeks to allow no department to have any certification. We, on the other hand, by striking the section out, open up the subject so that any department can have all vacancies filled. We shall have the power to right the matter which the Senator from North Dakota is bringing to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that now it is stricken out.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therefore the old law is retained. I simply want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact now, upon the floor of the Senate, that when the matter goes to conference, as it necessarily will, it will either have to stay stricken out or it will be absolutely necessary to insert something to except the Bureau of Pensions from its operation. Otherwise a great injustice will be done to all the soldiers of the Civil War who have been granted pensions or increase of pensions under the new pension act.

Mr. WARREN. That is true, and there might be another matter which I will bring up. I would be almost ready to say that I should never consent to any part of that section being reinserted in conference without first bringing it to the Senate. We have another section which particularizes one department; in other words, which says that the War Department shall discharge after the 1st of July 10 per cent of its employees. Then that department is also included in the clause which provides that there shall be no certification and filling of vacancies. The subcommittee in preparing this matter wanted to meet it as I know the Senator does, so that those points can be covered in conference.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the explanation made by the Senator from Wyoming I will withdraw the offer of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, did I not consider this amendment of more than passing importance I would not intrude upon the time of the Senate, but, as I understand the parliamentary position, we must first dispose of the Senate amendment before we can enter upon the amendment of the House provision. Am I correct, I will ask the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Senate committee amendment can be amended or it can be voted down to perfect the text of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not see any place where a Senate amendment could be so amended as to cover the points that I think should be covered. I have been looking it over, and I am rather inclined to think, with all due respect to the committee that proposes the Senate amendment, that it was done rather to offer something as a substitute for the House provision, because there is nothing in it that seems to be a new departure from existing conditions.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes, Mr. President. The Senator will observe that it seeks to make an efficiency rating so that promotion and demotion and discharge will follow the various standards of work. The object is to prevent, if possible, the local differences in one department and in another. They pass upon the papers locally and then all the papers from the different departments are assembled in the Civil Service Commission, and the efficiency records are made up there.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that.

Mr. WARREN. As to the point the Senator makes about a 10 years' discharge, of course if those two sections go into the conferees' hands they are both within the power of the conferees to alter and change, so that the two can be amalgamated partially, or any reasonable tearing apart or putting together can ensue.

Mr. HEYBURN. In effect, that would be only legislating in conformity with the existing methods of the civil service in regard to the efficiency promotions.

Mr. WARREN. At present the Civil Service Commission have nothing whatever to do with efficiency after they have once certified out an employee.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true; but it is only authorizing that which is done at some stage of consideration of the promotion or demotion of these employees.

Then, let us make this Senate amendment useful. I move to amend it, on line 17, after the word "dropped," by inserting:

Provided, That the tenure of office of all appointees hereafter made in the departments of the Government under the civil-service law shall be limited to 10 years.

I will ask the Secretary to read that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as requested.

Mr. WARREN. While the clerks are preparing that amendment I will say that, of course, the Senate will vote it in or out, as it chooses, but that does not affect the powers of the conferees to widen them, but rather results in restraining their power. I prefer that the amendment be not passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not intending to put it within the power of the conferees to make a provision covering this point. If no such provision is made or suggested in the amendment, it will not be within the power of the conferees to legislate upon that question. I will say to the Senator in charge of the bill that I had in mind putting it within the power of the conferees to incorporate into the bill a provision of that kind. Under the rule that I understand governs them they can not in conference introduce new legislation unless it is contained in one or the other of the bills. So I should like to see it sent to the conference with that declaration on the part of the Senate, and the conferees then can conform the language or change the place in the bill where it is to be inserted, but they will be bound to consider that as the Senate's expression in regard to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. While the clerks are preparing the amendment may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question? I gathered from the colloquy between the Senator from Idaho and the chairman of the committee that it might possibly be accepted as the sentiment of the Senate that it was agreeable to the limiting of the tenure of office.

Mr. HEYBURN. I use rather mild language, for it would be an instruction from the Senate if we adopt it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Personally I am very much opposed to it myself. I would not want it to go unchallenged here as an instruction to the conferees that it could proceed under the adoption of this amendment to limit the tenure of office either to five years or to any other period.

Mr. HEYBURN. Unless the Senate so instructs them. My amendment is intended as an instruction.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I inferred from the answer of the chairman that he assumed if that was left out the conferees could agree upon some language.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not think they could under any rule. They are not at liberty to insert new legislation that was not the subject of consideration by either House.

Mr. WARREN. This would be the condition as now before us. It goes to the conferees with a five-year limit from the one House and with an unlimited length of service from the other House. In my opinion the power of the conferees would extend anywhere from a 5-year limit to no limit at all, and they could make it a 20-year limit or a 10-year limit, or a 15-year limit. That is my idea as to the power of the conferees.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa suspend a moment so that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho may be stated?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment may be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 154, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, following the word "salary," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the tenure of office of appointees hereafter made in the departments of Government under the civil-service law shall be limited to 10 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to complete my remarks which I did not complete?

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. If 10 years goes in on the part of the Senate and 5 years is there on the part of the House, I think the conferees would be bound to a difference somewhere between 5 and 10 years.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is what I have in mind.

Mr. WARREN. I want the Senate to know that this simply puts it where the conferees must agree either on 5 years or 10 years or some length of time between.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had that in mind.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not interrupt the Senator from Idaho until he is through.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield the floor, as I can get it again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this presents what I regard as a very serious matter. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is adopted, and the proposed amendment of the committee thereby modified, we have overturned the entire civil service of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is what I intended.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have overturned a structure that we have been years in rearing, and which, I think, commands the confidence of most people who are acquainted with what it is.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator yield a moment for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course we understand what the Senator means, but I think for the RECORD it ought to appear in the form of question and answer. The Senator does not mean that it overturns the civil-service system as to the manner of originally selecting the employees, but that it simply overturns it as to the subsequent disposition of them after they enter the service.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; I so understand.

Mr. CLAPP. I understood it; but I thought the RECORD ought to show it.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I regard the permanence of tenure as an essential part of the present civil-service system. If we are to return to short terms, I doubt very much whether we ought to preserve the system that we have for entrance into the service through the examinations that are now prescribed. I hope the Senate will not do this thing.

To the classifications and systems that are proposed in the Senate committee amendment I have no great objection. I will only say to the Senate that now for two years the committee to which this matter ought to have been referred has had under consideration various changes that have been proposed to our civil-service system. There are changes that have been proposed for examinations, for promotions, for demotions, and for retirement as well. While I have no reason to complain, and do not complain, yet when the Senate appoints a committee for the purpose of dealing with the civil service, it seems to me that if it is proposed to change that service materially, the measure which does it ought to have been under consideration by the Civil Service Committee.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad to hear the Senator make the statement from his committee, and I think I ought, on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, to explain the way this matter came up.

In the first place, it came up in the House bill. I saw that there was a great deal of uneasiness about it, as other Senators saw, and we sought to find if there were not some ground somewhere on which we could overcome what seemed to a great many Senators a bad condition or proposition and yet not make it worse. This amendment is the result of taking advice, not only from the Civil Service Commission, but from civil-service people outside of Government employ—I might call them the volunteer association—and liberalizing the ideas of the civil-service people with the views of the committee itself. It is nobody's language in particular as it is here as a whole; but what we sought to do was to protect the part that is good in the civil service and to eradicate at least some of the parts thought to be bad. There was not time, as the Senator will easily understand—we did not agree upon this language until almost the last thing in the bill—so that we could report it back from the Appropriations Committee and send it to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not objecting to the language of the amendment, but here is the situation: We have a great civil-service system, which embraces 238,000 men and women in the United States. It has been created gradually; the rights and privileges of all these people have been from time to time stated in the law; and I hope that we will not—I said a moment ago "overturn the system"—I will now say "revolutionize the system" by adopting either the provision of the House bill in that respect or by approaching the House bill in that respect through the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

More than two years ago the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment took up this subject, and we have been investigating it ever since. I have given a great deal of time and a great deal of study to the matter. Awhile ago the committee united upon a bill for the retirement of superannuated civil-service employees, which bill is now before the Senate and upon the calendar. I am now studying and preparing a bill for the reclassification of our civil-service employees, so that each man will receive a salary commensurate with the work that he is actually doing, and so that men who receive the same salary shall be required to do practically the same kind and quantity of work. Further than that, the bill, which will shortly in this session, I suppose, be reported to the Senate, will involve a system for making promotions and for demotions.

I do not think that upon this appropriation bill the whole system should be marred or impaired in the way proposed. I ask for an opportunity on the part of the committee of which I am chairman to deal with this subject, and, if Congress desires legislation upon it, that it shall be proposed and referred to that committee.

I have no great objection, as I said before, to this system of promotions and demotions being devised by the Civil Service Commission. That does not interfere with the general subject, although I think it is entirely unnecessary, for we shall presently present to the Senate a plan that I think will be very much better and very much more complete than the one outlined in this bill.

I am not, however, so much concerned in that as I am in defeating the proposal of the House contained in section 5 and in defeating the proposal of the Senator from Idaho, which introduces into the committee amendment the same idea that is already in the House bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to interrupt him at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CUMMINS. Gladly.

Mr. WARREN. I perfectly agree with the Senator. This provision ought not to be in this bill if we follow the lines which we have heretofore followed on appropriation bills, because while such bills always have more or less legislation in them it is of a unanimous-consent kind. This provision is in the bill, however, and it is in it under the rules of the other House. The conferees have to meet it, and they must either take it as a whole or defeat it if they can. Therefore the committee thought the better way to handle it was to introduce what they have presented, which ought to be satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I hope is, Mr. President, that the Senate will reject section 5 of the House bill as recommended by the Committee of Appropriations. So far as relates to the substitute for that section proposed by the committee, I have no particular concern one way or the other.

I hope also the Senate will reject section 4, which simply limits the number of employees during the year to the number now in employment. That might seriously cripple the departments not only here but elsewhere. I do not think that Congress should in a blind way say that no additional employees shall enter the service of the United States during the next year. That seems to me to be rather a reckless way of proceeding. If the Government needs additional employees, and they are within the appropriations that are made by this Congress, the heads of departments ought to have the opportunity and ought to have the power to employ such persons as have qualified themselves under the civil-service rules.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 154, line 17, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the tenure of office of the appointees hereafter made in the departments of Government under the civil-service law shall be limited to 10 years.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only want to express my agreement with what has been said by the Senator from Iowa as to the drastic effect that this amendment would have upon the entire Government employment. I think the central idea the Senator from Idaho has in mind, that there should be some provision adopted to prevent the loading up of Government offices with superannuated employees, undoubtedly has a great deal of merit, but I think that it is not necessary to strike down the essential principles of the civil service in order to accomplish that. I think the limitation of 10 years on the employment would work a great injury to the Government service. Many of the most useful and most efficient employees of the Government are those who have been there for 10 years.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that the amendment which I have offered would in no way affect the performance of the duties of the Civil Service Commission. Instead of appointing Government employees for indefinite periods, they would appoint them by exactly the same process for 10 years.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Appointments would constantly be recurring, and especially when the privilege of reappointment is retained, as it would be retained under this amendment, the pressure and influence of friends and——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Washington that the pressure of friends would have nothing whatever to do with it any more than now, because the appointees would be drawn from the civil-service rolls and political influence would not be given consideration. It is not proposed by the Senator to strike down the civil-service process of appointment. The appointments would come automatically, as they do now, independent of any political influence. The sole question here is the advisability of limiting the term of appointments; it does not go to the manner of appointment, for there is no change suggested in that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But it does go to the manner of appointment when it leaves the discretion in the bureau chiefs or in the department to reemploy those whose terms of service have ended.

Mr. BRISTOW. That reemployment would, of course, depend, and should depend—I do not know whether the amendment properly provides for it—upon merit, upon the records made by the employees.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the amendment as it is proposed should be adopted, it would require nothing more than the mere fact that the employee had been in the service in order to give discretion to the department to reemploy him, and every 10 years the entire army of civil-service employees would come up for reemployment or else be discharged. Of course that would be on the average; it would be distributed through the 10-year period; but, on the average, it would be equivalent to having every employee in the civil service come up either for reappointment or to have some one substituted for him at the end of every 10-year period. It is impossible to eliminate, under those circumstances, the pressure of political influence and of friends upon the civil service. But the special objection that I have to it is the fact that it would drive out of the service the most valuable employees in the service. The more skillful, the more effective, the more worth his money the employee had become, so much the more would he be inevitably retired from the service. It is not good business; it would not be in private life; and it is not in public affairs.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. On that point I should like to inquire why it would drive the skillful and efficient employee out of the service? In what way would it drive him out?

Mr. POINDEXTER. At the end of the 10-year period.

Mr. BRISTOW. But he is eligible for reappointment; and if his record is good, he is a very desirable candidate for reappointment and ought to be reappointed upon his record.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And right at that particular point, in the statement which the Senator from Kansas has just now made, there is involved the full force and all the evil effects of the old spoils system in the employment of civilians in the Government service.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the evil of the spoils system consisted in the ability of a politician to secure the appointment of a political friend in his community as the result of political services rendered there. Since the appointments are not made upon the recommendations of politicians, but are made through the Civil Service Commission as a result of examinations that are wholly nonpartisan—and no complaint has ever been made of the Civil Service Commission having been influenced in any way by political preferences—the inability of the politician to fill the place causes him to lose interest in the tenure of the office. I admit that if these places were to be filled upon the recommendations of politicians, it would be the spoils system, and nobody would desire that; but there is a very wide difference between filling the places through civil-service certification and filling them upon the recommendations of politicians, and that is the very difference between the spoils system and the present one.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Washington allow me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Right on the point the Senator was making, when you come to the end of the 5-year or 10-year term you will see repeated just what occurred in the Census Office when a certain number of employees had to go out as the appropriations diminished, and there was political pressure from all sides, political pressure to retain this man, to advance that man, and to let the other one go. You would have at the end of the 5 or 10 year period, as I think the Senator from Washington has well pointed out, one great struggle by Members of the House and Members of the Senate to try to keep their favorites in place.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We can not escape from that effect.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. Could not that objection be eliminated——

Mr. LODGE. It could not be eliminated.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, wait. Could it not be eliminated by an absolute prohibition making them ineligible for reappointment? That would, of course, have to be done if the House plan is to be considered.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means not to have them reappointed?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. That is simply the destruction of the whole system at once.

Mr. CLAPP. It might be and it might not be.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Some such solution would be necessary in order to obviate the evils of political influence in appointments; and if you adopt that solution, then you adopt a system by which you have got to supply the Government every 10 years or every 5 years with a full force of inexperienced employees.

Mr. HEYBURN. They would not all go out at once.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the average they would go out once every 5 years or once every 10 years.

Mr. HEYBURN. We would not miss the ones that would go.

Mr. LODGE. But this provides for a specific date in 1917.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. CULLOM. We need a brief executive session—only a few minutes.

Mr. HEYBURN. We can not finish the bill to-night.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Illinois withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to state that with the great "progress" we have made to-day on the legislative bill I hope we may conclude it to-morrow, and I shall ask the Senate to take it up the first thing in the morning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 13, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 12, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God and our Father, how inscrutable is Thy providence. Thy ways are past finding out. But we thank Thee that Thou hast not left us without a witness. The light of reason is strong and leads us through many a tangled web, yet it does not satisfy the longings of our souls, but where it ends faith begins and lifts us into the realm of the eternal possibilities and hope comes, an angel to guide us on our way. The story of the stars is clearer. The affections which hold us together in bands of steel rejoice in the promises through the life, death, and resurrection of the Christ. Thou has laid a heavy hand upon us in the removal of another one of the congressional family whose life was opening into the larger fields of usefulness. Young, strong, buoyant of spirit, gifted with a wealth of ability, schooled, by training well fitted for the path of life which he had chosen. Our hearts are filled with sorrow. Comfort us with the everlasting hope in that love which encircles all. Be with the young wife and child. Strengthen the mother for her task. Be with all to whom he was near and dear, and help us to look forward with faith and hope to the life everlasting in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Library to ask unanimous consent to change a reference of House joint resolution 289 from the Committee on the Library to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] asks unanimous consent that House joint resolution 289 be changed from the Committee on the Library to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What is the resolution about?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 289) in relation to a monument to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the country to the cause of the Union during the Civil War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the request, as I understand, is a change of reference from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Committee on the Library.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Library asked unanimous consent to have it changed the other way.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the proceedings under Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with for to-day in order that the House may continue its work on the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069). First, I would ask that the Clerk report the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to dispense with the proceedings under Calendar Wednesday for to-day. Five minutes' debate is allowed on each side on said motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the House that to-day is the 12th of June. The sundry civil bill must go to the President before the 1st of July. The bill has 167 pages in it. Only 48 pages have been passed on so far. After the House completes the consideration of this bill it must go to the Senate and be acted upon.

Now, I am not one of those who are disposed to interfere with the business that is on the calendar for Wednesday under ordinary circumstances, but I believe that the House has approached a period in the consideration of these appropriation bills where we must dispose of them, and I will say to the House that, so far as I am concerned, in dispensing with Calendar Wednesday now, I hope there will be an opportunity given to get these appropriation bills here out of the way in order to take up the business on the calendar and dispose of it. But that business is not as urgent as the passage of the appropriation bills, when we are only about 15 or 16 days away from the time when they must become a law, because the Government must have these funds at its disposal when the new fiscal year begins. It requires a two-thirds vote to dispose of Calendar Wednesday, and I recognize that the gentlemen on the Republican side of the House can prevent it if they so desire; but I appeal to the gentlemen on that side to stand with us in suspending Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has used two minutes and has three minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have a part of the three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in favor of the motion?

Mr. MANN. I am in favor of the motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Under the circumstances I think it would be a convenience, Mr. Speaker, as on this side of the House many Members desire to be in Chicago next week, to proceed with the sundry civil bill rather than the bills on Wednesday's calendar, with the hope that the sundry civil bill may pass through the House this week, and the Army conference report may also be disposed of this week.

I can not, however, agree with the gentleman from Alabama, that there is any possibility of the sundry civil bill getting to the President by the 1st of July. My understanding is that there is an understanding in the Senate that there will be practically no business transacted for two weeks, commencing with next Monday.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] what the disposition on his side of the House will be as to the transaction of business next week—business that might involve partisan controversy?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that I recognize the fact that there are gentlemen on that side of the House who desire to be absent during the convention of their party. There will be no disposition on this side of the House to bring up partisan legislation, but I do not think it is necessary for the House to adjourn. There is other legislation that can be transacted.

Mr. MANN. I appreciate that.

Mr. BURNETT rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized on the opposite side.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this motion ought to prevail. We have only one day in the week on which general legislation, as a rule, outside of the appropriation bills, can be passed, and if we do not utilize that, I would like to know when we are going to get through important legislation that is on the calendar for Wednesday. I noticed only yesterday that my colleague from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the leader of the majority, had stated that the Congress would run on until the 1st of August, and if that is so, and if the gentleman who supports the motion [Mr. MANN] on the other side of the House is correct in the idea that this bill could not reach the President by the 1st of July, then I see no good reason for undertaking to expedite this particular legislation to the delay of other legislation which can not be reached except on Calendar Wednesday. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York oppose the motion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York, if I have any time left.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for three minutes in favor of the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to be recognized for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the sundry civil bill was brought before the House a week ago yesterday. Forty-eight pages out of 176 have been read. A number of very important matters will require some time for their consideration. To-morrow the conference report on the Army appropriation bill will take several hours out of the time which might otherwise be devoted to the consideration of this bill.

It is necessary that this bill should go to the President before the 1st of July. It carries $109,000,000 for the conduct of various services of the Government. That money must be available by the 1st of July or else Congress must, by some extraordinary maneuver, make provision for the carrying on of the various services of the Government after that date.

This is the most important business before the House. It took the Committee on Appropriations more than three months in exhaustive and laborious work to prepare this bill. Some time must be given to the Senate, in addition to the time consumed while this bill is under consideration, for investigation of the bill. I hope that in order to expedite the business of the House and to make possible the necessary provision for carrying on the Government in the proper way after the 1st of July, this motion will be carried. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to dispense with business on the Wednesday Calendar to-day.

The question was taken, and, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will designate Mr. JAMES temporarily as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair will state that the reason why Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky is not here is that the Chair told him that the probabilities were one hundred to one that the House would not to-day dispense with the business on the Wednesday Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil bill, with Mr. JAMES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending.

The Clerk read the pending amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 50, line 13, by striking out "two hundred and fifty thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof "three hundred and twenty thousand."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is practically for the employees connected with the National Museum and the Smithsonian Institution. The estimate is for $350,000. The appropriation for the current year is $300,000. The recommendation in this bill is for $250,000. After as diligent an examination as I have been able to make, I offer the amendment striking out "two hundred and fifty thousand" and inserting "three hundred and twenty thousand." That is $20,000 more than for the current year and $30,000 less than the estimate.

This is a growing service. It cares for the old Smithsonian Building and its work, for what is known as the old National Museum, the one-story building just east of the Smithsonian, and its work; it cares for the great new building known as the National Museum proper, on the east side of the Mall and east of the old Smithsonian Institution Building.

The service grows. With that growth you must have the necessary number of watchmen, laborers, and cleaners. You must have the necessary number of skilled people. The work of the taxidermists can wait in large part. There is a great deal of it to do. We have there what is perhaps the most valuable collection of skins of African animals that can be found anywhere in the world. That collection is largely in duplicate. The skins are preserved, but in part could be mounted next year. There has been something of criticism at the slow manner in which this work has progressed. I am not influenced by that criticism in moving this amendment, yet it is a proper matter to call to the attention of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If the cut of $50,000 below the current law is agreed to by Congress, I should say that it will result in the discharge of from 30 to 75 employees who are absolutely necessary for the care of the collections and of the buildings. It will result also in the Sunday closing and I believe the closing at night of the museums. I do not know what the action of the Senate would be in the event that we sent to them this proposal for a reduced appropriation. If I am correct in my statement, I would be glad to see the House by its action give the appropriation necessary at least to maintain the status as it now exists. I think the appropriation of $300,000, the amount appropriated for the current year, would maintain the status. I think the $20,000 in addition, making it $320,000, would give a little leeway for a proper and very small increase in efficiency. My opinion is that the appropriation really ought to be the amount of the estimate, $350,000, but I only propose by my amendment $320,000, which would be an increase of $20,000 over the current year.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for this item last year was $300,000. As stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] this amount is practically all taken up in salaries for the employees of the National Museum. If this appropriation is cut from $300,000 down to $250,000, there will have to be a reduction in the force of employees. I am not one of those who think that is necessarily something to oppose in itself, but it seems to me that from the fact that there is not a line of testimony in the hearings and not a suggestion from any source why this appropriation should be cut, that there ought to be some good reason given for reducing this appropriation $50,000. If this appropriation goes through at the reduced amount of $250,000, it will mean that the National Museum must be closed on Sunday. It will mean that the work now being done there will have to stop, except what might be termed simply taking care of the building. The work of preparing specimens and caring for them will have to be curtailed. I do not believe our Democratic Congress wants to make a record of that kind. We are in favor of economy, we are in favor of cutting off useless expenditures, but for the life of me I do not believe that any of us can consistently urge a reduction of expenditures where that reduction cuts off amounts necessary for the maintenance of the work of this Government. It seems to me that in the case of that great National Museum down there, a place visited by tourists from all parts of the world, where we have so many specimens of all kinds, where we have expended large sums of money, we ought as a business proposition to maintain its present efficiency. Unless the chairman of this committee or some members of the committee can show us some very good reason for cutting down what we may term a standing appropriation, for the payment of salaries and for the necessary upkeep of this building and its contents, unless there is some change in the circumstances that calls for a reduction of the appropriation, I do not see why we should inaugurate such a reduction. I hope that the chairman of the committee will see fit to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is a good reason for the reduction of this item. I should not have supposed that the gentleman would have assumed that the committee would make a recommendation without some good reasons. Members who have served on the Appropriations Committee for more than a single session have information acquired in other years that it would be absolutely impossible to repeat in the hearings of the present year. They base their action not upon the statement of gentlemen who are in favor of the appropriation for a particular service, but upon their knowledge of conditions gained not only from the current year but gained by the committee in hearings on the present bill and acquired by them in a number of years' service on the committee—many conditions which, if gentlemen took the trouble to inquire into, would disclose an entirely different situation from that which apparently appears upon a reading of the hearings upon the current bill.

The appropriations for the National Museum were increased for the purpose of enabling special work to be done, caused by the moving into the new Museum; but having been in the Museum for several years, and having done a large amount of the extraordinary work that was planned to be necessary in order to get matters into shape, it was believed that it would now be possible to reduce the expenditures and put them upon what would more properly be the normal basis.

The gentleman speaks of closing the Museum on Sunday. Mr. Chairman, I am responsible for the opening of the Museum on Sunday. I took the initiative in that matter and insisted that this institution, of all others in the city, should be open to the public on Sunday, so that all persons living in the District, as well as visitors, would have an opportunity to avail themselves of the exhibits there. Having done that, I am not taking any action that would necessitate the closing of this institution on that day. From my investigation of the matter and my familiarity with the work of the Museum, the fact that this is a lump-sum appropriation, and is expended by the Smithsonian Institution without that same exercise of control by Congress that other appropriations are subjected to, from the knowledge I have had from investigating these appropriations during the past seven years, I am convinced that the sum of $250,000 is adequate for the service during the next year. If I had not been convinced of that I should not have voted to make such an appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman say as to the statement of the head of the Smithsonian Institution, that with this decreased appropriation for the current year it will be impossible to comply with the law and keep the Museum open on Sunday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman in charge of the Smithsonian Institution for 1910 and 1911 insisted that $400,000 was necessary to properly conduct the affairs of the Museum, but he never had but $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. If the law provides for the keeping open of the museum on Sunday——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it does not. They open it on Sunday, because I insisted that it should be open on Sunday.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, but that is equivalent to law. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is more effective than some laws which have been treated by contempt by certain gentlemen at the head of bureaus.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman desires it to be kept open on Sunday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do; and I expect it will be.

Mr. CANNON. But the director says not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a question of the speed with which the various trophies shall be prepared. He can engage any number of men desirable within the limits of the appropriation. My investigation and information convinced me that $250,000 is sufficient for the next year.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. COOPER. What proportion of the $250,000 would be used, in the words of the bill, for the "salaries or compensation of all necessary employees"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is entirely within the control of the administration of the Museum; this sum is given in bulk. The controlling body determines how much shall be used for salaries and how much will be used for other purposes.

Mr. COOPER. I asked the question of the gentleman from New York because I was anxious to know how much there would be left after paying the salaries of employees and other necessary expenses to take care of that magnificent collection of skins and birds brought from Africa.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That magnificent collection of skins that was brought from Africa is not segregated from the more magnificent and more valuable collection that was there before these arrived here, although I do not wish to reflect on the value or character of this collection. They are not segregated. They are made a part of the general collection of the Museum.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from New York, I am indebted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for a reference to the present salary roll, which reference is found on page 526 of the hearings on the sundry civil appropriation bill. On that page Mr. Rathbun says that the salary roll is now approximately $266,000. And yet with the salary roll to-day amounting to $266,000 the gentleman from New York proposes by the pending bill to appropriate only $250,000—for continuing the preservation, exhibition, and increase of the collections from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government, and from other sources, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees and all other necessary expenses, and out of that sum of $250,000, $5,500 may be used for necessary drawings and illustrations for publications.

I am wondering about how much there will be left of the $250,000 to take care of those collections and to increase them in view of the fact that the salary roll alone now is $16,000 more than is proposed to be appropriated by this bill for salaries and all these other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, of course, seems to labor under the delusion that the money is expended to take care of these collections in other ways than by the payment of salaries. The salaried people are those who take care of these collections.

Mr. COOPER. I have been told by experts, Mr. Chairman, one a gentleman employed in the Institution over there, that the collection of birds, skins, and animals brought from Africa would make by far the finest collection of its kind in the world if properly preserved. I thought, in listening to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that he made an exceedingly forceful statement, and that there ought to be enough money appropriated so that the salaries of the necessary employees could be paid and something be left to preserve this magnificent collection for the people, for it will be for their benefit. As I have said, the salary list alone to-day is $266,000, which is $16,000 more than is proposed to be appropriated for all of these purposes by the pending measure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman is not as well informed as he might be. There is another item of $50,000, which includes compensation and salaries of employees required in this work, and there is an appropriation of $50,000 for the expense of heating and lighting the building. There are appropriations for repairs and for the purchase of books and for other items, so that instead of being the only sum available for the maintenance of this Institution there are several others.

The gentleman speaks of necessary employees. This service, as well as every other service of the Government, will expend every dollar given it for salaries. In 1910 they asked $400,000. The appropriation made was $250,000. For 1911 they asked $400,000, and in order to give the additional force required during that year and during the current year for the purpose of making possible the preservation of the bulk of the large increase of trophies brought in $50,000 additional was given. I believe that with the $250,000 in this item and the other appropriations made for the other services, ample funds are given for the Institution. If I did not, I should not oppose the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. He asked not that the largest sum ever given to the Institution be given in this item, but he asked that $20,000 in addition to the largest appropriation heretofore made be given. I do not know any justification for any such action, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I was a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution I had the pleasure of seeing a portion of the marvelous and magnificent contribution made by Col. Roosevelt to the Smithsonian Institution. This item in the appropriation bill would carry the necessary expense of placing that collection or such portions of it as may be desirable on exhibition. I believe the people of the country would like to see those skins mounted, those birds mounted, those insects and rodents placed where they may be seen. They are interesting for two reasons. First, on account of their inherent interest, and, second, because of the manner in which they come to the Government. The people are interested in Col. Roosevelt and in what he has given to the Government. [Applause.] I shall be very sorry to see the Democratic side of the House show its antipathy and animosity for Col. Roosevelt, personally and politically, by attempting to deprive the people of the United States of the opportunity of seeing this magnificent collection placed upon exhibition. No individual who has an opportunity of seeing these skins will deny that the people ought to have an opportunity. After all, remember, there is a day coming. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it had not been my intention to say a word on this amendment, but the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] are so uncalled for, and so far from the facts which influenced any member of the committee in making up these estimates, that I feel in justice to ourselves that I should say what I am now going to say. Of course this amendment would have nothing to do, practically speaking, with the mounting of any of the Roosevelt collection. The particular thing that the additional amount was asked for was in regard to certain exhibits relative to arts and industries and had no relationship to the collection of Mr. Roosevelt.

The real question that confronts this committee is simply one of how rapidly you want to proceed in connection with the National Museum. Manifestly much more money than that asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] can be expended, and expended in the producing of interesting exhibits which the people of America would enjoy seeing, but sometimes the very excellence of a museum is the result of the slowness with which it proceeds with the mounting of exhibits for its various collections. Much money constantly invites the mounting of inferior exhibits, whereas if they are required to exert a proper economy they will only take the best, and while you are slower in finishing such work you get a higher average of work as a result of the slowness with which it is done. Now, the committee in its judgment thought that the amount we recommend here was sufficient, all things being considered. There has been a very rapid enlargement of the fund for this purpose, due somewhat to the moving into a larger building and the incidental cost that followed, and also due to the added pressure by virtue of going into a new building which affords a ready excuse for increased appropriations.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Is not the fallacy of the gentleman's argument about going slowly shown in this way? It is well for the curator of a museum to go slowly in collecting exhibits, but where a curator of a museum already has on hand skins and articles which may deteriorate and need to be mounted in order to become exhibits, then is not it wise to hasten in their mounting and preservation?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; except the fact does not exist to-day. There are no skins I know of there that are going to deteriorate because of the want of appropriating $50,000 now and there is no testimony to that effect before the committee.

Mr. COOPER. I have been told, I do not know how good my information is, that these can not be kept back forever without deteriorating very considerably.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think anything could be kept back forever from mounting or kept mounted forever without deteriorating, but there is no intention of mounting a great many of the skins there. For instance, there are many lion skins, some of which have been mounted. There are lion skins obtained as a result of the Roosevelt expedition, some of them have been mounted and some have not, and since then there has been a very handsome collection containing a very handsome number of skins presented as the result of another expedition into Africa, some of which would have been mounted in place of some that were mounted if they had been on hand at the time—all of which illustrates just the proposition I spoke of a while ago. The whole question here for the House, and it is a question about which no definite rule can be laid down, is to determine what sum will probably keep up the Museum and continue its work at a reasonable rate, not unduly cramping it, neither, on the other hand, being extravagant with expenditures for the mounting and exhibiting of things of a secondary quality. That is the proposition before this House, and there was in no sense involved in the committee's action the slightest thought of preventing the exhibition of Col. Roosevelt's collection. Speaking for myself, and I believe also voicing the judgment of the other Democratic Members, I appreciate the great value of the specimens that came as a result of that expedition. There is no desire to belittle in any way that expedition or to prevent a proper use of the fruits of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to state what occurred. A newspaper article was printed criticizing Congress for not appropriating sufficient money to mount the specimens sent by Mr. Roosevelt. Mr. Rathbun said:

> That is to say, the African material—
> That is Col. Roosevelt's material—> is being used wherever needed. Where the material is the best in the lines represented we are using it. We are not trying, Mr. Chairman, to represent any individual or any concern, but we are trying to represent subjects, and we use the best of the material we have from whatever source.
> Mr. WALCOTT. Many things appear in the newspapers that do not originate with me. A newspaper man did come to me in regard to this matter. I do not know who he was. He asked me if we had money enough to mount the entire Roosevelt collection. I told him that we had no intention of mounting the entire collection, but that if in that collection there was anything better than what we had from any other source, when we had a sufficient amount of money for the purpose, we would mount them.

Then Mr. Walcott called attention to the fact that a number of lion skins which had been taken in an African expedition had been mounted. Later Mr. Paul Rainey made a trip through southern Abyssinia. Mr. Rainey collected and sent in 32 lion skins. If they had arrived before this particular group had been mounted, some of those skins would have been substituted for some of Mr. Roosevelt's.

Mr. Walcott, in a statement in the New York Times, which he furnished for the RECORD under date of March 13, 1911, said:

> It is not intended to mount all the specimens in the collection and place them in the exhibition halls of the Museum. To do so would be a serious detriment to the collection and no advantage to the public. The collection contains about 3,000 skins of mammals, but not more than 50 different kinds could be detected among them by an untrained observer. The general public would only be fatigued and confused by the inspection of the entire series.

Instead of mounting all the skins obtained by the Museum, they are prepared and placed away so that they can be utilized by students under special privileges when they so desire, but for exhibition purposes a very small percentage of all the trophies are mounted.

Mr. WARBURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. WARBURTON. Is there any way, if we have a superabundance of skins of this kind, that other museums may get them? Now, if the Government has a superabundance there and wants to lay them aside, there ought to be some way for some other museums to get them and mount them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am informed that there is a law which permits the distribution of duplicates of skins to other museums. The gentleman can ascertain that by inquiring of those in charge of the Smithsonian Institution. I wish to correct any impression that may have been made in the minds of the Members of the House that there was any intention of making this recommendation to affect in any way whatever the collection of Col. Roosevelt, or that there was ever any intention on the part of those in control of the museum to mount the entire collection. To do so would be to ruin the museum, while the proper preservation of the skins enables them to be utilized by students in the best manner possible. Let me say to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] that the act of August 10, 1846, provides:

Regents of said institution shall afterwards, as new specimens in natural history, geology, or minerology may be obtained for the museum of the institution by exchanges of duplicate specimens belonging to the institution (which they are hereby authorized to make), or by donation which they may receive, or otherwise, cause such new specimens to be also appropriately classed and arranged.

Mr. WARBURTON. I understand from that——

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have a right to exchange.

Mr. WARBURTON. What I was asking was, could some other museum people have those which the Smithsonian did not desire and which they were not using?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand there is another statute—which I have not at hand—that will permit them to distribute; and I suggest that the gentleman apply to Dr. Walcott and obtain the information which I do not have. I ask for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, on a pro forma motion, I wish to take one minute. This appropriation of $320,000, if given, will fairly keep up the taxidermist work as it is now progressing. If the amendment does not prevail and the bill stands at $250,000, the work of the taxidermists will cease, practically, entirely, because it takes $266,000 to pay the salary roll alone. And anybody can see that you have got to discharge some of the charwomen, some of the watchmen, or some of the laborers. You have got to keep open house or close it down, and this impairs keeping open house.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move, in the line indicated, to strike out "250,000" and insert "300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is to strike out "250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "300,000."

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say only a word. We have just voted down an amendment to increase the appropriation over the current year by $20,000. If this amendment is agreed to, it gives $300,000, a like amount now being used in the service and carried for the current year in the appropriation. This continues the present status.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 46.

Mr. CANNON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. CANNON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter all plans and specifications for construction of buildings and bridges in the National Zoological Park shall be prepared by the municipal architect of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he thinks the municipal architect is the proper person to prepare plans for bridges?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He does it for the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Does he prepare plans for bridges for the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I so understand. This situation is disclosed in connection with the National Zoological Park: Out of the funds appropriated for the maintenance of the park at various times an architect has been employed, and he has drawn plans for certain bridges and buildings for which there is no authority of law, and they were put away in the hope that at some time Congress would appropriate for them. The money appropriated for the maintenance of the park has been expended for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has covered that proposition in the item already passed, providing that the $100,000 shall not be used for architect's fees and compensation. I have made no question about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The most attractive bridge in the park was built on plans prepared by the District officials. That is the bowlder bridge, with which the gentleman is familiar. It was believed by the committee that this municipal architect could very easily prepare whatever plans were necessary for these buildings. It was part of the movement to prevent, if possible, the depletion of the funds.

Mr. MANN. Usually the architect who prepares plans and specifications necessarily supervises the construction. It may be proper. I do not say that it is not. But I doubt very much the advisability of the municipal architect endeavoring to control the construction of simple bridges in the park. I am glad to see that the committee has included——

Mr. FITZGERALD. My own opinion is that if the work is done by contract, the character of the work will not impose any undue burden on the inspectors. This situation was disclosed, for which there seemed to be no excuse. Plans for bridges and buildings not authorized and needed were obtained. It was absolutely impossible to get Congress to appropriate the sums that would be required to construct them. The architect was paid out of these funds, and the plans are now lying there in a pigeon hole. Some day appropriations may be made to build these different things.

Mr. MANN. I believe there is some friction in the District in reference to the construction of schoolhouses in connection with the work of the municipal architect. It may be necessary or unnecessary friction. I do not know. But I do not think there is any occasion to start friction in the park with reference to the building of bridges. I hope that will not result, at least.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is a bridge needed out there. It is necessary to construct it, and we are appropriating the money for it in this bill. If we do not have some such provision as this, architect's fees could be paid out of the appropriation made for the construction of the bridge.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that. How much the architect's fees would be, I do not know. I apprehend that it would be cheaper for the Government to have some architect or somebody connected with the park prepare plans and supervise the construction of that bridge that is proposed than it would be to have the municipal architect mix in it at all. However, I shall not put my judgment against the judgment of the committee, if the committee have given consideration to that particular point.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not add any to the expense, anyway.

Mr. MANN. That does not give them the control over the matter of construction. I will withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a bowlder bridge across Rock Creek to replace the present log bridge on the line of the roadway from Adams Mill Road entrance and Cathedral Avenue, $20,000; one half of which sum shall be paid from revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 51, in line 18, before the word "bowlder," insert the words "rough stone faced or."

Mr. MANN. Why not have a bowlder bridge there?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is some question whether they can get the bowlders or whether they can not get the same effect to the eye by a bridge authorized under this language.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SIMS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 23799. An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge, or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolutions:

House concurrent resolution 54.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13041) entitled "An act to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia," to insert, on page 1, line 12, before the word "within," the word "or."

House concurrent resolution 47.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the message of the President of the United States of date February 12, 1912, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a report on the Mexican cotton-boll weevil, together with said report (S. Doc. No. 305), of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, to be distributed through the Senate document room, and 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the House document room.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, numbered 3 and 4, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. SIMMONS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 341):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from June 13, 1912, to July 5, 1912, both inclusive.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions (S. Res. 339):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

In compliance with the foregoing the Vice President appointed as said committee Mr. FOSTER, Mr. THORNTON, Mr. CRAWFORD, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. PERCY, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. PAYNTER.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 343):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected JACOB H. GALLINGER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President from July 6, 1912, to July 31, 1912, both inclusive.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6745. An act to provide for the erection of a Federal building in Las Cruces, N. Mex.; and

S. 6636. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Robert H. Peck a captain in the Army.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

To further enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce compliance with section 20 of the act to regulate commerce as amended by the act approved June 29, 1906, including the employment of necessary special agents or examiners, $300,000.

Mr. MANN. What is the estimate of expenditure for this year under this item, the appropriation being $350,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. The appropriation for the current fiscal year is $350,000 and the estimate is $350,000.

Mr. MANN. What I desire to know is whether there will be a surplus or not.

Mr. SHERLEY. There will be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was an unexpended balance in 1911 of $55,022.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the machinery was not all working at that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. During the first six months of this fiscal year they expended $145,531.11, and they had a balance of $204,406.89. At this rate of expenditure they will expend about the same as last year.

Mr. MANN. In the gentleman's judgment is there no likelihood of occasion for increasing the amount of the expenditure next year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My impression is that there will not be any increase. The gentleman remembers the history of this——

Mr. MANN. I remember the history of it very well.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It seems probable that at the rate of expenditure this year there will be a surplus of over $50,000 at the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. The committee concluded that they had reached the maximum needed expenditure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the impression.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding and to enforce compliance with acts to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, including the employment of inspectors, $125,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

On page 53, in line 2, strike out $125,000 and insert $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the expenditures in 1911 were $108,000. The Interstate Commerce Commission has sent word to us that this additional money will be required. The need for it was not made plain at the time of the hearings, but the commission desired to extend the investigation of railroad accidents, and in a communication submitted this morning it was made very apparent that if they were to do the work contemplated to the extent that they desire, they will require practically the $150,000. Desiring to give the sum required to enable these various services to be conducted properly, I have offered this amendment on my own responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question being taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of all authorized expenditures under the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," including such stenographic and clerical help to the chief inspector and his two assistants as the Interstate Commerce Commission may deem necessary and allowances in lieu of subsistence while away from official headquarters to persons whose traveling expenses are authorized by said act to be paid at not to exceed $4 per day, $200,000.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. I think it is quite probable that this law has not been in operation long enough to enable anybody to tell just how much ought to be appropriated. My recollection is that the gentlemen who were seeking that legislation informed me officially that their estimate of the expense was that it would not exceed $150,000. I put into the bill which went through the House a limitation of $200,000 on the appropriation. If they have already reached the $200,000, it is apparent that that was a very wise limitation. I desire to know if the gentleman from New York has a statement of the amount expended for the first six months of this year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not that here. It is possible that within the near future a larger appropriation will be required for this item.

Mr. MANN. I think this is the limit that can be made. The committee can not have sufficient data before it to determine definitely how much ought to be appropriated, because the law provides for certain things.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is true.

Mr. PAGE. That is entirely true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no desire in any way to embarrass the efficiency of this service.

Mr. MANN. I understand that. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEFLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operating and care and preservation of Rock Island bridges and viaduct; and for maintenance and repair of the arsenal street connecting the bridges, $18,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Insert a new paragraph after line 22, page 53, as follows:
"For increasing the capacity of the plant at Rock Island Arsenal for the production of field artillery matériel, $250,000."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, the Chief of Ordnance, Gen. Crozier, has submitted a supplemental estimate. The subject of the manufacture of Government stores has been discussed in this House a great deal in connection with the manufacture of powder and other items. A splendid showing has been made by the Ordnance Department in the way of prices upon the manufacture of nearly every item that is manufactured in Government manufactories. But I do not believe there has ever been a showing that could compare with that made by Gen. Crozier, of the Ordnance Department, upon the manufacture of field artillery. Those of you who have the hearings before this committee will find, on pages 636, 637, 638, and 639, a statement of Gen. Crozier as to the prices he is compelled to pay for field artillery. The fact of the matter is the Government has for years and years been manufacturing most of its small arms, until to-day they have practically a complete supply, both of the reserve supply and what is actually needed.

But in field artillery there has been a very inadequate amount manufactured by the Government. Practically all of our field artillery has been purchased from private manufactories. To show you what a holdup has been going on, I want to read a statement of Gen. Crozier in the hearings, beginning on the bottom of page 637:

The CHAIRMAN. Do your figures show the comparative cost of manufacture and purchase?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Put them in the record, please.

Gen. CROZIER. I will mention a few of them for the record. I think I can mention them more summarily, so they can be better comprehended in the record, than if I put in all of these details. I will take the limbers for the 3-inch rifles. The average of three contracts gave a price of $1,518 apiece for those limbers.

Mr. CANNON. What is a limber?

Gen. CROZIER. A limber is the forward portion of the wagon which transports the gun, the forward portion of the gun carriage; and the average of five orders for manufacture at the Rock Island Arsenal was $684 apiece. The arsenal cost was less than half the purchase price.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was there any bidding for that contract?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir; we usually get about three bids, and that is the average of three contracts. One contract was for 40, one was for 24, and one was a large contract for 192.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then buying at home sometimes results in being held up, judging by the price you have to pay for those limbers, compared with your cost of manufacturing them.

Gen. CROZIER. Now, for the 3-inch caisson, the average of five contracts shows a price of $1,708, and the average of six manufacturing orders given to the Rock Island Arsenal is $1,081. The 3-inch gun carriage proper—that is, the vehicle on which the gun rests and from which it is fired—gives as the average price three contracts, $3,268, and the average cost under five manufacturing orders at the arsenal was $2,341.

Now, some Member may inquire if Gen. Crozier included the overhead charges in his figures. He did.

Mr. CANNON. Does that include overhead charges?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Depreciation, and all that kind of thing?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir. Now, I have other figures, but those are just as illustrative as any of the rest of them. I think that in the manufacture of the vehicles for the amount of field artillery which I think we ought to provide for the Army I would save, by the installation of this $250,000 plant, at least $1,000,000.

That is the testimony, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, of Gen. Crozier, and I want to say for Gen. Crozier that of all the men connected with the War Department with whom I have come in contact he is one of the most reliable and competent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEPPER. I think those of you who know Gen. Crozier have confidence in the fact that when he makes a statement of that kind he means what he says, and he tells this committee and this Congress that upon the expenditure of $250,000 he can save $1,000,000 to this Government.

Now, I would be the last one to urge Congress to increase the appropriation at this time unnecessarily, but I am one of those who believe that all these matters ought to be settled on a business basis. I do not care whether the appropriations reach the high-water mark or the low-water mark, we ought to go about these appropriations in a businesslike way and from a business standpoint. If an officer of the Government can demonstrate that the Government is being held up by private manufacturers and that he can manufacture field artillery for less than he has to pay the private manufacturers and can save the Government a million dollars in the manufacture of field artillery, what excuse, tell me, is there for this Congress refusing to give him that appropriation? It seems to me that any business corporation that had that proposition put up to it would accept it at once. Go to any manufacturing concern and say that you will install a plant for $250,000 and that you will prove that you can save $1,000,000, and what would that concern do? It would authorize the expenditure of $250,000 as a plain business proposition. So I say at this time it ought to be the part of wisdom and business judgment to adopt this amendment.

I appreciate fully the position of the Committee on Appropriations. I sympathize with their desire to hold down appropriations to the least possible amount, and I want to aid them in every legitimate and proper way; but it strikes me that upon this question, a question that is a pure business proposition, that committee ought to yield. It is not simply to pay salaries to do something that will not amount to anything. It is not to encourage some new venture that is doubtful, but it comes straight from a business man in the War Department, who says that he is being held up by private manufacturers to the tune of 100 per cent. He says he has got to pay this price, and that he wants an opportunity to manufacture by the Government and in that way save money, and that for every dollar he puts in he will return four. That is the proposition he puts up to you, and what is going to be your answer? If you turn down this proposition, it simply means that instead of saving $250,000 on an appropriation you have added $1,000,000 to the cost of running the Government, because this million dollars is going to be expended. Other committees have appropriated money for the purchase of this field artillery. The money is going to be expended, and you have the opportunity at this time, as the Committee on Appropriations and as the Committee of the Whole House considering the appropriation bill, to say that it is possible to cut down $1,000,000 in the cost of running the Government.

There is a peculiar advantage in making this appropriation for Rock Island. The Rock Island Arsenal, as is well known, is a large Government manufacturing plant. They have the buildings there. Gen. Crozier says in the hearings that they will not have to erect a single building. By a rearrangement of the manufacturing operations there they can install the necessary machinery without expending a single dollar for the erection of buildings, without making any unnecessary expense of any kind. They have magnificent grounds and adequate buildings are already erected. You have an opportunity to install the machinery to enable the Government to manufacture these articles at a much reduced cost. It seems to me that there is no argument from the standpoint of holding down appropriations or from political expediency or anything else that should justify us, in the face of Gen. Crozier's statement upon this proposition in not taking advantage of what he says and saving $1,000,000 for the Government. It is a business proposition, pure and simple, and I hope that the committee will vote favorably upon the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, under date of February 25, Gen. Crozier addressed a communication to the Secretary of War, requesting that an estimate be transmitted to Congress providing $250,000 to enable him to equip the Rock Island Arsenal for the purpose of manufacturing field artillery. He stated the necessity for this estimate had arisen subsequent to the transmission of the regular estimates; that in the regular estimates transmitted to Congress $700,000 had been requested for the manufacture of small arms; that the Army appropriation bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation of $600,000 for that purpose, and if that were all the money that was to be allowed, in the interest of economy it would be necessary for him to concentrate the manufacture of small arms at the Springfield Arsenal, and that would result in the discharge of 300 men from the Rock Island Arsenal. To prevent the discharge of these men, to utilize the space that would be made available by the stopping of the manufacture of small arms at the Rock Island Arsenal, and to keep his plant going, he suggested that $250,000 be appropriated to enable him to equip and utilize the shops that otherwise would be vacated for the manufacture of field artillery. The committee questioned Gen. Crozier at some length, and he went into the possibilities of the saving to be effected. In the meantime, however, the Army appropriation bill was reported to the Senate with the $600,000 for the manufacture of small arms increased to $700,000, the amount of the original estimate submitted by Gen. Crozier, and that amendment of the Senate has been agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House. So that there will be no diminution in the manufacture of small arms. All of the men working at the Rock Island Arsenal will be continued. The space that was to be available for the installation of this machinery will not be available, and the condition that justified the submission of the supplementary estimate no longer exists. As soon as those facts were disclosed to the committee they determined not to recommend the purchase of equipment for this arsenal. Whoever is acquainted with Gen. Crozier knows he is one of the most competent and efficient men in the service, that he has done very splendid work in keeping down the cost of munitions of war, and the committee was just as fully impressed as the gentleman from Iowa with his testimony, and would have perhaps acted then upon this estimate had the $100,000 requested for manufacture of small arms been withheld in the Army appropriation bill. But it has been granted, and there will be no reduction in the force and facilities and supplies to be utilized during the next year, and the committee did not believe it would be justified in providing for the equipment under those circumstances.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, it would seem to me the committee should have very little hesitation in approving the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. With all the men who are now employed at the Rock Island Arsenal taken care of under the additional $100,000 of appropriation which was granted in the Army bill, even then putting in the additional machinery that will be needed to increase the capacity of the field artillery equipment will not require the authorization and erection of new buildings. Taking up the reading of the hearing where Gen. Crozier testified before the committee, and where the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] left off reading, Gen. Crozier said if he were given this $250,000 he could save the Government more than a million dollars. Then the chairman asked—

The CHAIRMAN. In how many years?

Gen. CROZIER. That would depend a little bit on how rapidly Congress would make the appropriations. The total cost of the class of material which we are dealing with now, and which we still need, would be about $12,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. You would save 10 per cent, then?

Gen. CROZIER. I would save 25 per cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then you would save more than $1,000,000 on $12,000,000 of work?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes. But even if you gave me this $250,000, I would still not be able to do all of this work at the Rock Island Arsenal, but only about two-thirds of it. I can now do about one-third of the work of manufacturing at the rate at which you are this year appropriating, and if you give me this $250,000 I can do two-thirds of that work; but I would still have to procure one-third of it from the outside.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much would it take to do three-thirds?

Gen. CROZIER. Well, I do not know whether I could do another one-third by simply doubling the appropriation; I do not think I could, because I think I would run short of buildings. I can use this $250,000 without putting up any additional buildings.

Mr. SHERLEY. How far could you go without putting up additional buildings of increased capacity? In other words, the figures you give show such a plain robbery on the part of private manufacturers as to warrant us in going to some length to prevent it in the future. The difference between $1,518 and $684 for the making of limbers can not be the difference in economy, but it is just a holdup by private manufacturers.

Now, gentlemen, that is the situation. The figures of Gen. Crozier show that there is $12,000,000 of this work to be done, and assuming that he could only, with this $250,000, do two-thirds of it, the $8,000,000 of field artillery carriages that could be made at Rock Island Arsenal would save $2,000,000. Surely, there is no way in the world for the benefit of the country that $250,000 could be better invested. It seems to me it is a very plain proposition. Further on Gen. Crozier was asked how long it would take him to install the additional machinery, and he stated about seven or eight months. It is clear to me we should begin the large saving that would be involved without waiting until another Congress convenes. I am heartily in favor of this appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in answer to the remarks made by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, it is perfectly true that there was a proposed reduction in the Army appropriation bill in the item for the manufacture of small arms. It is also true, as stated by the gentleman from New York, this reduction was restored in conference, but, as I stated before, the manufacture of small arms has practically reached the limit, and I want to call attention to what Gen. Crozier says upon that very proposition. The chairman of the committee asked him this question:

You are acting on the assumption that the reduction made by the House will be carried in the bill when it becomes a law.

Gen. CROZIER. As I tried to indicate a few moments ago, if that should not be done this year it would have to be done soon, anyway. We are getting muskets enough, and there is no necessity for piling up that reserve so fast when it is as good as it is now.

In other words, the fact of the matter is that regardless of the $100,000 appropriation or reduction of the appropriation which was restored, regardless of that, Gen. Crozier says this reduction is going to come. He has stated it in another hearing, that next year he expects to recommend there shall be a radical reduction in the appropriations for small arms. So that the reduction of force at Rock Island this year has nothing whatever to do with it. It is simply a business proposition whether this Congress and the Government is going to stand idly by and let its officials be held up to the tune of a million dollars or more, and as stated by the gentleman from Illinois that the million dollars is inside the mark, when he can save 25 per cent of the expenditure of $12,000,000 if he had the machinery and facilities to manufacture these guns. Now, I tell you this is an important matter. You as business men ought to realize that we should appropriate this money as a business proposition regardless of whether men are excluded or added to the pay roll. That has not so very much to do with it. I do not believe I would be here arguing this question if it were simply a question of whether a certain number of men would be thrown out of employment, if the Government was not going to save money by it and it would not be absolutely economical.

I would not say to you that you ought to expend this money simply to give some man a job. That is not the proposition. You, as representatives of the people, ought to realize that it is your duty to spend money wisely. Sometimes you save money by expending money, and this is one of those cases. This is a time when you ought to authorize expenditures regardless of the expenditures for small arms.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows that is to extend over a series of years, and a very insignificant fraction could be saved next year.

Mr. PEPPER. If, of course, the argument is that you want to postpone it and be held up just a little while longer, and ultimately you are going to remedy it, that is one argument. It means that, whatever you purchase next year, you are going to spend twice as much money as you ought to for it. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe we ought to stand for it a bit longer than we have to. I think this Congress ought to be big enough and broad enough as business men to say, regardless of the appropriation carried this year, "We will do this because it is right." Gen. Crozier says, "Gentlemen, I can save $1,000,000. You are paying too much for this field artillery; you are getting robbed." The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], a member of the committee, suggests in his question that you are getting robbed in the purchase of this field artillery, and Gen. Crozier concedes it; but what can he do? He has asked you for $250,000 to relieve him and the Government from a plain case of highway robbery.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can tell you one way you can keep from being robbed. Just take off the provision for buying at home. Let it be known that foreign manufacturers can bid, and you will find that your home manufacturers will come down from their robbing prices.

Mr. PEPPER. That is, of course, another proposition. We have a chance here to accomplish real results and save real dollars to the General Government.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. In answer to the interrogatory propounded by the gentleman from Kentucky, the gentleman from Iowa said that was one solution of this problem. I would ask him if he is in favor of that solution as far as the Rock Island Arsenal is concerned? Is he in favor of getting those things manufactured abroad, even if a little cheaper?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to my friend from Iowa that I am not here as a special advocate of the Rock Island Arsenal. I want to do justice to both the men and the management of that arsenal, and yet if you would come to me with a proposition and say, "The Government can not manufacture these goods as cheaply as they can be purchased," you would not see me trying to get an appropriation simply in order to give them work. I believe, when we have a business proposition, we ought to look at it in a business way. If you can demonstrate the fact that you can save money by means of an expenditure, appropriate the money. If it appears to be an unjust, or unwise expenditure, cut out the appropriation and let the chips fall where they will. I do not believe in this so-called economy that does not look any further than the end of your nose. I think we ought to look every appropriation squarely in the face and see that the money is to be properly expended or not. The people are not so alarmed about expenditures. It is the unnecessary expenditures they are complaining about. I want to say to you that a statement made by a distinguished Senator before the last campaign, that this Government could be run for $300,000,000 less if run on a business basis, was what appealed to the people. It was the belief that we were spending money uselessly and recklessly that made the people sit up and take notice. They are not going to complain if you can show the money is rightfully and wisely spent in the interests of the Government. And so I say in reference to this expenditure, it is a wise one. It means that you are going to save money instead of lose money, and I hope everybody, regardless of political views, will join me in supporting this amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the practice of economy does not always mean failure to appropriate money. Sometimes it is a good deal more economical to appropriate what seems to be a large sum than to fail to appropriate it. I understand that by the addition of this $250,000 the Government can save at least $2,000,000.

Well, that seems to be a good investment, and would be so considered by any business man in the United States. I do not suppose there is a manufacturer anywhere in the United States that would refuse to invest $250,000 for the enlargement of his facilities if he could be shown that by the investment of that money he could save or make a million dollars or two million dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He would not provide $250,000 for additional facilities if the condition which was going to give space for these facilities had passed away by a provision removing the work that he thought he was not going to have?

Mr. MADDEN. The Government of the United States, I may say in reply to the distinguished gentleman from New York, is always using the material which it seeks to have an opportunity to make. It is constantly buying and using it. It wants more and more of it, and all that is being asked now is that the Government may be placed in a position to make it itself instead of buying it from somebody else. The statement is made clearly by Gen. Crozier that the Government can make this article for less than half what it costs to buy it. Now, why not give the Government the opportunity to make it?

I understand they do not require any additional buildings. I will ask my colleague from Illinois [Mr. McKINNEY] if that is not so.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is very clearly stated in the hearings, by Gen. Crozier, that no additional buildings will be needed to utilize the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. In a minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKINNEY] was probably not here when I made the statement I made. This $250,000 was requested in a supplemental estimate, because the Army appropriation bill as it passed the House carried $600,000 instead of $700,000 for the manufacture of small arms. If that bill should become a law in that way it would be economy to concentrate the manufacture of small arms at Springfield Arsenal, and it would make room at the Rock Island Arsenal for the equipment to be used in this work. But the Army appropriation bill was increased $100,000 in the Senate from the original estimate, and hence the concentration will not take place. The space will not be available, and there is no space where this additional equipment can be put.

Mr. McKINNEY. Let me say in reply to that, I think the gentleman from New York is entirely mistaken in that statement. It is not proposed under this supplemental estimate to use the space that is now devoted to the manufacture of small arms. That would go to a department already existing and to buildings that are being used now for the manufacture of gun carriages for field artillery. A rearrangement of the shops is suggested, moving the harness shop across the street to another building, which would give them ample space. A part of a building already there is now used only for storage. That space could be availed of without the erection of any other buildings to receive the machinery necessary for this additional output.

Mr. MADDEN. So that if that be the case, it would not make any difference whether the manufacture of small arms were transferred to Springfield or not, so far as having ample space at Rock Island is concerned?

Mr. McKINNEY. No, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. The fact is that at Rock Island, according to the statement of my colleague, they have buildings that are not now used for any other purpose than storage, and the stores now contained therein can be transferred to other places, and the space required for the manufacture of gun carriages can be used for this purpose.

Now, if that be true, why not give the Government the privilege of investing this $250,000 for additional machinery, by means of which it can produce the economies that have been talked about in this hearing?

It is an extravagance and not an economy to refuse to appropriate this money. If by making a greater appropriation we can produce economies which can not be produced by smaller appropriations, then the addition of $250,000 to the appropriation is justified, and the failure to appropriate $250,000 is unjustifiable if that appropriation will result in the saving to the Government of $1,000,000, and such a false economy ought not to be entertained for a moment by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word; not to detain the committee, except to say that with the almost unlimited cheap water power at the Rock Island Arsenal, it seems to me this is the most economical place in the United States for an arsenal. There is an arsenal there now. Accepting as correct the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the increase in the Army appropriation bill for field artillery has been agreed to, that would insure the employment of all the people in the Springfield (Mass.) Arsenal and also in the Rock Island Arsenal for the coming year.

I am heartily in favor of making the improvements that have been indicated at the Rock Island Arsenal, and while gentlemen who have arsenals in their districts in other portions of the country will not agree with me, I believe the Rock Island Arsenal is the most suitable place for the manufacture of arms, small arms, field artillery, and the whole shooting match.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. CANNON. I will except Philadelphia. I shall vote for this amendment. While I live on the eastern side of the State, I am familiar with the country around Rock Island and Moline and Davenport. With the Mississippi River running between Rock Island and Moline and Davenport, there is a great bridge that crosses, which is utilized not only for railway traffic but for other traffic as well, and I want to congratulate Rock Island on the fact that it is represented by my honored colleague here, Mr. McKINNEY, and that just across the river is the great State of Iowa, so ably represented by the gentleman from the Davenport district, Mr. PEPPER, and I congratulate them on their teamwork, and I am ready to shout and vote for this amendment. I feel quite sure that the eloquent appeal of the gentleman from Davenport, Mr. PEPPER, and the eloquent appeal of my colleague, Mr. McKINNEY, are so persuasive on the merits of this proposition that we can probably get the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] not to make strenuous opposition, but perhaps to vote for this amendment, the great merit of which I commend to the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania" is intensely interested in the peroration of the gentleman from Illinois paying tribute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] and our distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. McKINNEY]. I should like to know from the gentleman from Illinois who is on the Appropriations Committee, Mr. CANNON, whether this amendment applies at all to the manufacture of small-arms ammunition?

Mr. CANNON. It applies to field artillery and gun carriages and limbers. What would a gun amount to unless there was something to put it on?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Having an arsenal in the Pennsylvania district, where small-arms ammunition is made, which arsenal did not this year receive as large an appropriation as it should for the purpose of maintaining the personnel, I should like to know if "the gentleman from Pennsylvania" supports this amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] and supported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKINNEY] whether the Frankford Arsenal may expect the support of the gentlemen from Illinois and Iowa if a similar amendment is offered in its behalf?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, the gentleman can not logroll.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. At least will the gentlemen be willing to let the Frankford Arsenal remain in statu quo with reference to the manufacture of small-arms ammunition and not take away that which we have?

Mr. PEPPER. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers his amendment, I will vote upon that question just the same as I hope he will vote on this question—as a business proposition. If he can demonstrate that the Government can save money by the expenditure of an additional amount at the Frankford Arsenal and that it will be a matter of wise business management to expend that additional money, I shall be glad to support the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKINNEY. I wish to state that there is no competition between the Frankford Arsenal and Rock Island Arsenal in the way of small arms. We do not make ammunition for small arms. We are content to have that part of the ammunition made down there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, who is about to leave this House, and to whom I hope this House will pay the compliment of passing the amendment in which he is interested, I desire to say that when the Army bill was before the House an effort was made to restore an appropriation that meant the employment in the Frankford Arsenal of 100 more men than will be employed after the bill is passed and goes into effect.

It was desired that we should go on manufacturing small-arms ammunition in the Frankford Arsenal on the lines of economy that have been so eloquently described by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I do not intend to attempt to enforce any agreement on the part of the gentlemen from Illinois in regard to the Frankford Arsenal at Philadelphia, but I do intend to support the amendment that they have offered, and I do it with the true spirit of Pennsylvania reciprocity. I hope Rock Island will get what it seeks. I believe there will be real economy if this amendment is passed, and that the Government will be in a position to give better service than if it has to go outside. At the same time I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Iowa, to the fact that once in a while Members are willing to stand by them in their amendments and give them what they ask for, and to remember that there are other great Commonwealths on the Atlantic seaboard that have much to do with Government affairs, which occasionally come forward asking protection for employees in their factories and arsenals, and that it is good for us all to bear in mind this spirit of good will.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I think there is something a little irregular in the manner in which this estimate was submitted to the committee and the House. But I am in entire sympathy with the spirit of the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] when he was examining Gen. Crozier before the committee. I believe that there is a holdup by private manufacturers that are supplying a great many articles such as ordnance and ordnance stores to the Government. A few months ago the Secretary of the Navy let a contract for the building of 30 cannon, and in explaining that contract he wrote a letter to a Member of Congress, which is in the record, stating that it cost the Government $1,600 more to purchase each cannon than it would have cost to have acquired the cannon by manufacturing them in the Government arsenal. The trouble is the Government does not have the equipment to build these cannon.

Mr. SHERLEY. Did that also go to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know; I am not interested in the kind of reciprocity mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I look at this as a business proposition, and if the Government can save a million dollars, and I believe it can, and even save a great deal more, from the statement of Gen. Crozier, it should have the opportunity. And in this matter I believe that the gentleman from Kentucky agrees with me. I do not believe that we should purchase cannon and guns and field artillery from foreign nations. I believe that every piece of field artillery, every gun, and every grain of powder used by the American Army and the American Navy should be produced in American arsenals.

Mr. SHERLEY. I believe they ought to be of American manufacture, too, and I know they would be, but at a less price, the very moment their supremacy was threatened by competition; but I am sick of the system that, under the guise of protecting American workmen and the American manufacturer, mulcts the American people in extravagant prices such as these. The gentleman is aware of what happened at Panama in connection with a dredge, and the outrageous price asked by American concerns, and how it had to be bought abroad in order to get it at a decent price. The same thing is true right along of other articles.

If you put down some of your tariff barriers, you would not have the need of putting the Government in business all of the time in order to protect it against the greed of protected manufacturers.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is another good reason why the Government should manufacture its limbers and cannon. Where is the farmer, the manufacturer, or the business man who wants to buy a cannon or a limber? The only purchaser is the Government of the United States, and we might as well argue here on the floor of letting contracts to firms to furnish men to fight our battles in times of war as to talk about letting contracts for building our cannon and limbers and field artillery, to say nothing of the outrageous prices demanded—aye, to use the words of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], to continue to be held up in this manner by these private manufacturers.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that while his statement is accurate as to certain parts of field material, it is absolutely inaccurate as to others. Wagon manufacturers and people engaged in the manufacture of vehicles used in peaceful pursuits are engaged in the manufacture of articles so similar to what are required by the Army as not in any sense to present the position of manufacturers having one customer, which is the usual excuse these people make for the prices they charge the Government.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman will also agree to the proposition that it is uncertain what the Government's order will be for equipment of this kind, and that being true, manufacturers must keep up an establishment, they must keep men employed, and while it is a holdup in a way, I can see how a great deal of this increased cost is legitimate cost to the manufacturer, and for that reason I think the Government ought to manufacture these pieces and that this amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say one word. It seems to me that gentlemen on that side of the House should devote some of their activities in having the administration adopt the same views that they profess. We have maintained at considerable expense the Watervliet Arsenal, at Watervliet, N. Y., the most splendid plant for the manufacture of certain kinds of guns in the United States, and yet the Navy Department year after year is letting contracts to the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the Midvale Steel Co. for the manufacture of guns which Gen. Crozier has offered to manufacture at from 20 to 25 per cent less at the Watervliet Arsenal.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I suggest that that may be some of the Pennsylvania reciprocity which we have just heard about.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Watervliet Arsenal is operating on from one-third to one-half time, and the guns that cost in the neighborhood of $76,000 to manufacture by contract Gen. Crozier asserts can be manufactured at Watervliet for $52,000. I suggest to gentlemen on that side of the House who are attempting to initiate this economy by the expenditure of $250,000 at this particular time when the conditions that justify the estimate have been eliminated, they should concentrate their attention on the Secretary of the Navy and on the President and compel them or coerce them to give such work for the Navy to the best equipped gun-making establishment in the United States, under the most competent man in the United States, and without waiting for an expenditure of money for equipment very large economies may be effected.

If that be done, they would then be in better position to advocate such an amendment as this at this time, when the only reason for the submission, as Gen. Crozier pointed out, was the failure of the House to appropriate $700,000 for the manufacture of small arms. That reason has been eliminated, because the Army bill as it has been agreed upon in conference now carries the sum of $700,000. It may be that if Gen. Crozier in his letter to the Secretary of War had stated some of the information he submitted to the committee, showing that these manufacturers would be deprived of these rich contracts, that the estimate would not have been transmitted; but the reason upon which he based his desire for this money no longer exists, and the committee believed, inasmuch as Gen. Crozier himself stated that next year it would be necessary for him to very greatly reduce his request for money for the manufacture of small arms, that then it would be advisable to take up this new work. I believe it is best to wait until that takes place. The committee would then provide the money necessary for that work.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BORLAND) there were—ayes 26, noes 29.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. PEPPER and Mr. FITZGERALD) reported that there were—ayes 38, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Testing machines, Watertown Arsenal: For the necessary professional and skilled labor, purchase of materials, tools, and appliances for operating the testing machines, for investigative test and tests of material in connection with the manufacturing work of the Ordnance Department, and for instruments and materials for operating the chemical laboratory in connection therewith, and for maintenance of the establishment, $15,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an additional paragraph, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the paragraph ending with the figures "$15,000," line 17, page 51, add the following paragraph:

"For replacing wooden roof on smith shop, Watertown Arsenal, by a steel structure, including the necessary repairs and alterations on the building, $40,000."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the Watertown Arsenal is a Government manufacturing plant devoted principally to the manufacture of gun carriages and guns of small caliber. At present I think the largest gun manufactured there is a 3-inch. It has a forge shop and foundry and the other buildings which are necessary for a manufactory of this character, but it has not the capacity to forge ingots and material for guns larger than those of a 3-inch caliber. The forge shop to which this paragraph refers is an ordinary brick building with a wooden roof, which latter must be repaired at once, anyway, and it is the desire of the Ordnance Department, if this is allowed, to replace it with a steel roof, raised sufficiently so that machines for forging larger ingots may be installed and such ingots may be manufactured there instead of being purchased, as is the case now. It is essential for the Government, if it is going to manufacture anything, that it should manufacture its own guns and the material which goes into the guns, for the reason that it is difficult to determine whether ingots which are purchased for the manufacture of guns are defective or not. There may be blowholes or some other defect which can not be detected by the tests which are made, but which develop later on when the gun is in actual use; and I believe that there will be more certainty of manufacturing guns without defects if the ingots are made under the careful supervision of the ordnance officers than if made by private manufacturers. Furthermore, it is testified to by Gen. Crozier that there can be a material saving if these ingots are manufactured at the Watertown Arsenal, as is the case in other material which we use in the manufacture of guns, gun carriages, and so forth, at that arsenal, for it has been clearly demonstrated that the Watertown Arsenal is manufacturing such ordnance cheaper than we were able to purchase it before that plant was supplied with machinery which has enabled its manufacture there. It is for these reasons that the comparatively small item of $40,000 recommended by the Ordnance Department should be inserted in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This seems to be involved in the gentleman's amendment, and it is somewhat in his statement. Does the gentleman believe that the Government ought to engage in the manufacture of all the articles it consumes?

Mr. WEEKS. No; I am very frank to say to the gentleman from Illinois I do not.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman in favor of the Government manufacturing this thing and that? If so, why should not the Government manufacture paper and boots and shoes and clothing and everything else we consume?

Mr. WEEKS. I will say that I am distinctly not in favor of the Government manufacturing everything, because I think the Government can not manufacture many things on a sufficiently large scale to compete with private manufacturers; but it is especially essential that the Government should manufacture ingots of steel and guns and gun carriages; and I think it is clearly demonstrated we can get better results by manufacturing those classes of manufactures than by purchasing them from private manufacturers.

Mr. MANN. I confess to the gentleman I have never seen that demonstrated. It may be true. I have heard a good many statements of that kind——

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman is hearing that now.

Mr. MANN (continuing). As to how much cheaper the Government could make these things than anybody else. I take that with a considerable degree of allowance. I have often heard people before state how we could do something for much less than it is now being done if we furnish the plant to begin with; but it is seldom realized. I do not think it has been realized in the case that has been before the committee this afternoon, and probably not in this case to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. WEEKS. I think in very many cases that it would be realized. I have great confidence in the Chief of Ordnance of the Army and think he knows what he is doing. The ordnance officers of the Army who are devoting their entire time, practically, in times of peace to manufacturing guns and gun carriages have gotten manufacturing costs down to a point where they do know what results are. And when Gen. Crozier states that he believes he is making a saving in manufacturing a certain article I think he knows what he is talking about. I would take such statement from him much more readily than I would that of the ordinary governmental official who has not made such a careful investigation of the subject on which he is engaged.

Mr. MANN. I have a high regard for Gen. Crozier, and congratulate him on the work which he has done. And he speaks with a good deal of authority on things he is doing, and possibly with some authority on what he can do. And yet he is in trouble with his employees all over the country.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman knows why he is.

Mr. MANN. I know why he is, and the reason is because he is trying to show Congress about how cheaply he can manufacture things by reason of keeping laborers in the Government service keyed up to the highest point all the time. Everybody but Gen. Crozier and the gentleman who originated the scheme knows that is impossible.

Mr. SHERLEY. Some of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] might lead one to suppose the proposition here involved is the manufacture of certain parts of a gun. The amendment he has proposed is to pay $40,000 for a new roof and an addition to the building in the way of heightening the walls.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I stated that it was necessary to raise the roof of this building in order that the machines might be installed which are to be used to forge castings for guns of 6-inch and other calibers.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman had not interrupted at that particular point, I should have stated that fact, and also this, that at present there is no estimate for any of the machinery that will be necessary to build these particular parts, and the committee did not feel warranted at this time in recommending an appropriation of $40,000 for the roof and walls for the purpose of making possible the manufacture of certain parts when there was no estimate asked for the machinery to make those parts. We thought the matter could well remain until the major policy, to which this is simply an annex, was determined.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. Was it not stated at the hearing, and has it not been stated before, that the reason for asking for an additional appropriation was so that the expense of installing this plant might be distributed over a term of years, and furthermore that it would take this entire year to spend the $40,000 in making the changes in the building which would be required, so that the appropriation for machinery will naturally come next year, or when they are ready for it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not so understand the hearing, which I have just reread. Gen. Crozier did state that—

This $40,000 is all I can expend in this coming year, and it is all I am asking for.

But he was also speaking not only in regard to the expenditure as to these machines, but a total expenditure of $150,000, which he contemplated making. Now, it is perfectly apparent that there are many items of this kind which are asked for by the various departments, all of which can not be allowed. The committee tried to exercise, and I believe it has exercised, a reasonable judgment as to which were most meritorious, and in this instance we did not believe from the facts shown in the hearings that we were warranted in voting the $40,000, and we hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WEEKS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Fort Monroe, Va.: Wharf, roads, and sewer: For repair and maintenance of wharf, including all necessary labor and material therefor, fuel for waiting rooms, and water, brooms, and shovels, $1,400; repairs to apron of wharf, including all necessary labor and material therefor, $4,155; wharfinger, $900; four laborers, $1,920; in all, $8,375; for one-third of said sum, to be supplied by the United States, $2,791.66.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking why the proportion of the United States is reduced in this bill from what has been carried heretofore.

Mr. SHERLEY. The hearings demonstrated that the transportation companies were having about 90 per cent of the use of the property, and it was thought wise that the Government should pay only a third in place of two-thirds.

Mr. MANN. But the transportation companies paid half before, did they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. They formerly paid a third, and the Government two-thirds. We have now provided that the Government shall pay only a third and they two-thirds, because they get the major benefit of it.

Mr. MANN. I had assumed that a local municipality of some sort paid the balance.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was the transportation companies.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Headstones for graves of soldiers: For continuing the work of furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for unmarked graves of Union and Confederate soldiers, sailors, and marines in national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries, at navy yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, February 3, 1879, and March 9, 1906, also for continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of civilians interred in post cemeteries under the acts of April 28, 1904, and June 30, 1906, $75,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, after the word "six," in line 5, insert the following: "including suitable headstones for such places as the Secretary of War may direct as memorials to Union soldiers, sailors, and marines who died during the Civil War and whose places of interment are unknown."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order. Of course it would clearly be good, because this amendment is new legislation; and if the point of order is insisted upon, the amendment, under the rules of the House, can not be considered in connection with this appropriation bill. There are some other items in this paragraph and the following one to which points of order could be raised, but I have not the disposition to raise a point of order against them. I hope the gentleman will let the matter be decided upon its merits.

Mr. Chairman, the present law provides, by an item carried in the sundry civil bill for the current year, as follows:

Headstones for graves of soldiers: For continuing the work of furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for unmarked graves of Union soldiers, sailors, and marines in national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries, at navy yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, and February 3, 1879, also for continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of civilians interred in post cemeteries under the acts of April 28, 1904, and June 30, 1906, $75,000, to be immediately available.

Now, it will be noted that the language provides that these headstones shall be furnished only at the graves of soldiers. This condition has arisen in a number of instances: The patriotic citizens of a community have erected some sort of a soldiers' monument, and it is desirable that there should be given in some way official recognition by memorials in honor of the men who went from that community and lost their lives in the war and whose burial places are unknown.

Now, then, when those cases have come up to the Quartermaster General—and I personally know of one of them—it has been decided that these markers can be furnished only at the graves of soldiers. So, Mr. Chairman, as the result of that interpretation of the law we have this situation as to the soldier who went out to serve his country and lost his life and is buried in an unknown grave: There is no way under the present status of the law whereby the Government can furnish any memorial for that soldier. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that was not the intention of the Government. I believe it was simply an oversight. It must be apparent that it is but scant recognition in the mind of a relative to be told that perhaps somewhere, in some far-off national cemetery, there may be one of those little square posts that marks the grave of one of the heroic unknown dead. That is possibly true, but it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it would be a very fitting thing if we should amend this law as I am proposing in this amendment, so as to provide that under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, whenever he deems it proper, if there is a community that has erected a soldiers' monument and desires to have these marble slabs as a tribute to the patriotic sentiment of that community, the Government should furnish such slabs on which there might be some inscription like this: "John Smith; killed in the Battle of Resaca; burial place unknown"; or some other inscription, to be determined, of course, by the Secretary of War, not as a marker, because no man knows where the remains of the heroic dead are at rest, but as a comfort to relatives of that soldier, as a patriotic lesson to the youth of the community, and as a fitting memorial. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether we stop to think, when we reflect on the number of heroes that sleep in the national cemeteries, of how pitiably many there are of the unknown dead whose resting places have not been located. We have 83 national cemeteries, including an area of something like 1,500 acres. In Arlington alone there are almost 500 acres. Think of it! Two and one-half square miles peopled by the heroic dead of the Republic; and in these 1,500 acres are the remains of something like 360,000 Union soldiers.

Are you aware, Mr. Chariman, that of those 362,306 Union soldiers who are buried in these 83 national cemeteries, 208,600 are known and 153,706 are unknown? In other words, about two-fifths of the total number buried in our national cemeteries are unknown.

In Arlington, where almost 23,000 peacefully sleep in those sepulchers of silence, 17,000 are known and 6,000 are unknown. All that is known of the mighty dead is the story of their heroic devotion in defense of the flag. They bade good-by to family and friends and loved ones and marched away to the grand wild music of war, never to return. They made the greatest sacrifice it is possible for man to make; they gave their lives that the Nation might live, and to-day more than 150,000 sleep in unknown graves. It is doing but scant and tardy justice to erect in their memory and honor in a quiet corner of some country churchyard this humble memorial. By honoring them the Nation honors itself.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is aware, is he not, that as the law now stands instead of those headstones being erected a central monument can be erected under the direction of the Secretary of War, containing bronze plates with the names of the soldiers, their regiments, and so forth, where the particular graves can not be identified.

Mr. WILLIS. I was not, and am not now, aware of that provision, I am frank to say to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. The law has been amended within a few years so as to provide that if the particular graves can not be identified a central monument may be erected by the Secretary of War, containing on it a bronze plate specifying the soldier's name, regiment, and so forth.

Mr. WILLIS. I have never seen that statute, and it is very strange that attention has never been called to it, because I have had a number of conferences with the Quartermaster General about this very question, and have examined the statutes very carefully. I doubt whether there is any such provision as the gentleman refers to. Can the gentleman cite me to the section of the statute?

Mr. BORLAND. One of these central monuments was erected last October in the Union Cemetery at Kansas City, in my district, under that very provision of law.

Mr. WILLIS. I should be very much obliged to the gentleman if he would cite me to that section of the statute. I do not think it exists in the form in which he states it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think the law that the gentleman from Missouri refers to only relates to cases where it is known that soldiers are buried in a particular plot of ground but the exact grave can not be located. It does not apply to the cases referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], where it is known that the soldier is dead and probably buried somewhere, no one knows where.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for the suggestion. I think he has stated the exact fact in the case. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] will pardon me, I will say that that is not the case that I am seeking to cover with this amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Perhaps the gentleman's case would be covered by that. He says that more than 100,000 of these men are buried in these various national cemeteries.

Mr. WILLIS. There are more than 153,000 soldiers buried in national cemeteries, whose identity is unknown.

Mr. BORLAND. It is known that they are buried somewhere, but their particular graves can not be identified. The whole purpose can be served by a proper monument in each of these national cemeteries.

Mr. WILLIS. Not entirely, as the gentleman will see; because he knows, as every one acquainted with the history of that titanic struggle must know, that there were thousands of men who lost their lives fighting for what they believed to be right, whose burial places are unknown, and concerning whom it can not even be known that they have been buried. We do not know anything about it. This amendment seeks to reach cases of that kind, and it seems to me that we can not afford to do less than this. It is not going to cost the Government very much. I am frank to say that I do not know how much it will cost. No one can tell in advance; but the effect of this amendment, if it be agreed to, will be simply to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish these little memorial slabs that can be erected about some central monument, or even if there be no central monument they can be erected on a cemetery lot set aside for that purpose in honor of the unknown dead.

Mr. Chairman, I can not think of anything more pathetic than the situation that exists in thousands of little villages all over this country. I have in mind now a case where practically the whole adult male population went into the Army, and of that number nearly one-half lost their lives. We know that they lost their lives. Comrades testified that they saw them fall, but there is no evidence to show where they are buried. With the onrush of battle the lines were changed. Nobody knows what became of them. Perhaps they were thrown into a pitiless trench somewhere, with a few inches of earth thrown over them. We do not know about that. They died to save the Republic; that we know. Though they live in the hearts of their countrymen through the memory of their heroic deeds, their bodies rest in far-off, lonely unknown graves, with none to drop a tear or cast a fragrant flower.

Now, when it is sought to erect some sort of a monument, and when the people of that community have erected the monument, it seems to me that it is desirable, that it is in the way of carrying out a proper and patriotic purpose, for the Government of the United States to say of these men, as it already says of the men whose places of burial are known—no more heroic, no more worthy than the unknown dead—We will now furnish a marker to the memory of these men. In common fairness and justice and patriotism, why ought it not to say in these cases where the place of interment is unknown, We will furnish a little marker as a memorial to the unknown heroic dead?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In this case, where the law authorizes the construction of a monument with bronze tablets giving the names of those who are supposed to be buried there, the exact location of the burial not being known, would the gentleman have markers located in addition to this monument and bronze tablets?

Mr. WILLIS. No; that would not be desirable.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment might not only permit it, but possibly require it. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I have a case in my own district—the Confederate Mound at Chicago—where are buried 6,000 Confederate dead, who died at Camp Douglass. They have erected a monument, and since then the Government has provided for bronze tablets on the monument with the names of those buried there. I have watched carefully the legislation to see that there should be no markers stuck all over the ground, because the green grass over the burial places of the dead, with the noble monument in the center, is far more pleasing to the eye than a lot of little white stones scattered around would be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with what the gentleman from Illinois has just said, that where the monument has been erected and where bronze tablets are attached to the monument, it would be entirely undesirable that the little markers should be placed around it; but in these other cases where there are no such monuments or bronze tablets, where it is desirable that there should be in some way recognition of the heroism of these men, it seems to me only fitting and proper that an arrangement should be made such as is provided for in my amendment. It is not going to cost very much.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will allow me, has the gentleman made any estimate of how much it will cost?

Mr. WILLIS. I will say that I did the best I could. I asked the official of the War Department having this matter in charge, and he said, of course, in the very nature of things, he could not tell how many requests of that kind there would be. He said that there had been a few already. He suggested that if the amendment should be adopted an appropriation of $500 would be ample and all that would be necessary for the year.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me suggest to the gentleman that these little markers cost about $3.50 apiece.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, with the motive that prompted the gentleman from Ohio to offer this amendment all of us will be in hearty accord; but of the wisdom of adopting it there can readily be many opinions. The amendment provides for the erection of headstones for the unknown dead of the war. Now, at present we have marked by plain, uninscribed headstones the graves of all the unknown dead, and this would provide for the doing of what to my mind would be a very incongruous thing, the erection of individual monuments to soldiers whose graves are unknown in a cemetery on the assumption that they are buried there, when in point of fact they may not be buried there. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that instead of adding to, it would rather detract from the beauty of the last resting places of our heroic dead to add an additional number of individual stones; or instead of the erection of a monument to the unknown dead to put a series of monuments in each of the cemeteries.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me the gentleman is in error in one particular. Of course, it would be highly undesirable that these memorial markers should indicate that the remains of the soldiers were reposing in that cemetery at that particular place. The idea would be that the Secretary of War should have such an inscription on the markers as would show clearly that the remains were not there, something such as I suggested, namely, giving the name of the soldier killed at the Battle of Antietam, for instance, and that the burial place was unknown.

Mr. SHERLEY. In my own judgment, if that is what is to be desired, it would be reached more properly by the erection of a monument in each of the national cemeteries, on which should be inscribed the names of the dead whose places of burial are unknown, rather than to put up individual markers. But, Mr. Chairman, I have said what I have said in order that my action might not be misunderstood. In charge of the bill, I should not feel at liberty to permit an amendment of this kind subject to a point of order to be considered without the point of order being made.

Mr. WILLIS. Before the gentleman makes the point of order, will he yield to another suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. What I had in mind was not simply the national cemeteries, or even the large cemeteries, but the little country burying grounds, those obscure places where it would not be possible at all to secure enough public interest to get the erection of a soldiers' monument. The gentleman knows of many such places and every Member knows of such cases. In such a case as that it seems to me that it would be very proper and would subserve a patriotic purpose if we could have some such marker as I have indicated. In such places there is no soldiers' monument, and under the present law there can not be, while this amendment would make it possible to have markers in memory of the heroic dead whose places of burial are unknown.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately the amendment proposed would not only make that possible, but would require the erection practically of a headstone to every one of the unknown dead, and, under the circumstances, it being new legislation, I feel constrained to make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is new legislation, and therefore is subject to a point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to have the interpretation which the gentleman from Kentucky places on the language of the section. Is it his judgment that it provides that the Government of the United States shall erect a headstone at the unmarked grave of every Confederate soldier as at the unmarked grave of every Union soldier? What is the meaning of the section, in the judgment of the gentleman?

Mr. SHERLEY. My understanding of the section is that it would require the erection of a headstone at every unmarked grave of every Union or Confederate soldier.

Mr. WILLIS. No matter where that soldier is buried?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I do not so understand it.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman objected to my amendment because of the increased expenditure. He certainly must be aware that if the Government now undertakes something it never has heretofore undertaken, namely, the furnishing of headstones at the graves of all the Confederate soldiers——

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman is mistaken, I think, as to the facts. There was a special act passed by which it was made the duty of the Government to erect a headstone over the graves of the unknown Confederate dead.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the unknown Confederate dead who died in Federal prisons or hospitals.

Mr. WILLIS. That is right.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; I think the gentleman's statement to that extent is more correct than mine.

Mr. WILLIS. That narrows it down a great deal. There is at present no general law providing for the marking of these graves of Confederate soldiers; and it is now proposed, as I understand the gentleman, that all of these graves, no matter where located, in a national cemetery, or a post, or a village cemetery, anywhere throughout the country, shall be so marked. Is that the meaning of the section?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is proposed to apply to the unmarked graves of Confederate dead the same rule that now exists as to the Union dead.

Mr. WILLIS. Then, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me further, I should like to have—if the gentleman will notice the language, I believe it has not accomplished the result the committee had in mind. It says here:

For continuing the work of furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for unmarked graves of Union and Confederate soldiers, etc.

Over on the next page—page 57—it says:

Under the acts of March 3, 1873, February 3, 1879, and March 9, 1906.

None of these acts give general authority to the War Department to provide for the marking of the graves of Confederate soldiers.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the gentleman is right and my statement was a mistake. The gentleman will appreciate that on the spur of the moment I can not hope to carry all the details in the bill in my head; but the purpose of it was simply to carry out the existing law except that instead of carrying out the law as to the marking of the graves of unknown Confederate dead through the commission which was originally created for that purpose——

Mr. MANN. Not the unknown, but the unmarked graves.

Mr. SHERLEY. The unmarked graves—it is sought to continue it through the medium that has been employed for marking the graves of the Federal dead.

Mr. WILLIS. Was it the object of the committee to make provision in accordance with the recommendations of the Quartermaster General? I read the hearings very carefully, and he wanted authority simply to straighten, reset, and repair the headstones which were already under the control of the Government of the United States. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think the language he has put in here changes the existing law at all, if it was intended——

Mr. SHERLEY. It would not change the existing law except to the extent to make it the duty of the Quartermaster General to attend to these graves as well as to the Federal graves.

Mr. WILLIS. Do you think this accomplishes that? My contention is that it does not accomplish that at all, because these acts to which reference is had are not acts that give the Government of the United States authority over graves of Confederate soldiers. I do not believe that inserting the two words "and Confederate" has changed the existing law; although I am entirely in sympathy with the idea that the committee had in mind to make it the duty of the Quartermaster General, in accordance with his suggestion, to care for these graves in the Confederate section at Arlington, I do not believe the committee have carried it out in that language.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] that the language of the bill will probably not accomplish the purpose which is intended. I think it will take a Philadelphia lawyer, with all of his noted skill, to tell just what the language of the bill will accomplish, and I want to call attention of the gentlemen to the matter, so that they may correct it hereafter if it needs to be corrected. The item provides in reference to the appropriation for marking the unmarked graves of Union soldiers and inserts the words "and Confederate" soldiers, sailors, and so forth; but that would be necessary under the terms of the act of March 9, 1906, because that is what the bill states. The act of March 9, 1906, provided for the marking of the graves of Confederate soldiers who died in Federal prisons or hospitals, and also provided that the entire work should be completed within two years from the date of the passage of the act. Subsequently that time was extended by a joint resolution of Congress, and my recollection is—I may be mistaken—that that extended time has now expired, so that if the limitation in the bill under the act of March 9, 1906, even if you take into consideration the extension which has been granted—and it is not named here—there will be no authority, because the time limit has expired within which this work can be done. Now, if, on the other hand, it should be construed that under this appropriation you were to mark every unmarked Confederate grave in any national post, city, town, or village cemetery in the country, that involves the marking of all Confederate graves. For myself, I have no objection to the Government now treating the graves of the Confederate and Union soldiers alike in all parts of the country, and I am quite willing that we should enter upon a course of marking the unmarked graves of Confederate dead in the local cemeteries in the South where they lie. It was not contemplated by the act of March 9, 1906, to which citation is made in the bill. I should have preferred to have made an appropriation directly, on the theory that we certainly have reached that point of time since the Civil War where the General Government, seeking to preserve the memory of great deeds on both sides, might properly mark all of the unmarked graves of the soldiers and sailors on both sides of that war. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This lump sum of $75,000, if I understood the explanation a short while ago, is to be administered by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, under the act of 1906, as I recall it, there was a special officer created under that act——

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That the President was to appoint a special officer.

Mr. MANN. A special commissioner.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. A special commissioner, who was to administer the particular fund.

Mr. MANN. There was an appropriation made of $200,000 in the act of 1906 and a special commissioner appointed under a salary of $2,500. And his authority and the appropriation are both extended by the resolution which was passed upon the expiration of the two years provided in the original act.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. How much of this $75,000 will be expended by that particular commission?

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think the time of the commissioner expired, but the special commissioner and the War Department have been working in cooperation, and so far as the War Department is concerned in the matter relating to Confederate graves, they have called in the special commissioner and taken his judgment, as I understand, all along the line. I know that was done in the case of the Confederate mound in my district.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. It was my intention originally at this point to offer an amendment to this bill which should repeal a former regulation of the War Department prohibiting the inscribing upon tombstones of any description or insignia relative to fraternal or other orders not strictly military, but I have learned, after having protested to the War Department along with other gentlemen, that there has been a change made in the regulations, striking out that part which prohibits such inscriptions, and that the regulation as now authorized by law will permit upon the rear and sides of the tombstone the placing of such insignia of fraternities and societies, so long as they are not grotesque.

A bill to accomplish this purpose was introduced by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and it was my intention to offer the provison of his bill here; but in view of the action taken by the War Department, it is now unnecessary to legislate on the subject. I have no doubt there will be no hindrance to the putting of proper insignia and inscriptions upon the tombstones.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is a provision which has been carried in the appropriation bill for seven years.

Mr. MANN. This provision was put in for a specific purpose, which I supposed had been accomplished.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Attorney General holds that is a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. That is all that was intended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The situation is existing all the time, and unless the provision is continued the situation will remain.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know why it was put in in the first place, but I do not believe it ought to be in the law at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Attorney General has construed it as merely a limitation upon the main proposition, and while I do not agree with the construction of the Attorney General, the unfortunate part of it is this construction is binding.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it did have a place at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did have a place, because one of the counties in Illinois had three roads maintained by the National Government on the ground that they led to a national cemetery. Unless the provision is continued in the bill, the other two so-called approaches will be placed upon the Federal Government for maintenance, and the Federal Government should not maintain those 15 or 16 miles of road.

Mr. MANN. It does not seem to me very good legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest the gentleman move an amendment to insert the word "hereafter."

Mr. MANN. I will take the chances and make a point of order on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a limitation upon an appropriation. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not only a limitation to an appropriation carried in this bill, but in other laws.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Attorney General of the United States has rendered an opinion, which is binding upon the officials of the executive departments of the Government, to the effect that this provision is a limitation upon this particular appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York is mistaken in reference to that. It so happened that in that year there was no other appropriation for national cemeteries except what was carried on this bill; but this is a limitation, not upon the appropriation in this bill, but one providing that no part of any appropriation shall be expended, and it is therefore a positive law in reference to other appropriations which may be made in other bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this provision was inserted in this bill on a former occasion. The Attorney General of the United States has construed it to be a limitation upon this particular language of the appropriation. If the Chair has any doubt in regard to it, I will ask him to reserve his decision and I will produce the decision of the Attorney General. That, at least, I suppose is controlling here. That was not the intention of Congress, but that is the construction that the Attorney General has placed upon the provision, and that binds the officials of the executive departments of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General has not held at all that if an appropriation for national cemeteries is carried in the deficiency bill, as it may be, or in the Army appropriation bill, as it might be, it would not be controlled by this provision, that "no part of any appropriation for national cemeteries shall be expended." The Attorney General has made no such holding as that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will produce the decision in the morning, if there is any doubt about it, and the Chair will see.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that at present the Chair is not in doubt, but if it is desired that he reserve his ruling for the purpose of being more sure, he will wait. The Chair, however, is now ready to rule on the point of order because of the words in line 22, "more than a single approach to." The Chair is of opinion that if those words were out it would not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose is to restrict the use of this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The language in line 22, while negative, is affirmative legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the Chair to reserve a decision, because this particular provision was the subject of controversy, and it was held to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, as he has already said, that he is willing to postpone a ruling upon this item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This item is not subject to a point of order. I am not going to concede that it is. I am not certain but that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was himself in the chair and held this to be in order. I think he was.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will go a long way before he finds that any Chairman held this was in order, because this item was not put in the bill in the form in which it is in the bill now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that, as he said before, the matter will be passed over if it is desired that an opportunity be given to present authorities. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter persons dying in the District of Columbia or in the immediate vicinity thereof who have served in the Confederate Armies during the Civil War may be buried in the Confederate section of the Arlington National Cemetery without additional expense to the United States upon the certificate of Camp No. 171, United Confederate Veterans, of the District of Columbia, that such persons are entitled to burial under the authority herein given: Provided, That all such interments shall be under the supervision and subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What committee would have jurisdiction of this subject—the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Military Affairs. The chairman of that committee requested that this item be inserted in the bill because in the so-called Confederate plat in the cemetery there was room for these additional plats, and the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General of the Army approved the item.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that as soon as this item is proposed there will come the proposition that in Arlington Cemetery shall be buried any ex-Union soldier who dies in the vicinity of Washington, and "the vicinity of Washington" is quite large and extensive.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the fact that this only provides that they shall be buried in the plat which has been set aside for Confederate soldiers. It does not add anything to the amount of land which has been set aside for the purpose of burying these soldiers.

Mr. MANN. I so understand.

Mr. HAY. And the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General desired this legislation because the law which was at first enacted provided that only a certain portion of this land could be used for burial purposes. But they find now that, after using up the best part of it, there still remains of this plat a sufficient quantity of land in which to bury about 150 or 200 more Confederate soldiers.

Mr. MANN. What is the procedure under which a Confederate soldier is now buried in Arlington, in this ground?

Mr. HAY. As I understand it, he has to get a certificate from the camp of the United Confederate Soldiers of this town, and also has to get a permit from the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Is it provided by law that the camp has control of it?

Mr. HAY. I understand so. The Secretary of War has control of it, as is provided here.

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of War has final control, but the camp also has control.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of War can not permit anyone to be buried there except those to whom the camp gives authorization, as I understand the gentleman's statement. Now, as soon as this item appeared in the bill the suggestion was made that because you permit any ex-Confederate soldier to be buried in Arlington, therefore you ought to permit any ex-Union soldier to be buried there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law now expressly permits any ex-Union soldier to be buried there.

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Section 4878 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

SEC. 4878. All soldiers, sailors, or marines, dying in the service of the United States, or dying in a destitute condition after having been honorably discharged from the service, or who served during the late war, either in the Regular or Volunteer forces, may be buried in any national cemetery free of cost. The production of the honorable discharge of a deceased man shall be sufficient authority for the superintendent of any cemetery to permit the interment.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that any ex-Union soldier can be buried in Arlington, and I am quite confident that is not the case.

Mr. HAY. They are buried there every day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not only that, but my recollection is that the wives of ex-Union soldiers can be buried there, if their husbands are.

Now, there was a plat set aside for some Confederate soldiers, for a certain number of graves. A less number were buried there than were expected, and it is possible to take care of the soldiers contemplated by this provision. I am quite certain, as

I have stated, that the wives of ex-Union soldiers may be buried in Arlington.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 58, line 17, after the word "given," insert the following:
"And hereafter persons dying in the District of Columbia or the immediate vicinity thereof, who have served as volunteer militia officers during the Civil War in a regularly organized regiment which was under the command of a United States officer, and who were paid for their services by the United States Government, may be assigned a commissioned officer's burial lot."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the rules of the War Department, officers who served in the Union Army are entitled to small plots in Arlington Cemetery. The whole matter of the burial of these officers is under the direction and control of the Secretary of War, who, I believe, has delegated some authority to the Quartermaster General.

There are some few persons residing in the city of Washington now, connected with the public service, who were officers in the militia of the various States, who toward the close of the war were placed under the control of the United States Government and served some considerable time. The Secretary of War will not permit the burial of these officers in a separate lot, but under the law they are entitled to be buried in a single grave as are other Union soldiers.

Now, as I have said, the idea of this amendment is to permit these officers, not exceeding 20 in number at the outside, to be buried in a lot. It relates to those who live here, who practically have made Washington their permanent home.

They are not permitted, under the present regulations, to have their wives buried alongside of them. It seems to me that it will be no more than fair to allow that. These men served, a great many of them, in the early part of the war; and later they joined the State militia, and on account of previous experience were assigned to duty as officers. They are recognized as veterans of the Civil War and are drawing pensions. This provision which I ask to have adopted at this time will not in any manner cost the Government a single copper.

Mr. BARTLETT. What does the gentleman mean in his amendment by the language, "shall be assigned a commissioned officer's burial lot"? We understand very well when you say they may be buried in Arlington, in the National Cemetery, but here you use this peculiar language, "shall be assigned a commissioned officer's burial lot."

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. The burial lot, as I understand, is a small plat of ground, probably 10 by 15 feet, given to an officer, not particularly because of any desire to give distinction to that particular officer, but that he may have another member of his family, namely, his wife, buried alongside of him.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman's amendment mean that the officer while living shall have a lot designated and assigned to him to be used hereafter?

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. That would be a matter for the War Department to determine, because the terms of section 6, page 58, provide as follows:

Provided, That all such interments shall be under the supervision and subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

So that it is merely extending the provisions already made to some officers to those designated in the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the language of the amendment is rather peculiar. It is a little different from that authorizing the burial of soldiers or officers in Arlington.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. In other words, I simply want to put these officers on the same plane as are other officers. The Quartermaster General has on several occasions permitted persons who are not desiguated as officers to be buried on what is known as an officer's lot, but to-day there is no legal authority for that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no information either as to the number of these plats that there may be available, or the conditions under which they are assigned, or the objections that there may be to such legislation. I have no objection to proper legislation in relation to the use of Arlington for interment, but I can not consent to have legislation of this character, which might be a great deal more far-reaching than anybody contemplates, adopted without some reference to the War Department. I make the point of order that it is not germane to the provisions in the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if his amendment authorizes anything more than permission to an officer to have his wife buried there beside him?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; it provides for the assignment of a burial plat to some one not now entitled to one.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order had been insisted on to the paragraph, the Chair would have sustained it; but that having been waived, and the paragraph being allowed to remain, it can be perfected, but in being perfected additional legislation is not in order and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Can the gentleman from New York state, as a matter of historical information, how many national cemeteries there are in which Confederate soldiers are buried?

Mr. BARTLETT. They are buried in the North Alton Cemetery, Illinois; the Confederate Cemetery, Camp Chase, Columbus, Ohio; Greenlawn Cemetery, Indianapolis, Ind.; Confederate Cemetery, Point Lookout, Md.; Rock Island, Ill.; and Oakwood Cemetery, Chicago; and at Arlington.

Mr. WILLIS. There is a statement somewhere that they are buried in six cemeteries. It seems to me that there must be more than that. Can the gentleman from New York give the list?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall the names of the cemeteries in which they are buried.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For continuing the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park; for the compensation and expenses of three civilian commissioners, maps, surveys, clerical, and other assistance, including $300 for necessary clerical labor under direction of the chairman of the commission, office expenses, and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; for roads and their maintenance; the purchase of small tracts of lands heretofore authorized by law; in all, $60,000.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, line 17, strike out the sum of $60,000 and insert in lieu thereof the sum of $57,060.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say that this is at the request of the commissioner of this park in a letter transmitted under date of May 27, in which he asks that this amount be made $57,060.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter vacancies occurring in the membership of the several commissions in charge of national military parks shall not be filled, and the duties of the offices thus vacated shall devolve upon the remaining commissioners or commissioner for each of said parks: Provided, That as vacancies occur hereunder the Secretary of War shall become ex officio a member of the commission effected with full authority to act with the remaining commissioners or commissioner, and in case of the vacation of all the offices of commissioner in any one park hereunder the duties of such commission shall thereafter be performed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph just read. It is obviously new legislation. Unless some one in charge of the bill can explain it, I shall make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Make the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not subject to a point of order. It is a reduction in the number of the officers and is in order under the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. It reduces the number of officers, and the Chair therefore holds that it is not subject to the point of order. The point of order is overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction and repair of post-and-chain fences, repair of high iron fences, constructing stone coping about reservations, painting watchmen's lodges, iron fences, vases, lamps, and lamp-posts; repairing and extending water pipes, and purchase of apparatus for cleaning them; hose; manure, and hauling the same; removing snow and ice; purchase and repair of seats and tools; trees, tree and plant stakes, labels, lime, whitewashing, and stock for nursery, flower pots, twine, baskets, wire, splints, and moss, to be purchased by contract or otherwise, as the Secretary of War may determine; care, construction, and repair of fountains; abating nuisances; cleaning statues and repairing pedestals, $18,550.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If this Republic shall ever fail it will be because of the insidious undermining of the foundations of the Government, and I perceive one of them in this paragraph. With the Republicans in power we have carried in connection with the care of grounds in Washington an appropriation for lycopodium, and this year the Democrats remorselessly have stricken that item out, I suppose because they did not know what it was, because one of the members of the committee asked what it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. We did not strike out lycopodium.

Mr. MANN. Well, you did not put it in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The landscape gardeners and other artistic designers of the city of Washington discontinued that peculiar kind of moss. I understand they have been scraping it off of this particular administration until it is all gone, and they did not care to replace it. Seriously, it was used for hanging baskets, and it seems that they are no longer the fashion, and as it was not to be used, the committee thought—I see mistakenly, now—that it could effect some economy by striking out the word and not being required to explain to gentlemen who are not as familiar with botany as is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] just what peculiar material was to be furnished under the use of that term.

Mr. MANN. I thought possibly the gentleman's committee had omitted it because some one would ask what the meaning of the word was, and when the gentleman would reply that it was moss would further ask whether it was obtained from the members of the gentleman's committee.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under appropriations herein contained no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavements in Washington City at a higher price than $1.85 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1886, and with a base of not less than 6 inches in thickness.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from New York be kind enough to tell us why they did not fix a lower price for asphalt than $1.85?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that this is the price fixed in the District bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought it was $1.65.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will understand that the amount of paving done under these appropriations is very small and in restricted spots. It is not very extensive. This limitation was not changed. I inquired at one time about the limitation, and the description here fits a pavement that was laid on Vermont Avenue at one time, which is supposed to be an ideal pavement.

Mr. MADDEN. Can the gentleman from New York tell what authority has jurisdiction over the plaza in front of the Capitol Building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any provision made in this bill for paving this plaza?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is not.

Mr. MADDEN. There ought to be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The matter was discussed and the subcommittee was of the opinion that there were certain things that should be done about the Capitol that probably could not be done between now and the next session of Congress, but we hoped it might be possible to provide for them at the next session.

Mr. MADDEN. Every place in the District of Columbia except that which is under the jurisdiction of the Congress has a respectable pavement, and that which is under the jurisdiction of Congress is a disgrace to the Capitol.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is in very bad condition.

Mr. MADDEN. Some provision ought to be made in this bill for a repavement of the Plaza.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is in bad condition.

Mr. MADDEN. It is disgraceful.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the committee would have taken the matter up if it were not for the fact that there was a universal opinion that about this Capitol there are certain things that should be done. One is that the limestone front of the main part of the Capitol ought to be replaced by marble and not have a painted front to the building.

Mr. MADDEN. We ought to have a new pavement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The other is that the east front should be extended about 12 feet, as was originally contemplated and planned, in order to finish the building proper. And it is believed that in order to make these improvements it is better to defer other suggestions in order that they may all be done at one time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter there shall not be erected on any reservation, park, or public grounds, of the United States within the District of Columbia, any building or structure without express authority of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph; I think I will make it. I agree with the purpose of the gentleman, which I suppose is to prevent the erection of buildings upon reservations or parks. I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, to prohibit the erection of any building of any kind or structure upon any park, but suppose here on public grounds where greenhouses are they want to put up some kind of an ordinary shed, you could not do it under this provision without asking Congress to give permission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not what is contemplated.

Mr. MANN. I know that is not contemplated, but that is what you say.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. The Department of Agriculture built a stable on the Smithsonian grounds——

Mr. MANN. Which is a shame and a disgrace.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and the committee desires to prevent the repetition of anything of the kind. There are a number of reservations in the District which should be utilized strictly for park purposes, and if there are any structures placed upon them they should be of a character in harmony with the reservation.

Mr. MANN. Is not the Mall considered a park?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is.

Mr. MANN. What would you say about the grounds where the greenhouses are for the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think greenhouses are not considered parks.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is public ground. I take it that public grounds are grounds that belong to the United States. Now, take the greenhouses under the control of the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds——

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no intention of interfering with that.

Mr. MANN. I suppose there is no desire to interfere with that, but this would interfere with that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am not certain, for the reason if the money is made available for the construction of a building it is indicated in the language of the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; you would not do that. They might want to put a shed over there or build a greenhouse, and we may make an appropriation and not provide specifically what they shall do with reference to that. Well, I do not know; I do not think I will make the point of order, although I had intended to do it, because I am so thoroughly opposed to putting buildings upon parks; but the gentleman will have to modify this, in my judgment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman if that interferes with the situation that he points out, it can be readily modified. We both agree in the absolute desirability of preventing the repetition of what has happened in the past, and there seems to be no other way to do it. In the meantime we will look into this, and if it can be modified so as to avoid that situation, we will try to do it.

Mr. MANN. Very well, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to be added at the end of line 20, page 67.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 67, by adding at the close of line 20 the following: "Capitol guide force: For one chief guide, at $1,200 per annum, and 12 guides, at $1,000 per annum each; in all, $13,200: Provided, That a board consisting of the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds shall make all appointments to the Capitol guide force and all regulations to govern the same, and that after the appointment the members of the guide force shall serve during good behavior and be prohibited from receiving any compensation for their services other than the compensation provided in this act."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman wishes to make a brief statement.

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the statements of the gentleman should be permitted to go unchallenged. Nobody need pay anything to go through the Capitol. There are certain gentlemen appointed by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the House who act as guides, who make a specialty of becoming thoroughly familiar with matters of interest in the Capitol and who conduct persons who desire to go through the Capitol and explain the works of art and other matters, animate and inanimate, to the persons whom they are conducting.

They collect, as I understand, a standard fee of 35 cents. Some Members of the House who are not overbusy sometimes undertake to do the work themselves. I make a point myself, when my constituents come to me, to request the guides to conduct my constituents through the Capitol and I reimburse the guides myself in accordance with their tariff. I believe, as the gentleman from Illinois states, that if we appointed a force of guides and put them on a salary, it would be necessary to have a force of detectives to discover where they were when persons desiring to be conducted through the Capitol appeared.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does not the gentleman approve of the principle?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not. I am stating my opinion merely. The one thing that makes these men active and energetic and courteous is the fact that their living depends on the fees that they earn, and I do not know of any cases where they have treated people discourteously or refused to show them objects of interest because of any refusal to comply with an improper request for money.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I trust that the gentleman understands that I am not making any charges of undue demands or improper conduct. I am simply saying that the principle is wrong, in my judgment, that a man should be permitted to show people through the building only when a fee is paid, or when somebody brings a crowd of 10 or 15 people and pays 25 cents apiece, when they are shown through for an hour. I understand that they receive on an average about $8 apiece daily.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I undertook at one time to ascertain their earnings, and I think that is an exaggeration.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does not the gentleman understand that they stand at the door and collect from the whole crowd as they come out?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have heard from persons in my district who have had the various objects of interest pointed out and explained by the guides with the knowledge and facilities they had, and those persons were well satisfied with the information they received and were very ready to pay the small fee that was expected in return.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Would they not be better satisfied to be shown through free?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they would not expect to be shown everything for nothing in this town.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Has the gentleman ever heard of any complaint of extortion on the part of these guides?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I mean recently?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A few years ago regulations were adopted by whoever had charge of these gentlemen, and under those regulations the maximum charge was reduced. I think it was 50 cents. It is now reduced to about 35 cents, and when there are a number of persons in a party, I believe they agree to take the party through at some special rate below that figure.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my experience. When I came here myself a good many years ago, a stranger in the city and anxious to see the Capitol, looking with great awe on Members of Congress, not daring to inquire for the Representative from the district in which I lived to seek his assistance, I applied to one of these guides. I was shown by him through the Capitol very thoroughly and had pointed out to me the various points of interest. I was thoroughly satisfied and well pleased to pay the usual fee for the service rendered.

I insist on a point of order. It is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter there shall not be erected on any reservation, park, or public grounds of the United States within the District of Columbia any building or structure without express authority of Congress.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the desired leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For traveling expenses of the President of the United States, to be expended in his discretion and accounted for on his certificate solely, $25,000.

Mr PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 68, by striking out lines 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that if there is going to be a contest over this item there should be more Members present.

Mr. PAGE. I can not anticipate how much contest there will be, but I think there will be a contest.

Mr. SHERLEY. I propose to oppose the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Of course there are not enough Members here to dispose of a matter that is hotly contested. The gentleman had better let it go over.

Mr. PAGE. I am perfectly willing to agree that the paragraph shall go over.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over, to be taken up the first thing to-morrow when we take up the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the paragraph goes over until the first thing to-morrow morning. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monument to Gens. Screven and Stewart, Midway, Ga.: For construction, erection, and completion of a joint monument to be erected in the old cemetery at Midway, Liberty County, Ga., in memory of the lives and public services of Gen. James Screven and Gen. Daniel Stewart, $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. Have these monuments been authorized?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; they have both been authorized by law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those were both authorized in the last Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. In separate bills. The bill for the monument to Gen. Stewart was introduced by my colleague [Mr. EDWARDS], and the bill for the monument to Gen. Screven originated in the Senate, and both have passed Congress and become law.

Mr. MANN. I reserved the point of order, really, for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] an opportunity to make a speech about these monuments.

Mr. BARTLETT. Time is more precious than speeches just now.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman from Illinois all the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial monument at Germantown, Pa.: To aid in erecting a monument at Germantown, Pa., in commemoration of the founding of the first permanent German settlement in America, to be expended subject to the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1911, authorizing the expenditure of this sum as a part contribution toward the erection of said monument: Provided, That the money for the erection of said monument shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and by such officer as may be designated by him, $25,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in making effective the appropriation of $25,000 authorized by the act of March 4, 1911, toward the erection of a monument at Germantown to commemorate the founding of the first German settlement in America, Congress is giving encouragement to a wise and patriotic movement originating with the German-American Alliance, and is also aiding in the preservation of certain historic truths that have made for good citizenship in every State and Territory of the Union. The German-American Alliance has a membership approximating 2,000,000 and has already raised a fund equivalent to that authorized by the Government to insure the erection of this memorial, which is to stand for ages as a tribute to the sturdy Crefelders who, under the leadership of the learned Pastorius, settled at Germantown.

The national importance of the commemoration of that settlement—consists not alone in the fact that there, in 1683, was the beginning of that vast immigration of Germans to North America which had so great an influence upon our civilization, nor upon the further fact that there, in 1688, began the struggle against slavery in this country. In 1523 a sect arose in Germany which taught the doctrine of the separation of church and state and that there was no authority upon the part of the state to control questions of belief. Its doctrine, promulgated over Europe, led to the establishment of the Quakers in England and to the settlement of two American colonies—Rhode Island and Pennsylvania—and became the foundation stone of the National Constitution and Government. They were the members of this sect who founded Germantown, and the tremendous significance of the event in American history does not need to be detailed.

Another distinguished writer upon German-American history (Prof. M. D. Learned, of the University of Pennsylvania) says:

The settlement of Germantown, Pa., marked the beginning of the great German immigration, which has contributed three great factors to American progress and civilization—German industry, German agriculture, German education and science.

The little group of Crefelders, who set up their looms in Germantown in 1683, were the forerunners of the great industrial enterprises which, under German stimulus, have done so much to develop the material resources of America.

In the wake of these Crefelders came the thousands of Swiss and Palatine farmers, who brought with them a new method of tilling and fertilizing the soil handed down to them from the days of the Romans in the Agri Decumates, and settling between the Puritans and the Cavaliers, transformed the woodlands of Pennsylvania, western Maryland and Virginia, the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi, and the great plains of the West, into fertile fields and orchards, burdened with golden grain and luscious fruits.

The German jurist schoolmaster, Francis Daniel Pastorius, the founder of Germantown, was the forerunner of that German culture and science which have revolutionized American universities and American science.

Since the passage of the act of March 4, 1911, the German-American Alliance, under the direction of its president, Dr. C. J. Hexamer, of Philadelphia, has gone forward with the work which was impliedly imposed upon it by law, and, in addition to the raising of the full proportion of funds, which it was to add to the Government appropriation, it has invited some of the best artists and sculptors of the country to furnish models and designs for the proposed monument. These are now deposited in the halls of the German Society of Philadelphia awaiting the inspection and approval of the Secretary of War. The site for the approved monument is to be in Vernon Park, which is in the very heart of old Germantown, now one of the richest and most populous wards of Philadelphia, and, in view of its patriotic environment, is destined to become the mecca of all those who are interested in the history and influence of the German settler in America. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Delaware River, Pa. and N. J.: For continuing improvement of 35-foot channel from Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., to the sea in completion of contract authorization, $450,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, we have reached the Delaware River item, which provides $450,000 for continuing contracts. A question has arisen as to what becomes of the $700,000 that we understood was authorized. I presume the committee has an explanation for this, but I should like to have it as a matter of record.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in making up the items touching contract work for river and harbor improvements the committee put in everything that was asked by the engineers, in order to continue the work up to the 4th of next March. The original estimate of $700,000 was made on the assumption of providing for work until July 1 next.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the fiscal year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but inasmuch as we will have an additional supply of money upon the passage of another sundry civil bill by the 4th of March next, the committee pursued the policy that has been in vogue for some years, of simply providing for the period of time until which we would have a new fund.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the original authorization of $700,000 is not affected by the passage of this item.

Mr. SHERLEY. In no way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is simply a limitation of time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That same limitation would apply, of course, to the Oregon rivers and harbors.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For survey of northern and northwestern lakes, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels, with a view to their regulation, $125,000: Provided, That the survey of said northern and northwestern lakes be extended so as to include the lakes and other natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the "New York canals."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, page 77, strike out "$125,000" and insert "$150,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk, to be there read, a note to this estimate as contained in the Book of Estimates. This note is from Chief of Engineers Bixby.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOTE: The greatly increased draft of the large vessels navigating the Great Lakes and their connecting channels demands a close reexamination of many localities which were originally surveyed with the requirements of a 12-foot navigation in view. Many of the original charts were prepared on that basis. Present requirements of commerce, however, demand that the bottom be accurately charted to depths of not less than 30 feet in the open lakes and of 25 feet in their connecting rivers or straits. This calls for extensive surveys and a vast amount of office work, all of which must be done with great care and accuracy. The investigations of the varying levels of the Great Lakes, due to natural and artificial agencies, should also be continued with vigor. The inclusion in the estimate of "the lakes and other natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals" is in accordance with the action of Congress in adding that item to the appropriation made May 4, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 1407, sec. 1). The increase of appropriation is asked for, in part, on account of the additional expense occasioned by the large extension thus made of the field of operations, and in part on account of the desirability, from an economical standpoint, of operating the entire plant and equipment of the survey to its fullest capacity for a few years, until the most urgent and important portion of the field work is completed, and of then disposing of some of the survey steamers. The greater part of the outfit has reached an age when rapid depreciation may soon be expected, and the cost of maintenance of the floating plant, which is a large percentage of the cost of field operations, is not proportional to the length of the field season nor to the size of parties. The greatest efficiency therefore, with the least cost, requires that the plant shall now be used to its full capacity. This plan does not contemplate a total expenditure, so far as the work on the northern and northwestern lakes is concerned, in excess of the original project for that work. In order to allow suitable advantage to be taken of the spring season, the appropriation should be available before the beginning of the new fiscal year.

W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, we have listened to the various items for river and harbor improvement—for the Ohio River between one and two million dollars, the Missouri River, the Pacific coast, the Delaware River—all, I have no doubt, worthy objects, and which I am not criticizing in any way; but the Great Lakes, with the great commerce, is also entitled to adequate recognition. It is stated that there passes through the Detroit River alone, in round numbers, 75,000,000 tonnage every year. Bigger vessels, taking larger cargoes and of larger draft, are being built, and I have sent to the Clerk's desk the estimate and a note from the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Bixby; and it seems to me, in view of the millions we are appropriating here, that the estimate of $150,000 should be given, which is $25,000 more than the bill carries now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the survey of the Great Lakes started in 1841. Since that time there has been expended $4,439,420.40. The survey started on the theory that there should be a survey to a depth of about 12 feet. That has been modified from time to time, until they are now surveying for a 30-foot depth. It is a question of comparative speed in the doing of this work. Since 1909 the appropriation has been $125,000 a year. In 1907 and 1908 it was $75,000. In 1906 it was $100,000.

There could be spent on this work whatever Congress would give; there is no limit to what might be expended. Indeed, the gentleman from Illinois himself, I think, in the hearings before the committee well emphasized the conditions. He said:

Mr. CANNON. Unless you get a proviso as to the draft of the vessels, the increase of population, the increase of lake traffic, the development of the St. Lawrence, and the development of the New York canal system, and look ahead a quarter of a century to know what is going to happen, is it not probable that the work you do now may have to be supplemented, and that even 50 years from now you will have to continue your surveys and the improvement of the harbors and deepening of the channels?

Maj. JADWIN. I think that is so.

The committee recommended the same sum that has been appropriated during the past four or five years. One of the reasons urged for this additional appropriation was because last year the committee had included certain work on the New York canal system. The State of New York is expending $110,000,000 upon canal work. It is a matter in which the State is vitally interested, and yet I do not see any necessity, nor did the committee believe that there was any justification, for increasing at this time the appropriation for this service by 20 per cent over that for the current year.

In addition to this work that is done under the Army engineers, certain work on the Great Lakes is done by the Hydrographic Office and certain work by the Canadian Government. I believe an appropriation of $125,000 is sufficient to enable that amount of work to be done that should be done in the next fiscal year.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. What is the depth of water to be obtained in the Ambrose Channel leading up to the New York Harbor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ambrose Channel is the channel leading from the sea across the bar to the harbor of New York, and it is to have a depth of 40 feet.

Mr. CANNON. What was it a few years ago, 30 feet?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The old ship channel was 35 feet.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but it had to be made 35 feet; and it was thought that that was sufficient to last forever. It is now being made 40 feet. Take the Delaware River; my recollection is that that was 25 feet. Then it was surveyed for 30 feet, and now it is surveyed and a large appropriation made for 35 feet, and so on.

Now, does the gentleman think that under the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, with this great commerce that dwarfs the commerce of Philadelphia, that dwarfs the commerce of New York, that dwarfs the commerce of Baltimore, carrying back and forth the products of that great Middle West, should be minimized because of a cut of $25,000 for this service so that it can not keep up with the times and the increase of the draft of vessels?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will repeat that the committee has given a sum sufficiently ample for the next year. Simply because the Chief of Engineers requests an increase in this item is not alone sufficient. We know that the increase originated because of the agitation in connection with the fact that the New York State system of canals had been included in this work.

I believed then, and I believe now, it is possible to do the work that is to be done in that connection without increasing the appropriation. This work must go on. There is no attempt to diminish the amount that is being done. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars will be utilized. No one has ever intimated for the last eight or nine years that more than $125,000 should be given. In view of those facts I do not believe there is any justification at this time, because conditions have not changed, for providing an additional sum of money.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from New York think $125,000 will enable the Engineer Corps to do all that is necessary to be done in this connection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is necessary to be done will not be done in 25 years.

Mr. MADDEN. I know; but I am talking about this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will maintain the same force and the same equipment that has been maintained since 1907.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course everybody knows that the draft of the vessels is becoming greater and greater every year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, and the work that is being done now is largely a reexamination in many places that were examined upon the basis of a 12-foot depth, but during the last few years a new system has been devised by which a drag is used. Much greater areas are swept and much greater results are obtained under the present method, and much more accurate results, than by the old method of sounding. As a matter of fact, since this system was introduced the surveying is more extended, more accurate, and more beneficial to the navigation of the Lakes than it was with a larger appropriation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 22, noes 23.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. CANNON were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CANNON. One moment. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to let this matter be passed over until the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, but had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ADAMSON, for two weeks, on account of sikness in his family.

To Mr. PORTER, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. CALLAWAY, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. GRAY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, for seven days, including to-day's session, on account of important business.

To Mr. CARLIN, for three days, on account of important business.

RELIEF OF KODIAK, ALASKA (S. DOC. NO. 790).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Information comes of a reliable character that through the action of a volcano in the neighborhood of Kodiak, Alaska, more than a thousand people are rendered homeless, and unless aid can be given them they are likely to suffer severely. I ask, therefore, an immediate emergency appropriation to be expended by the Revenue-Cutter Service under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The danger is said to be in the neighborhood of large salmon canneries, and should the streams of the country be clogged and poisoned, as is likely by the volcanic explosion, loss of life is certain to ensue unless relief is granted.

I recommend that an appropriation of $100,000 be made for this purpose.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 12, 1912.

IRON AND STEEL SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Speaker lay before the House the message from the Senate asking for a conference on the iron and steel bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the message from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
June 12, 1912.

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, Nos. 3 and 4, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. PENROSE, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. SIMMONS be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. PAYNE.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 20585, and move to agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 862).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, and 12 are merely amendments to correct typographical errors and to make the records accord with the Pension Office records and do not in any way affect the amounts allowed. The House recedes from its disagreements.

Amendment No. 1, Annie H. Schuler (H. R. 1560): The House passed this at $12 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow did not marry the soldier until after 1890. She is old and disabled, and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 8, James S. Carter (H. R. 4304): The House passed this at $30. It was stricken from the bill by the Senate at the request of the Member from that district. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 11, Pethuel Dorcas (H. R. 6418): This bill passed the House at $36 per month. The Senate reduced the amount to $30 on the grounds that the soldier's disability does not require the assistance of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 13, John N. Fox: The item was stricken from the bill by the Senate because of the fact that the soldier had died since the bill passed the House.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 21230, and move to agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21230) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 860).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21230) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 17, 20, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, and 32; and agree to the same.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendments Nos. 1, 3, 4, 9, 14, 15, 24, 25, 26, and 29 are merely corrections of typographical errors, and corrections of records to accord with Pension Office records, and do not in any way affect the amounts allowed. The House recedes.

Amendments 7, 10, and 30 are to strike out items in which the beneficiaries have died since the bill passed the House. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 2, John F. Rankin (H. R. 1015): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that soldier has some property and his condition is not such as to require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 5, Arthur Branagan (H. R. 6239): The House passed this at $30. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier can secure $30 under the new law, and that he has a pension from former employers of $19.50 per month in addition to his pension from the Government. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 6, William M. Capps (H. R. 6980): The House passed this at $12 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds of former Confederate service. The Senate recedes from this amendment.

Amendment No. 8, Le Roy S. Jones (H. R. 8367): The House passed this at $20 per month. The Senate increased it to $24 on account of additional evidence. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 11, Francis M. Herring (H. R. 12143): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 12, Mary C. Roos (H. R. 13751): The House passed this at $20 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that soldier only served three months and the widow is getting $12. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 13, Amos Graham (H. R. 14294): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced the amount to $30 on the grounds that the soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 16, Edward B. North (H. R. 14985): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds of very short service and physical condition of the soldier. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 17, Charlotte Atkinson (H. R. 15437): The House passed this to increase her pension to $20 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that widow had married after the death of her soldier husband, who was killed in service. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 18, Sarah Knepley (H. R. 15439): The House passed this at $20 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow is receiving $12 per month and the soldier served only 100 days. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 19, Jennie M. Metz (H. R. 15513): The House passed this at $20 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier had short service. The widow did not marry until 1873, and she is now receiving $12. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 20, Viola Phillips (H. R. 16368): The House passed this to give the widow $12 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow did not marry the soldier until after 1890. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 21, Sumner P. Boies (H. R. 16924): The House passed this at $12 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier had only 67 days' service. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 22, Mary E. Martin (H. R. 17945): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow is now receiving same pension as other widows of soldiers, and there is no reason for granting her any further increase. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 23, Charles Britton (H. R. 18095): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier was twice a deserter from his service and did not surrender himself until 1873. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 27, Hugh Lappin (H. R. 18468): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced the amount to $30 on the grounds that the soldier is not so disabled as to require the aid of another person. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 28, Daniel Williams (H. R. 18700): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced the amount to $30, but the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 31, James T. Singleton (H. R. 19942): The House passed this at $36 per month. The Senate reduced the amount to $30 on the grounds that soldier's condition does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 32, Andrew Smith (H. R. 20037): The House passed this at $36 per month. The Senate increased the amount to $40 on account of additional evidence showing that soldier has a helpless daughter dependent upon him. The House recedes from its disagreement.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 21597, and move to agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21597) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 861).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21597) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendments Nos. 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 23, 26, and 27 are amendments merely to correct records in accordance with the records of the Pension Office, to correct typographical errors, and to provide that additional pension granted on account of helpless children shall cease upon the death of such children. These amendments do not in any way affect the amounts allowed. The House recedes from its disagreement to all of these amendments.

Amendments Nos. 1, 3, 20, 22, and 25 strike out the names of beneficiaries who have died since the bill passed the House. The House recedes from its disagreement to all of these amendments.

Amendment No. 12, Peter Golden (H. R. 9236): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that soldier can get a substantial increase under the new law. He is also in receipt of a pension of $24 per month from a railroad company by which he was formerly employed. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 2, Thomas J. Turner (H. R. 2041): The House passed this at $20. The Senate increased it to $30 on account of additional evidence filed showing the soldier, who served nine months, to be in such physical condition as to require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 5, William N. George (H. R. 4584): The House passed this at $30. The Senate raised it to $36 on additional evidence showing that soldier is totally helpless and requires the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 6, Robert Sutor (H. R. 6011): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced the amount to $30 on the grounds of short service and it not being shown that he needs the help of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 16, Bradford R. Gilbert (H. R. 11252): The House passed this at $24. The Senate increased it to $30 on additional evidence showing greatly increased disabilities, which evidence was not before the House committee. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 19, Julia C. McCue (H. R. 12227): The House passed this to give the widow $12 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill for the reason that she did not marry the soldier until 1894. It appears that the beneficiary is in a deplorable physical condition and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 21, Thomas Hampson (H. R. 14152): The House passed this bill at $36. The Senate reduced the amount to $30 on the grounds that it does not appear that the soldier requires the aid of another person at any time. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

Amendment No. 24, Adam B. Hastings (H. R. 18218): This item passed the House at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that it does not appear that the soldier's condition requires the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 28, Henry B. Dewald (H. R. 20675): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier is now being cared for in a soldiers' home, and it does not appear that he requires the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 22261 and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22261) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 863).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22261) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 13, 21, 23, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44, and agree to the same.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendments Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, and 44 are simply corrections of typographical errors, corrections of records to conform to Pension Office records, and to provide that where additional pension is granted on account of dependent children it shall cease upon death of such children, and the amendments do not in any way affect the amounts allowed. The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments.

Amendment No. 1, Charles H. Norred (H. R. 2685): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

Amendment No. 2, Bernard F. Morrow (H. R. 6172): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it out on the grounds that a Senate bill for the same soldier had already passed that body and had been reported to the House. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 3, Thomas H. Chance (H. R. 6342): The House passed this to increase pension to $50. The Senate cut it to $40 on the grounds that the soldier's physical condition does not warrant a higher rating. A review of the evidence shows soldier totally disabled and requiring aid of another person. The Senate recedes.

Amendments Nos. 9 and 10, Edwin S. Butts (H. R. 10439): In this case the House passed the bill at $30. The Senate reduced the amount to $24 per month, and provided that that amount should be paid him without any deduction on account of former alleged overpayments. The soldier is receiving $10, but that amount is being withheld from him on account of former alleged overpayments. The House recedes from its disagreement to the two amendments of the Senate in this case.

Amendment No. 11, William C. Tilley (H. R. 11138): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that evidence did not warrant congressional action. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 12, William H. Bishop (H. R. 11377): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 13, James M. Cartee (H. R. 13752): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced it to $30. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 14, William Peabody (H. R. 13824): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 18, Samuel Barnett (H. R. 14344): The House passed this at $36 per month. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that that rate is the amount usually allowed in similar cases. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 21, Henry Q. Graham (H. R. 14790): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier had an income of $200 per year in addition to his pension. This income is from a ministerial relief fund and not permanent. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 22, Robert Smith (H. R. 14917): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 23, Mary F. Belcher (H. R. 15019): The House passed this at $12 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow did not marry the soldier until after 1890. The widow is in a bad physical condition and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 24, Dudley W. Dye (H. R. 15477), and amendment No. 25, Peter A. Gipp (H. R. 15527): The House passed both items at $36. The Senate cut them to $30 on the grounds that physical condition of soldiers does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 32, George H. Kimmel (H. R. 17517): The House passed this at $36 per month. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier has some property and is not so disabled as to require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 34, Christopher Colgate (H. R. 17888): The House passed this at $40 per month. The Senate increased the amount to $50 on account of the total helplessness of the soldier. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 35, Kate E. Smith (H. R. 18604): The House passed this at $20 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that widow did not marry the soldier until 1892 and she is now receiving a pension of $15 per month. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 41, John W. Snively (H. R. 19832), and amendment No. 42, the case of Charles H. Robinson (H. R. 19895): In both cases the House passed the item at $36. The Senate reduced them to $30 on the grounds that soldiers do not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement in both instances.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD.
JOE J. RUSSELL.
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 23557, and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23557) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 865).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23557) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 12, 13, 15.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29, and agree to the same.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendments Nos. 1, 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, and 29 are merely for the correction of records in accordance with Pension Office records, correction of typographical errors, and to provide that additional pension granted on account of dependent children shall cease upon the death of such children. The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments.

Amendment No. 2, Edgar A. Whitaker (H. R. 5459): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier was comparatively a young man and not so disabled as to require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 3, Jacob Alonzo Goodale (H. R. 5474): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 6, Henry M. Parks (H. R. 10553): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced the amount to $30 on the grounds that the soldier does not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 9, Joseph C. Kuebbeler (H. R. 12197): The House passed this to give the soldier $24 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that there is some question as to the identity of the soldier. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 10, the case of Ann Currigan Chamberlain (H. R. 12298): The House passed this at $12 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that she did not marry the soldier until after 1893. She is in bad physical condition, and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 12, Hattie Fordyce (H. R. 14558): The House passed this to give the widow $12. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that she did not marry the soldier until after 1890. She is in a bad physical condition, and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 13, Mary A. Barross (H. R. 17518): The House passed this to give the widow $12 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that she did not marry the soldier until after 1890. She is in very bad physical condition, and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 14, John B. Berry (H. R. 17566): The House passed this to give the soldier a pension of $30 per month. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that the soldier is entitled to an increase under the new law, and in addition has an income of $300 per year from other sources. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment.

Amendment No. 15, Christina Bates (H. R. 17909): The House passed this to give the beneficiary a pension of $12 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that it is a case of a remarried widow. She is in a bad physical condition, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 18, Albert N. Hopkins (H. R. 18684): The House passed this at $24 per month. The Senate raised it to $30 on the grounds of additional evidence showing great disability. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 22, Carrie Keefer (H. R. 20966): The House passed this to increase the widow's pension from $12 to $25. The Senate reduced the amount to $20, which has been the amount usually allowed in similar cases. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 26, Samuel W. McElderry (H. R. 21739): The House passed this at $20. The Senate increased the amount to $24 on account of additional evidence showing greater disability. The House recedes from its disagreement.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 23063, and move to agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 864).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 18, and 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. J. MCCUMBER,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendments Nos. 4, 10, 11, 13, 16, 17, 19, 23, 24, and 28 are merely corrections of records to conform to Pension Office records, corrections of typographical errors, and to provide that additional pension granted on account of dependent children shall cease upon the death of such children, and do not in any way affect the amounts carried. The House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments.

Amendments Nos. 1, 7, 12, 26, and 27 are to strike out cases in which the beneficiaries have died since the bill passed the House, and the House recedes from its disagreement to these amendments.

Amendment No. 2, John Staley (H. R. 8406): The House passed this at $36. The Senate reduced it to $30 on the grounds that the soldier's physical condition does not require the aid of another person at any time. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 3, William Annis (H. R. 9466): The bill passed the House at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that soldier's condition does not require assistance of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 5, Ann Moffitt (H. R. 12283): The House passed this at $20. The Senate struck the item from the bill on the grounds that widow is receiving $12 on account of the death of her soldier husband. She afterwards remarried, although widowed the second time. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 6, William G. Miller (H. R. 12350): The House passed this at $40. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that soldier was given an increase to $24 by special act a few years ago. He is at present in a soldiers' home, being cared for by the Government, and it does not appear that he requires the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement to this amendment.

Amendment No. 8, Franklin Prentice (H. R. 14913), and amendment No. 9, Joseph P. Foss (H. R. 15024): The House passed these items at $36. The Senate cut them to $30 on the grounds that soldiers do not require the aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreements to these amendments.

Amendment No. 14, Henrietta Brown (H. R. 15293): The House passed this at $20 per month. The Senate cut the item from the bill on the grounds that the widow is receiving a pension of $12. She was the wife of a soldier for only a few years, and did not marry him until long after the war, and her physical condition is not such as to require aid of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 15, Henry Lavine (H. R. 15769): The House passed this at $36. The Senate cut it to $30 on the grounds that soldier does not require the assistance of another person. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 18, Clara S. Stout (H. R. 18149): The House passed this to give a pension of $12. The Senate struck it out on the grounds that the widow did not marry the soldier until 1893. She is in a deplorable physical condition and the Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 20, Lee Heath (H. R. 19762): The House passed this to give soldier a pension of $12 per month. The Senate cut it out on the grounds of prior Confederate service. Verbal testimony to the House committee is to the effect that the Confederate service was involuntary and of only a short duration. The Senate recedes from its amendment.

Amendment No. 21, Charles H. Austin (H. R. 19787): The House passed this at $24 per month. The Senate increased the amount to $30 because of additional evidence. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 22, Lloyd S. Brooks (H. R. 21300): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate cut it to $24 on the grounds that soldier did not enlist until March 10, 1865. The House recedes from its disagreement.

Amendment No. 25, Nicholas Roth (H. R. 21737): The House passed this at $30 per month. The Senate cut it out on the grounds that another bill introduced by Mr. SMITH of New York had been passed for this soldier and the House recedes from its disagreement.

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
JOE J. RUSSELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the conference reports were agreed to was laid on the table.

CORRECTING ERROR IN PENSION BILL.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer House concurrent resolution No. 56 and for the immediate consideration of the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 23557) entitled, "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," to strike out on page 35, line 23, the name "Moffitt" and insert the name "Maffitt."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20585) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21230) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21597) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 22261) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23557) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (No. 56) authorizing and directing in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 23577) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, to strike out, on page 35, line 23, the name "Moffitt" and insert "Maffitt," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 3 and 4 to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. PALMER, and Mr. PAYNE, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 16612) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain lot in the city of Alva, Okla., and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the Washington Presbytery of the District of Columbia, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transportation of moving pictures of prize fights, etc., which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I send to the desk resolutions passed by the Provincial Junta of Pampanga, P. I., in regard to the sugar duties, and ask that the resolutions, of which a translation is appended and which are brief, may be printed in the RECORD. They come from one of the provincial assemblies.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXTRACT FROM THE RECORDS OF THE ORDINARY SESSION OF THE PROVINCIAL JUNTA OF PAMPANGA, HELD AT SAN FERNANDO APRIL 25, 1912.

Present: Hon. Mariano Lim, provincial governor; Señor W. O. Kaminer, provincial treasurer; and Señor Jose Luciano, third member.

Absent: None.

Resolution 293.

The provincial governor has submitted to the junta the following projected resolution:

Whereas the Committee on Ways and Means of the Congress of the United States has presented for the approval of Congress a bill declaring free the entrance into the United States of sugar from all sources.

Whereas said bill has been approved by the House of Representatives, but up to the present time has been pending in the Senate.

Whereas if the said bill should be approved it would occasion great losses to the sugar industry of the Philippine Islands, and especially to that industry in this Province of Pampanga, the principal product of which is sugar, since by admitting into the United States competition of sugars from different points of origin our Philippine sugar must suffer a severe blow, considering the distance from the Philippine Islands to the United States, as well as to defects in its present manufacture, due to lack of centrales, good machinery, and other elements for the production of sugar.

Whereas, after the approval of the Payne bill and in spite of the limitations contained in the Payne bill on the entrance of Philippine sugar in the United States, the cultivation of cane in this essentially sugar-growing Province reacted, much land being put under cultivation which had up to that time been abandoned by its owners on account of the low price of sugar prior to the passage of the Payne bill, the machinery necessary to its manufacture being imported, all of which has represented great sacrifices of capital by the sugar growers of this Province of Pampanga.

Whereas the mere announcement of the presentation of the bill declaring free the entrance of sugar into the United States from all points of origin has lowered the quotation price of sugar in the Philippine markets 30 per cent, and as a result of this drop in prices the sugar market of this Province of Pampanga, as well as of Manila, to which point Pampanga sugar is taken and sold, has been almost completely paralyzed: Therefore the Provincial Junta of Pampanga by the present begs the Senate of the United States that the bill declaring free the entrance of sugar into the United States from all points of origin be disapproved, and to cause this petition to reach the Senate of the United States as soon as possible it is

Resolved, To transmit the following cablegram:

FINANCE COMMITTEE, Senate, Washington:

Province requests disapproval free-sugar bill.

PROBOARD, PAMPANGA.

And it is further

Resolved, That a complete copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the two legislative chambers of the Congress of the United States, as well as to each of the Resident Commissioners in Washington, Hon. Legarda Quezon, and also to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and to the Finance Committee of the Senate, both of the said Congress of the United States.

Unanimously approved.

I certify by the present that the resolution that precedes is a true copy of the original.

P. GOZUN,
Recorder Provincial Board, Pampanga.

Mr. LODGE. I present a brief resolution from large business interests in Holyoke, Mass., in regard to the so-called Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill. I ask that it may be printed, and I should like to ask further that the names, which are very few, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD with the names attached, as follows:

HOLYOKE, MASS., June 3, 1912.

We, the undersigned, being actively interested in the manufacturing interests of Holyoke, understand that the Covington amendment, so called, to the bill now before Congress regulating the passage of vessels through the Panama Canal provides that "it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in any common carrier by water with which said railroad does or may compete for traffic."

We believe in the regulation of common carriers by the Government.

We do not, however, believe in such restriction or limitation of investment in or the development of steamship lines or coastwise trade generally as this amendment provides.

We deem it especially important for the great industries of New England that, under proper restrictions, railroads should be allowed to develop and maintain transportation by water. This is of the utmost importance in the transportation of the freight to and from New England points and the South.

We believe that, with the opening of the Panama Canal, it is of the greatest importance that there shall be adequate transportation facilities by water between New England and the Gulf States.

Therefore we protest against the adoption of the Covington amendment to the Panama Canal bill as unnecessarily impeding the development of New England's commerce with southern and Pacific ports, and we urge New England Congressmen to do everything in their power to defeat this amendment.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Chicago Federation of Labor and a petition of Garden City Branch, No. 11, National Association of Letter Carriers, of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the better protection of American seamen, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of East Peoria and Maywood, in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the use of insignia or garb of any denomination in the Indian public schools, which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Association of Commerce of Chicago, Ill., favoring the enactment of certain legislation relative to the administration and control of the Panama Canal, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a petition from the Medical Society of Mohave County, Ariz., praying for the establishment of a bureau of public health. I ask that the petition lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KINGMAN, ARIZ., May 30, 1912.

To Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH and
Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting of the Mohave County Medical Society, held on May 28, 1912, the following resolutions were adopted, and are respectfully submitted:

Whereas Senate bill No. 1, known as the Owen bill, is soon to be voted upon; and

Whereas a very large proportion of the deaths throughout the country are due to preventable causes; a condition that is a disgrace to modern civilization and needs corrective measures. The country's most valuable asset is the health of its citizens, and its most important product is its children. Therefore does it behoove us to see that the health of our citizens is maintained and our children given their rightful energies by means of sanitary conditions; and

Whereas it has been fully demonstrated that preventive medicine has made it possible to save lives by organized and coherent efforts, such as the world has witnessed in Cuba and the Panama Canal Zone, without which organization such efforts would have been futile; we believe that this stands as an example of what could be expected within our own borders by limiting preventable diseases if the efforts of our physicians were directed by proper organization such as the Owen bill contemplates; and

Whereas our Government has appropriated vast sums of money for curtailing diseases among horses, cattle, hogs, and plants, and no adequate sum for the conservation of the health of its citizens; and

Whereas the opponents of the Owen bill have claimed that the intent of the measure is to make a Medical Trust which will preclude a citizen from employing a medical adviser of his choice, we refute this argument of the patent medicine venders and of those sects professing to heal who have no knowledge of sanitary conditions and will not report contagious diseases as set forth in our health laws; and inasmuch as the object of this bill is to prevent disease, and is of a strictly sanitary nature, without any reference whatever to the treatment of disease, it is evident that their argument is selfish and purely mercenary, without any idea of public welfare: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Mohave County Medical Society petitions the honorable Senators from the State of Arizona to give the Owen bill their most hearty support.

W. H. BUCHER, President.
A. M. COWIE, Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a petition of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of New Britain, Conn., remonstrating against an appropriation being made to be used for the purpose of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of peace with England, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PERKINS presented resolutions adopted by the Puget Sound Salmon Canners' Association, favoring the establishment of a revenue-cutter patrol along the international boundary line at Cape Flattery during the fishing season on the Pacific coast, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES presented sundry papers to accompany the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 116) appropriating $50,000 for the relief of the inhabitants of Kodiak Island and vicinity from effects of explosion of the Katmai and other Alaska Peninsula volcanoes, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against any appropriation being made for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of peace with England, and also against instructing representatives of the United States in the next international peace congress to express the desire of the United States that nations represented in the conference shall not attempt to increase their territory by conquest, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2928) appropriating money for and directing the purchase of additional land in Cave Hill Cemetery, at Louisville, Ky., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 876) thereon.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2697) for the relief of John J. Flynn, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 875) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 5724) to correct the relative and lineal rank of an officer of the United States Army, reported adversely thereon and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

FORT LOGAN H. ROOTS MILITARY RESERVATION, ARK.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 6926) to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas, and I submit a report (No. 877) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was to add a new section to be known as section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby further empowered to require, as one of the conditions of the sale herein authorized, that the grantee shall execute a bond to the United States, in such amount and with such sureties as the said Secretary shall prescribe, conditioned that the said grantee shall hold the United States harmless as against any damage that may be done to the part of the premises retained by the United States by any use to which the said grantee may devote that part hereby authorized to be conveyed; and that whenever, in the judgment of the said Secretary, the use to which the said part is being devoted shall interfere with the proper use by the United States of the said remaining part for any of the purposes to which the same is now being devoted, the said Secretary may direct a suspension of such interfering use for such time or with such restrictions as to him shall seem proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COEUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS, IDAHO.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) directing the Secretary of the Interior to amend the patent issued to the State of Idaho for lands described herein. It came in too late for me to make the request when I reported it yesterday, and I should like to have it given present consideration. It is purely a local matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection, if it does not lead to protracted discussion. I must say that I will have to object to the consideration of bills that will create any discussion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I anticipate that it will not lead to discussion, because it merely relates to lands that were granted for a park and in which the deed was erroneous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the preamble of the joint resolution read?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I do not desire to have it read unless some one else does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 6, line 5, after the word "patent," to insert "in lieu of the conditional patent heretofore issued," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to forthwith make, execute, and deliver to the said State of Idaho a good and sufficient conveyance by patent, in lieu of the conditional patent heretofore issued, of all of the lands hereinbefore mentioned and described, and that no other or further consideration than the payment of the said sum of $11,379.17 shall be demanded or received by the said Secretary of the Interior or on behalf of the Government of the United States for the conveyance of said land as last aforesaid; and that said deed shall be an absolute grant in fee simple to the State of Idaho without condition other than that said land shall be maintained by said State of Idaho as a public park.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. In line 9, before the word "sum," I move to strike out the word "said."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, page 7, line 3, after the word "park," to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

And that the phrase used in said act "said conveyance to be made for such consideration and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe" refer only to the "terms and conditions" relative to the consideration and payment for said land and did not authorize the Secretary to prescribe any terms or conditions as to the use and enjoyment of said lands of said State of Idaho other than that said lands should be used by the State as a public park.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Idaho state in brief what the joint resolution does? Does it increase the number of acres granted?

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not affect the number of acres or the price. The price has been paid, and it merely carries into effect the terms of the act under which the grant was made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice that the transfer is to be without conditions. Were there some conditions imposed?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is what Congress said when it made the grant.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is to say, the authority of Congress was to make the grant without conditions.

Mr. HEYBURN. It said it was to make the grant upon the payment of the money. The money has been paid, and there is no controversy about it at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. A patent has been issued, but a conditional patent only.

Mr. HEYBURN. The patent that was issued was not in conformity with the act, and this merely provides that it shall be in conformity with the act making the grant.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the former act was not complied with would it not be a matter of duty for the Secretary of the Interior to comply with it?

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope the Senator will not interject into the passage of this purely local measure the discussion of the public-land system of the United States. The mistake was bad enough without having an attempt made to perpetrate another mistake upon it. It is purely local to the State of Idaho. No other State in the Union is interested in it. The State of Idaho has paid the money, they are in possession of the property, and they are entitled to have their record title made good and clear.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not disputing the Senator's position; I just wanted to know what were the conditions that had been imposed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HEYBURN. The conditions that were sought to be imposed by the deed were not authorized by the act.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there any objection to stating what the conditions were?

Mr. HEYBURN. Except that the joint resolution would go over. The Senator from Wyoming has kindly consented not to interpose an objection, provided it does not lead to discussion. It should not lead to discussion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any desire to discuss it, but I should like to know what the conditions were which were imposed in the patent.

Mr. HEYBURN. The patent, without any authority under the act of Congress, gave unlawfully the right to flood the lands. That is one objection. Of course, it would be no use as a park if they have the right to flood the lands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To irrigate them, does the Senator mean?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it is not in an irrigation district at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For what purpose were they to be flooded?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know for what purpose. I suppose for their own pleasure or amusement or something—for no legitimate purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no other desire than to have the information. The matter evidently should receive consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have reserved or attempted to reserve a right which no sane person would ever think of exercising. It is one of those annoyances that is unsatisfactory to the State. I made the proposition to the Secretary that if he would pay the State the money that was paid they would cancel the whole business, but he said they were not willing to do that. They want to give the State a plaything; they want to make some offices up there; they want some uniformed inspectors and special agents up there; and we do not want them in the park. We will probably make provision by which the local constable will arrest them if they go there and try them before a justice of the peace and see if we can not have peace.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the preamble be printed in the RECORD, and that it be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The preamble is as follows:

Whereas on April 30, 1908, Congress enacted as follows (35 Stats. L., p. 78): "That the land in the following subdivisions now embraced in the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in Idaho, to wit: Sections 1, 2, and 12, township 46 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; sections 35 and 36, township 47 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; all of those portions of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, township 46 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of the St. Joe River, in said township; all of those portions of sections 31 and 32, township 47 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of the St. Joe River, in said township, is reserved and withdrawn from allotment and settlement, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to convey any part thereof to the State of Idaho to be maintained by said State as a public park, said conveyance to be made for such consideration and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe. The proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States for the use and benefit of the Coeur d'Alene Indians in such manner as Congress shall hereafter prescribe"; and

Whereas, in disregard of the provisions of said act and of the rights provided thereby to be conveyed to the State of Idaho, the Secretary of the Interior did, on the 29th of June, 1911, execute and deliver to the State of Idaho a deed of conveyance in words and figures as follows:

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas the act of Congress approved April 30, 1908 (35 Stats., 70, 78), authorizes the conveyance to the State of Idaho of the following-described subdivisions, or any part thereof, formerly a part of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho, viz: Sections 1, 2, and 12, township 46 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; sections 35 and 36, township 47 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; all of those portions of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, township 46 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of the St. Joe River, in said township; all of those portions of sections 31 and 32, township 47 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of the St. Joe River, in said township, to be maintained by said State as a public park for such consideration and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe; and

Whereas by appraisement under direction of, and approved by, the Secretary of the Interior the purchase price to be paid by the State of Idaho for the said lands has been fixed at $11,379.17, and said Secretary has directed that said lands be conveyed to the State upon payment by it of said sum upon the following terms and conditions, to wit: The lands are to be by said State held, used, and maintained solely as a public park and for no purpose inconsistent therewith, the title to revert to the United States of America absolutely if the said lands, or any portion thereof, shall not be, or shall cease to be, so used and maintained by the State, or shall be alienated by said State; and in event of the violation by the State of any of the conditions or covenants herein contained, or its failure to carry out the same, then the United States may thereupon, or at any time thereafter, enter upon and into the exclusive possession of the said lands and the whole thereof and of all improvements thereon, and have, hold, seize, and possess the same, expressly excepting and reserving to the United States of America, however, all valuable mineral deposits in the said lands, together with the exclusive right to mine and remove the same, and to permit, license, or authorize the mining and removal thereof in such manner, upon such terms, and under such conditions as the Congress may prescribe; and also the right to flood or overflow the said lands, and to permit, license, or authorize the same for domestic, irrigation, and power purposes; and

Whereas the State of Idaho, by the act of the legislature thereof approved March 16, 1909, has appropriated out of the public moneys of said State and made available the aforesaid sum so fixed by the said appraisement for the purchase from the United States of the lands aforesaid; and

Whereas the State of Idaho has applied to purchase, under and by virtue of the said acts of Congress and the legislature of the State, all of the above-described lands and has made full payment therefor;

Now know ye that the United States of America, in consideration of the premises and pursuant to the said act of Congress, has given and granted, and by these presents does give and grant, unto the said State of Idaho all and singular the tracts above described, to have and to hold the same, together with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging unto the said State of Idaho forever, upon and subject, however, to the terms, conditions, and reservations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and hereinabove set forth.

In testimony whereof I, William H. Taft, President of the United States of America, have caused these letters to be made patent and the seal of the General Land Office to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, the 29th day of June, A. D. 1911, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

By the President:

WILLIAM H. TAFT.
By M. P. LE ROY, Secretary.
H. W. SANFORD,
Recorder of the General Land Office.

And upon the delivery of the said deed the State of Idaho did pay to the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $11,379.17, that being the price fixed for said land, in the manner provided by said act.

That in addition to the determination of the value of the said land and the terms of the payment therefor the said Secretary did, in violation of the law and of the provisions of said act of Congress, insert in said deed the following language:

"Upon the following terms and conditions, to wit: The lands are to be by said State held, used, and maintained solely as a public park and for no purpose inconsistent therewith, the title to revert to the United States of America absolutely if the said lands, or any portion thereof, shall not be, or shall cease to be, so used and maintained by the State, or shall be alienated by said State; and in event of the violation by the State of any of the conditions or covenants herein contained, or its failure to carry out the same, then the United States may thereupon, or at any time thereafter, enter upon and into the exclusive possession of the said lands and the whole thereof and of all improvements thereon, and have, hold, seize, and possess the same, expressly excepting and reserving to the United States of America, however, all valuable mineral deposits in the said lands, together with the exclusive right to mine and remove the same, and to permit, license, or authorize the mining and removal thereof in such manner, upon such terms, and under such conditions as the Congress may prescribe; and also the right to flood or overflow the said lands, and to permit, license, or authorize the same for domestic, irrigation, and power purposes"; and

Whereas the unauthorized insertion of the said last above-named paragraph was in violation and disregard of the rights of the State of Idaho under said act of April 30, 1908, and created a burden upon the title conveyed from the United States to the State of Idaho not contemplated in said act: Now therefore be it.

IRRIGATION DITCH IN HAWAII.

Mr. CLAPP. Some time ago the bill (H. R. 11628) authorizing John T. McCrosson and associates to construct an irrigation ditch on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, was brought up for consideration. The bill was read, and the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] interposed an objection, which he has since cured by an amendment, which I am willing to accept, to the bill. I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I do not think it will lead to any debate. If it leads to any discussion, I will not ask for its consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I do not like to be put in the position of objecting, but I must insist that the passage of bills shall wait until we can get up the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming object?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was in doubt as to what the Senator from Wyoming said.

Mr. WARREN. I am in this position: Half a dozen Senators have asked me to withhold the appropriation bill until they can have bills passed. The consequence is that unless I object to bills from the calendar I shall be closed out for the day, as well as my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who is insisting upon following with the regular order. It seems to me, in justice to my committee, that I shall have to object to the further consideration of bills at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming objects.

Mr. WARREN. I move to take up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, if the morning business is closed.

Mr. JONES and Mr. McCUMBER. Is the morning business closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business has not been closed. The order of reports of committees has not been completed.

CONVEYANCES BY UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not rise to offer a bill or a resolution. I understand that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], in charge of the legislative appropriation bill, does not feel that he can now consent to the consideration of bills upon the calendar. I do not want to interfere with the progress of the appropriation bill; but I have a bill on the calendar, reported from the Judiciary Committee, for the passage of which there is the most urgent necessity. I rise simply to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 16689) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. I will explain when the time comes the reasons which require, or seem to require, the immediate consideration of the bill. It is a bill to legalize and validate conveyances made by the Union Pacific Railway Co. and its predecessors, together with the validation, or the attempted validation, of claims under adverse possession. The property owners living along the line of this railway are now suffering great hardship on account of some contingencies that have arisen respecting this right of way.

Mr. HEYBURN rose.

Mr. WARREN. As the matter is not before the Senate, I hope we shall not proceed to discuss it.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will not find any occasion for being nervous. I was going to ask the Senator from Iowa if that——

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can not be taken off the floor.

Mr. WARREN. I simply ask for the regular order.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Iowa has been permitted to give a notice, and I am going to ask him if it involves a certain matter. I may have to do it in the discussion of a tariff bill, but I will do it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is not exceedingly courteous to those who have been courteous to him.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am being courteous; but I do not like the rather rasping manner in which the Senator insisted on getting me off my feet.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator likes to have a patent on being rasping to Senators, I suppose.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator wants a personal controversy, we will take it up under the discussion of the appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. All right.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wanted to ask whether the bill referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] will include the conveyances of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. to the Northern Pacific Railway Co.?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; this relates only to the Union Pacific.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Union Pacific. The same question is involved.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; this does not involve the conveyances from one railway company to another.

Mr. HEYBURN. I only wanted to be prepared for it if it did.

Mr. CUMMINS. It only relates to conveyances made by the railroad company to private property owners adjacent to the right of way.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRIGGS:

A bill (S. 7129) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth K. Norton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 7130) to provide for the establishment of an immigration station at Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia, and the erection of a public building on a site to be selected for said station; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 7131) granting a pension to William Traugh (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 7132) granting an increase of pension to Anna Glendening (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 7133) granting an increase of pension to Ruth A. Jackson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 7134) granting a pension to Johanna N. Shelden; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BOURNE:

A bill (S. 7135) granting an increase of pension to James J. Blevans (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25069).

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the extermination of the Rocky Mountain spotted fever, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for paving the public street in Helena, Mont., in front of the Federal Government building, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $115,000 for the establishment of a light and fog signal at or near Cape St. Elias, Alaska, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing an investigation by the Good Roads Division of the Department of Agriculture into the cost of construction of a macadam road between Forts Leavenworth and Riley, in the State of Kansas, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 38) to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF AARON VAN CAMP, DECEASED (S. DOC. NO. 844).

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a memorial from the Washington Loan & Trust Co. as the administrator of the estate of Aaron Van Camp, deceased, relative to a proposed amendment submitted by me in February last to the omnibus claims bill. The memorial is very short. I ask that it lie on the table and be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

COINAGE OF THREE-CENT PIECES.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 23570) to authorize the coinage of three-cent pieces and one-half-cent pieces, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 56) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 23557) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," to strike out, on page 35, line 23, the name "Moffitt" and insert the name "Maffitt."

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the Senate agree to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of House bill 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I trust this amendment will not be adopted. It is a striking illustration of the danger of legislating in appropriation bills. Its adoption would revolutionize our entire civil-service system.

Two things should be taken into account in any legislation concerning the Government service—the method of appointment and the tenure of the employee. The civil-service law has now been in operation for 29 years. Its approval by Congress and the country at large is demonstrated by the fact that in almost every year since its enactment the list of those included under its operation has been extended, so that now, according to the last report of the Civil Service Commission, out of 391,350 officials and employees of the executive civil service, 227,657 hold positions subject to competitive examinations, an increase of 5,849 during the past year. A large majority of the positions, the incumbents of which are not chosen in accordance with the strict terms of the law, are nevertheless filled under regulations of similar import. It is hardly conceivable that we should contemplate any backward step in the enforcement of this law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator if there is anything in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Idaho that dispenses with this competitive examination?

Mr. BURTON. No. I shall speak of that briefly.

Mr. McCUMBER. It deals only with the length of service.

Mr. BURTON. It is, however, an entering wedge for undermining the whole system, because, as I have said, the tenure, as well as the method of appointment, is an essential feature of a well-regulated system of Government service. It is desirable that those who are employed by the Government should feel that they may give their whole life to it, and that in it they may find a career, if I may so call it.

If a man is appointed to a position at Washington or elsewhere, with the knowledge that at the end of 10 years his work must terminate, his interest in the faithful performance of his duties will be diminished, if not destroyed. There is now ample opportunity for those who so desire to turn aside from the Government service and enter private employment. Washington is well supplied with evening educational institutions in which a number of those in the civil service study law or medicine, or prepare themselves along other lines.

Let us first consider this proposal from the standpoint of the employees. This amendment would say to everyone, "However faithful your service may be, however devoted you may be to your work, at the end of 10 years your services will be dispensed with." Inevitably he would be looking forward to private employment, and his interest in performing his duty as a Government employee would be very materially lessened. It would be a mere temporary occupation with some outside employment in view at the end of a comparatively brief period.

Again, take it from the standpoint of the Government. A man might make himself absolutely essential to the most efficient performance of some function under the Government, yet when, at the very height of his usefulness—and with no option given to the head of the bureau or department—the 10-year term would expire and, however necessary his services might be, he would, under the proposed amendment, have to be dismissed.

I really can give little deference to the theory that the Government service should be a mere training school to fit persons for employment outside of Washington. The Government is entitled to the very best efforts of those who desire to devote themselves to the public service. If you apply this 10-year limitation to employment here at Washington, you suggest the idea that in all forms of employment it is desirable that there be but a temporary tenure. What banking institution, what manufacturing establishment, what other form of private enterprise could succeed with such a regulation as this?

There are two propositions pending—one, the House provision, to the effect that at the end of five years the employee shall go out of the service unless he is reappointed; the other, the Senate amendment, to the effect that at the end of 10 years the employee must leave the service absolutely. Of the two I think the House provision is less objectionable, because it gives the appointing officer an opportunity to continue in the service those who are efficient; but everyone knows the demoralization that would necessarily arise from such a regulation. At the end of the five-year period a perfect army would descend upon Senators and Representatives demanding influence for their retention; the appointing officer would be constantly charged with favoritism; and it would be imposing upon him a responsibility which would seriously interfere with the discharge of the duties of his office.

Still another disadvantage, and perhaps the greatest of all, is that whenever there might be a change of administration this five-year limitation would be utilized for political purposes, for turning out those of one political faith to make room for those of another, so that we would return to the inefficiency and demoralization which prevailed under the so-called spoils system.

Mr. President, I can not too strongly oppose the idea apparently entertained by many that almost any man is competent to serve the Government. Everyone who receives recommendations for appointment knows how low is the ideal of many persons, and how ready they are to recommend anyone, no matter how inferior his qualifications or achievements. They regard office under the Government as an asylum for the inefficient and for those who have failed in other lines. The whole atmosphere seems tainted with the impression that qualification, experience, and devotion to the public service are not required. This idea was very well caricatured in a French work of fiction. A woman who desired to provide for an employee a long time in her service said, "I ought to make Monsieur ——— steward of one of my estates; but, alas, he is stupid; he would eat the hay rather than make it. I know what I will do for him. I will obtain for him a place under the government. The government is the only institution that can utilize a fool." [Laughter.] So, men who have failed in private employment are the ones most frequently recommended by persons of influence to those who have the appointing power. The Government needs competent men picked from the very best; otherwise the functions of the Government will not be well performed.

I make this assertion confidently, Mr. President, that the efficiency of the different bureaus and departments of this Government can be best measured by the permanency of tenure. That is not the only criterion; in some departments there have been men of unusual administrative ability, in others, laws and regulations have been well devised to secure efficiency, but permanency of tenure has been more helpful than anything else. It is perhaps invidious to select any particular branch, for there are many which illustrate the rule, but I would mention the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, because it is the one with which I am most familiar. It is true they have the traditions of the corps, the military education at West Point, and the inspiration furnished by the records of members of their organization who have become famous; but that is not all. When any questions of construction or engineering arise in Congress the disposition is to resort to that corps. What is the reason? Because they have a life tenure; because they are removed from the uncertainties which pertain to appointments and reappointments.

I might specify other bureaus and departments of the Government and show the great extent to which efficiency has been promoted by the assurance that those engaged in the work need have no anxiety in regard to removal, but know that if they do their duty well they will be permanently retained.

What is needed in our civil service, Mr. President, is a more efficient system for rating the usefulness and efficiency of employees. I verily believe that much could be accomplished along that line. There are no doubt occasional instances in which promotion is the reward of favor. Every Senator and Representative is familiar with instances where persons who have failed of promotion come to him and say: "My chief is against me; some one else who received his recommendation for a higher salary is a favorite of his and I am discriminated against."

Mr. President, on investigation of such cases I have usually concluded that this assertion was due to an intense eagerness for personal advancement not unmixed with selfishness. Surely, if any bureaucrat shows favoritism in his recommendations for promotion he ought to be discharged at once.

Again, for the efficiency of the public service, it is evident that some provision must be made for the removal of superannuated employees in the different divisions and branches of the public service. I am quite sure that the time will come when we will all practically agree that there should be some equitable system for retirement and for civil pensions. As I understand it, the Senator from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Civil Service, with his committee, has considered this proposition, and perhaps a bill has been introduced with this in view.

There is a great deal of natural opposition to any plan for pensioning civil employees, but without doubt we must come to it, not merely for the sake of the employees, but as well for the sake of maintaining efficiency in the Government service. So, I repeat, this amendment is another illustration of the undesirability of tacking legislation upon an appropriation bill. Another committee of the Senate, with special jurisdiction, has been giving this subject very careful consideration. Whatever we may decide to do on the question of retiring Government clerks and establishing a civil-pension system should be decided only after we have received and carefully debated the recommendations of that committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia first addressed the Chair.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Beg pardon. Does the Senator from Ohio yield the floor?

Mr. BURTON. As I understand, the Senator from Georgia desires——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Georgia, thinking the Senator from Ohio had yielded the floor.

Mr. BURTON. I am ready to yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it seems to me section 5, coming to us from the House, would be a dangerous blow to the public service, and I can not believe that even enlarging the period from 5 to 10 years would substantially lessen the blow.

It is provided arbitrarily in section 5 that a civil-service employee of the Government here in Washington shall cease to hold his office at the end of five years. The head of the department can reappoint, if he desires. It says he may reappoint in case of proficiency. It does not even say he shall reappoint in case of proficiency, but it leaves it to the head of the department, in his discretion, to leave out the men or to keep them.

I agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. It seems to me essential that we should offer to the young men coming into the public service a certainty of permanency of employment in case they make good in the service. How can we hope that the bright and promising young men from the various institutions throughout the country would accept service under the Government, knowing that their tenure would end in five years, and then only at the option of the head of a department they might be continued, when we know that, as much as we desire to avoid it, it is almost impossible to resist the importunities of our constituents to call upon the heads of departments and to urge preferment for special political friends?

Instead of lessening the stringency of the civil-service rules to prevent permanency of employment, we should extend the civil service and make certain promotions based upon proficiency. I go even further. I think the assistant secretaries of the departments and the heads of the bureaus should be appointed by promotions of men in the respective departments for records of proficient service. Young men should be invited into the public civil service with a certainty of continued employment if proficient, and of promotion to the very top of the service as a reward for merit.

Now, let us see what would be the effect of section 5 upon some of the bureaus of the Interior Department, with which I am more particularly familiar. Take the Patent Office. There are very few in that bureau who are not under the civil service. Every year's service adds to the proficiency. In that bureau promotions take place all along the line, even to the highest places of examiners, and now, I am glad to say, that frequently, even in the position of commissioner, from men who have served their time and have become proficient by reason of service.

What would happen to that great bureau if the entire force under the civil service was stricken down and compelled to go out by a time limitation of service of 5 or 10 years?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely want to suggest that this amendment does not touch in any way the unlimited right of the Civil Service Commission to fill vacancies or to anticipate vacancies. There is no limit——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But I do not want the vacancies created. It is no encouragement to a man to take one of the vacancies unless he knows he will keep the office if he does good work. I think we should hold out to the young men the assurance that if they will go into the public service——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that that would be the equivalent of trading off citizenship for office. A man is willing to yield up the rights of citizenship in the section of country in which he lives for the sake of getting an office. Is that the high plane upon which the citizenship of this country should rest?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we are to have efficient service for the Government, which means for the people out of office, I would be willing for them to make the sacrifice of their citizenship to give it. Our soldiers make that sacrifice to a large extent; our Navy officers make that sacrifice to a large extent; and if we are to do through these departments the effective work for the men out of office—and I maintain that every office should be filled for the benefit of men out of office, the people at home—if we are to do for the people at home through our various departments in Washington the effective service that I think the departments can be made to render, we must have men trained for this work to serve in it, men who, if necessary, will make the sacrifice of citizenship, feeling that by rendering substantial service in these departments they are doing a high class of work as citizens.

Let us go a little further, even, in the Interior Department. Take the Geological Survey. Will you strike down every 10 years each man who has served there under the classified service? They begin at the bottom. They begin, or most of them, as boys out of college, at $500 or $600 or $700 a year. They have gradually worked on up until when I was connected with the Interior Department I had the pleasure of seeing a man made director of that bureau who had started in a subordinate place just after leaving college. You can not start a new set of men there to handle the bureau at all.

Take the Indian Service. The man who becomes familiar at the end of 10 years with the facts and history connected with a division is infinitely more capable than a new man.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is he very much more capable than the man who has been there nine or eight or seven years, who would follow him up?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If he is equally capable and equally industrious, he is 10 per cent more capable usually than the man who has been there nine years and 20 per cent more than the man who has been there eight years.

Take the Post Office Department. The people have an ambition as to the service of this department. There is a growing sentiment throughout the country that our departments in Washington are to render and should render broader service to the people out of the service.

There is but one trouble or doubt that many of us have about giving this enlarged authority. It is the doubt whether by reason of our political interference and political connection with the departments we can make a department do practical service for the public like a private corporation might do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did the Senator ever know a private corporation to adopt the civil-service system? Is not the business of this vast country conducted without a civil-service system?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think every large, well-regulated corporation adopts it and follows it strictly. I think it is followed in nearly every bank, and promotions are made in the bank according to proficiency, and the man who does good service in it understands that he will not be turned out in 5 years, and he will not be turned out in 10 years. I do not mean that promotions should be based upon length of service alone, but I do mean that length of service helps to give proficiency, and that promotions should be based exclusively upon proficiency; and that in our plan of organizing these departments we should be governed by the great and sole purpose of increasing the proficiency of the departments and strengthening the capacity of the men in the departments to render proficient public service.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. I understand the Senator to say that he would conduct these departments solely for the benefit of those outside of the departments—the general public?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. Your experience in regard to handling men has, perhaps, given you light on this matter, and I should like to inquire if you do not think it would be best and wise to commence at the other end and provide that every year 10 per cent of the deadwood, or the inefficient, shall be dropped from the service, allowing the best to work up according to their capacity?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The departments can do that now, and I am not at all prepared to say that it would not be wise to make some provision requiring a percentage of the less efficient to go out each year. I think that some such modification might be helpful, and I would not object to it at all. What I am objecting to is the arbitrary rule of cutting off all at a fixed period. I insist that——

Mr. HEYBURN. My amendment does not suggest that. It is simply like an overflowing cup; the top is passing out of the cup and being distributed again into the body of the citizenship of the country. The amendment does not contemplate and could not possibly operate so as to send all of the people out at one time. It is the ripening of the fruit, going out gradually.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Secretary please read the amendment. My criticisms have been directed especially to this section as it came from the House.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 4, after the amendment already adopted, the following:

Provided, That the tenure of office of the appointees hereafter made in the departments of Government under the civil-service law shall be limited to 10 years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I object to that as well as the House section. I would say to the young men who come into the service, "The only limit to the tenure of your office holding will be the proficiency of our service, and the only limit to your aspirations in that service, based upon your proficiency, shall be the highest place in the department or in the service, and you can devote your life to it and expect to stay there as long as you do good service; and if you will grow in proficiency and grow in strength in this service, you will be recognized and be promoted in proportion to your proficiency."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been looking at the civil service act of 1883, with which I have had some familiarity. That was an act to protect the clerks of the departments in the city of Washington. It specifically says that "appointments to the public service aforesaid in the departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the several States," and so forth, and I have been trying to recall the statute under which the President of the United States exends the civil service. Can the Senator tell me where that provision is to be found?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not.

Mr. GALLINGER. In other words, the civil service has been enlarged—I do not know to what extent—so that a great many more people, I think, are in the service now without examination, or nearly as many, as those having taken the examination. The Senator will recall that the distinguished gentleman under whom he served issued what was called a blanket order, which put a great many thousands of persons in the Government service under the civil service without examination, and I have wondered where there is to be found the statute which gives that authority. The civil-service law does not give it, and yet it is being exercised.

Now, the pretense that all the force of the Government now in office have been put there on merit is not at all well founded, because the civil service is being constantly extended by Executive proclamation, and it has seemed to me many times that it ought to be stopped.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] stated that Congress had approved of this law. Congress did approve of the original law, but I do not think it has ever been extended by Congress. That is my impression. But the extension has been simply by the stroke of the pen of the Chief Executive. I do not know that it can be remedied; I do not know that it is desirable to remedy it; and yet it strikes me that it is something we ought to think about a little in this connection.

I rose more particularly to ask the Senator from Georgia if he recalls the statute under which the President exercises that authority?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. I answer the Senator that I do not recall the statute. This broad enlargement of the classification took place, I think, in 1885.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; in 1885.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The statute was passed when?

Mr. GALLINGER. In 1883. The Executive now, and, I think, all along, or certainly in recent years, has exercised the right to put persons into the civil service by order. He suspends the civil service and puts a clerk in one of the departments. It has been done over and over again, and it seems to me——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there must be some provision which allows the President to extend the classified service, or it probably would not have been done.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is such a provision of law. I can not now refer the Senator to the particular act, but I have often read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not in the civil-service law itself.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not in the civil-service law. It is one of the faults of the civil service. I believe Congress ought to specify the employees of the Government who shall be under the civil-service rules.

I may say again that I have a bill partially prepared looking to that end. I am endeavoring to prepare a readjustment of the entrances to the civil service, promotions in the civil service, and retirements from the civil service; and as a part of that readjustment I believe that there should be a provision which shall classify the employees, describing those who are to be under this merit system, and that will take away from any officer of the Government the power either to remove a man from his position in the civil service or to include classes other than those prescribed by Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will bear with me a moment further, because I am seeking light, I recall the fact that not many years ago the President extended the civil service to fourth-class postmasters in a part of the country. It included New England, I think New York, and, I have an impression, Ohio, and possibly Pennsylvania.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it includes all the fourth-class postmasters north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi River.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, by an Executive order the fourth-class postmasters in a part of the country were put under the civil service. They were not examined. I do not know how efficient they may be or may have been when that was done. The anomalous condition exists that it was not extended to another part of the country, and we have the civil service applying to fourth-class postmasters in a certain area, and beyond that they are not under the civil service. That is the reason why I raised the question as to the authority for doing that particular thing. I think it is rather a stretch of the purpose and intent of the civil-service act of 1883.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have not given a careful study to the language of the statute to form an opinion as to just what the authority of the President is upon that subject. My knowledge of the civil-service operations is due more to my connection with the department and work under it. At the time I became connected with the Interior Department practically all the force, except the chiefs of divisions, were under the civil service. The entire clerical force and practically all the experts in the Patent Office were included under the civil service. I found the power vested in the head of the department to suspend, but only to fill vacancies by calling on the Civil Service Commission. Under a system of proficiency reports we sought to relieve the department each six months of any who failed entirely to do any class of work reasonably well, and to promote strictly according to the merit system.

Amendments no doubt can be made to the law which would improve it, but what I urge is that those changes be in the direction of improving and perfecting it as a thorough civil-service system, as a plan which invites our people to come into the public service and to make themselves proficient, with the assurance that if they do not know a Senator or Representative or have not one ounce of political influence a proficiency record will keep for them a permanent position as long as they desire to serve.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Georgia remember the average age at which civil-service employees enter the service in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own observation of three years and a half was that most of our clerks came in between 21 and 25 or 26.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have examined the subject a little, and I may say now to the Senator from Georgia that the average age is a little under 25 years. The average of the highest efficiency as shown by the record is reached between 35 and 50. That subject has been very carefully investigated. Under either the bill as passed by the House or the amendment of the Senator from Idaho the work of these civil-service employees for the Government would be limited simply to the training period, and they would be excluded entirely during the time at which they could render the most efficient service to the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I feel sure that the view expressed by the Senator from Iowa is entirely correct. As I said, my observation was that most of our new clerks came in between 25 and 26 or 27, and I am sure that 10 years does not bring the highest standard of proficiency.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; and I will yield the floor to the Senator. I really have said all I wished to say. I only wished to emphasize my earnest hope that we will do nothing which goes backward; that we will do nothing which lessens the permanency of the service, provided the service is proficient; and that we will seek to improve the law in the direction of greater certainty of promotion, based upon merit, and broaden the opportunity of promotion to the assistant secretaries' places, taking them entirely out of their present status and working out a plan for the business management of each of the departments largely through a board consisting of the assistant secretaries.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean to take the Senator from Georgia from the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had really finished. I would have concluded some little time ago if I had not been asked questions.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the question was raised as to the power of the President to make the extensions which various Presidents have done. I knew he had the authority. It is not in the act of 1883; it is in a much earlier act, when the first attempt was made. It is in the act of 1871, and is found in section 1753 of the Revised Statutes:

> SEC. 1753. The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations for the admission of persons into the civil service of the United States as may best promote the efficiency thereof, and ascertain the fitness of each candidate in respect to age, health, character, knowledge, and ability for the branch of service into which he seeks to enter; and for this purpose he may employ suitable persons to conduct such inquiries, and may prescribe their duties, and establish regulations for the conduct of persons who may receive appointments in the civil service.

It is absolutely sweeping and covers the entire power.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the conditions of that statute have ever been complied with when the civil service has been extended by Executive proclamation?

Mr. LODGE. I think so, absolutely. I think the President under that statute has power to apply regulations to any portion of the civil service, and he would have had if the act of 1883 had not been passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. That does not answer my question. My question is, Did the President ever inquire into the fitness of the 20,000 or 30,000 people who were swept into the civil service by a stroke of the pen?

Mr. LODGE. He covered officers into the civil service. Many Presidents did it. Of course, some covered into it persons who had not passed examinations. There would be no other way of covering the officers under the civil service. They had to be covered in as they stood.

Mr. GALLINGER. The President of the United States takes the place of Congress. I submit that, so far as I have been able to determine or believe, the President had never inquired into the fitness of these people who were swept into the civil service. I know President Cleveland did not when he put in 25,000 or 30,000; and I know other Presidents who followed him did not. I do not think the fourth-class postmasters had been investigated to ascertain whether they were performing their duties faithfully or well when with a stroke of the pen they were added to the civil service of the United States. Under that statute, as I recall now, because I examined it once years ago, I question very much whether the President has this sweeping power to add to the civil service 10,000 or 20,000 or 30,000 or 50,000 at one time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the extensions have been made under that act, and I do not think the legality of them has ever been disputed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to interrupt the Senator to inquire whether he has examined the question as to whether the act of 1883 does not repeal the act of 1871?

Mr. LODGE. It stands in the statutes, unrepealed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not expressly; but it might be repealed otherwise than by express terms.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think they are inconsistent. Under it all Presidents have acted. Since that time they have all made extensions, and, I believe, legally made extensions.

Mr. President, apart from that I wanted to say a single word. When I entered Congress the Pendleton Act, as it was called—the act of 1883—was only 6 years old, and we had an annual fight every year in the House about the appropriations. The House used to vote out the appropriation on the tellers' vote in committee and then put it back on the record vote. We kept that fight going for a number of years. It finally died out as the system grew and extended, and it has been accepted, as I had supposed, as a valuable system by the country and the people of the United States.

I do not for a moment suggest that the system is perfect. I know there are few things of human device that are; but it is infinitely better than any other system we have had; it is infinitely better than any system that has been proposed. Moreover, it is to be remembered that in these years since the passage of the Pendleton Act the number of persons included under the civil service has increased from 10,000 to 238,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. By Executive orders.

Mr. LODGE. No; not by Executive orders. A great many have gone in by natural increase of the offices, coming in under examination. Those offices covered by Executive order have had the usual quota of casualties, dismissals, resignations, and deaths, and then all those places have been filled by the regular examination. I do not say that an examination is an infallible touchstone, but it is better than the other system and better than any system I have seen suggested.

There are two propositions here. One is a proposition of the House, which is that at the end of every five years there is to be a general end of tenures, and those are to be retained who are thought to be efficient. That is to begin in 1917. We have a recent illustration of what that means in the Census Office, where a number of extra clerks were taken in for temporary purposes. It was expressed in the law that they were not to be transferred to the permanent service. The appropriations were reduced, of course; necessarily the work came to an end; the clerks had to be dropped. They had taken those places knowing that that would be the result. Every Senator and every Representative knows how he was beset to get the Director of the Census to keep this man or that man instead of somebody else. It was a struggle to have them held there. Take this vast service of 238,000 people, going out all the time as fast as they reach the tenure of five years, and it would be one continual struggle from Representatives and Senators to keep them in place. You can not refuse them. They come to you; they insist; their friends write; and our time would be completely absorbed in the struggle to keep the men whom we were interested in in place.

Mr. President, I believe, in the first place, that the duties of Senators and Representatives are something higher and better, if properly considered, than to hang around the lobbies of departments struggling to keep men in office or get men in routine places under the Government. That would be the result of the five-year system.

The other proposition is that at the end of 10 years a man shall go out, and go out finally. We would get rid to that extent of the demand upon Senators and Representatives to struggle to keep men in, but it would be even more destructive to the service than the five-year term, where a man could be retained for efficiency.

If we are to have a good class of men in the Government service we must give them some reasonable hope. That which tempts them now is that the pay is good in the lower grades, and they have a certainty of pay and tenure so long as they do their work well. That is one of the reasons why we get good men. If you take from them that assurance and at the end of 10 years they have to go and you are to get a class of temporary men, you are certain to injure the whole character of the service.

The weakness in the present system has just been pointed out by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. It is that the prizes you offer are not large enough. I would put in many of the higher offices, so as to encourage men with something more to look for if they remained and were successful.

I know perfectly well the weak point that arises from the superannuated clerks who have been many years in the service. I have always been opposed to the system of civil pensions. But the matter of the comparatively small number of superannuated clerks is as nothing to the injury that would be done by destroying, as I believe it would destroy, the character of the entire service if you give them only a limited tenure. A limited tenure was the characteristic of the old spoils system. The old spoils system, as it was called, was bad enough in the days when the civil service was small and embraced a few thousand persons; but it is not to be contemplated that with the enormous service of to-day we could apply the old system of appointment by favortism or by political pressure.

Moreover, Mr. President, in my judgment the people in the service to-day have some rights to be considered. There is a great mass of men, for example, who have entered the carrier service; there is another great body of men who have entered the Railway Mail Service. They are men who expect to make it, and in the large percentage of instances they do make it, their life work. Those are services that are under continual examination and are continually being weeded for inefficiency or for misconduct. Those men are to be suddenly told at the end of 10 years they are all to go, or at the end of 5 years they have to make a struggle to hold their places.

The Railway Mail Service, Mr. President, is a difficult and expert service, by no means free from danger. Should there be an accident on a railroad train or an accident on an ocean steamer, among those who suffer loss of life or limb are pretty sure to be some of the mail clerks. It is a peculiar business, requiring great expertness. The railway mail clerks, as I say, are under continual examination, for their errors in sorting mail are noted from day to day. Most of them sort with such accuracy that they make not more than 1 or 2 per cent of errors during long periods. Many of them go long periods with no percentage of errors. It is not work that is done in any other business outside of the Government. These men take the work and remain in the service for life, or so long as they are able to do the work; and when they can not longer work on the cars they are frequently transferred to office work. Should we take those men, who have given years to a business where their proficiency increases with their service, and turn them out suddenly, or turn them out year by year—for it would mean many hundreds going out each year—and put in practically new men, it is impossible to suppose that the public service would be helped thereby, and it would be a great injustice to the men themselves.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I made the statement that I felt that all these places should be filled in the interest of the public not in office. I do not want to be misunderstood by that. I agree fully with the Senator from Massachusetts. I think the interests of the public out of office requires such treatment of the men in office as to secure proficient and capable men. If we simply sacrifice them at the end of 10 or 15 years, after they have become expert in our service and unsuited to anything else, we should offer no inducement to get good men to go into the service, and the public outside of the service would be seriously injured.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely, Mr. President. The Senator from Georgia had put so strongly and so well the point that the first object was the public service and to get for the public the best service that I only touched on that, and was trying to bring out another point which had impressed me very much, and that was the injustice to these large bodies of men in the mail-carrier service and the Railway Mail Service. They are all men under examination, and these are both immense branches of the service. We must all realize the injustice to those men of suddenly saying to them—men in many cases with families, who have established their homes, who have married on the belief that, if they did their duty well, they were sure of that income and of that work—that at the end of 10 years they are out. Think of it! We all know the inconvenience of getting new men on a carrier route in a State or wherever the carrier service is established.

I take these because they are very large branches of the civil service; but, Mr. President, if we have to do something to meet the superannuation difficulty—it is a trifle compared to what is involved in maintaining the general character of the civil service of the United States—we can meet it. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has here a most excellent bill, which he has prepared with the greatest possible care, to meet that difficulty; but to throw down the whole service because there is a small number of superannuated clerks would be in the highest degree unadvisable and unwise.

Mr. President, as I said at the beginning, and I repeat, it is no longer a question of dealing with a few thousand clerks, but it affects the whole Government service. The limitation of tenure, it seems to me, would be fatal to the entire classified service as it now exists.

Mr. HEYBURN. Before the Senator from Massachusetts takes his seat, I desire merely to make a suggestion. The amendment which I have offered does not deal with those now in office at all, so the question of superannuation would be cut off at the line.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, the objection I have to the Senator's amendment is the objection that I have to fixed tenures. I think the tenure of office ought to depend on the clerk's proficiency or his ability to do his work, and on nothing else.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why not apply that to the President or to Senators?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, Mr. President, that is the old joke that is always made in the other House. I have heard it made a thousand times.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not make it as a joke.

Mr. LODGE. They are officers elected by the people, while these are routine officers who are put in office to carry on the Government. They should be chosen just as similar employees are chosen in every business—on account of their proficiency. There is not a great corporation in the country to-day carrying on business—I am speaking of the overhead men—that does not have a practical examination for its clerks all the time. Most corporations pension them after they have reached a high point or have grown to be old men. There is not a corporation on earth which would consent to employ men merely on the recommendation of Senators and Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Surely, Mr. President, some common-sense way of solving this difficulty without either bringing back upon ourselves the spoils system or bringing upon ourselves a senseless civil-service pension list ought to be within the limits of the capacity of the National Legislature. There is no desire, I take it, certainly there is none upon my own part, to bring back upon our defenseless heads the office-hunting brigades that used to make public life intolerable. Even now I find that the one-fifth of 1 per cent of the Mississippians who happen to live in Washington take a great deal more of my time in one way or another than the 99⅘ per cent of Mississippians who are living in Mississippi. I have no desire to bring back the spoils system; neither has anybody else, I take it.

I think I have ciphered out a way whereby we can maintain the civil-service law in all of its good attributes and at the same time not build up a permanent segregated office-holding class who are to be taken care of, as superannuation accumulates, by a special pension list. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] went on to tell about the efficiency of the Engineer Corps. What he said about them was true; but if there were not behind the permanency of tenure of the Engineer Corps a retirement pay and retirement list, what he said would not have been true. It all rests upon the fact that after an officer in the Engineer Corps has spent his life in that sort of work, he spends his old age, when he is helpless, at the expense of the Government. You must make up your minds whether you are willing to extend that principle—which, for my part, I am willing to extend to Army and Navy officers, to people in the Revenue-Cutter Service, to firemen and to policemen, who are engaged in dangerous pursuits—in the actual physical defense of the public—whether you are willing to extend that system to mere clerks, who are already getting nearly twice as much, as a rule, as the average farmer, carpenter, blacksmith, or country preacher in the United States—do not forget that—and who ought to be able to save out of their annual salaries as much as the blacksmith, carpenter, or country preacher can save out of his.

One of the Senators said this morning that length of service and proficiency went together. They do not. They do in private employment, because if I have a man in my employment he knows that I may discharge him to-morrow morning and is therefore careful, diligent, and industrious. Therefore the very fact that I keep him for years is rather a demonstration of the fact that he has been efficient, but whenever you put a man in a place where he thinks that he can not be discharged, it makes him indifferent and careless, and if he thinks he can not be discharged except for public cause, publicly stated, with an opportunity to be tried, it makes him indifferent and careless.

Mr. President, in arguing this question—and I am just entering the argument—there is no attempt in the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] and no attempt in the House provision, either, to interfere with the civil service in its right of appointment to entry into the public service—not a particle.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one second. Let us get this out of our minds; let us get what we are not discussing out of our minds before we discuss what constitutes a point of difference. Neither the amendment of the Senator from Idaho nor the House provision interferes in the slightest degree with the public examinations or with the present system of entry into the public service. So that everything that has been said along that line is obiter dictum, so far as that is concerned. Nor does either one of these provisions interfere with the right upon the part of the departmental chiefs to reappoint men to the public service—not even the provision proposed by the Senator from Idaho, which I think is faulty, and in a moment I will undertake to state why.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, that is the point I had in mind. Does not——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho disqualify the employees and make it impossible to reappoint them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. Purposely not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It fixes the term arbitrarily at 10 years, does it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then, I do not understand it as the Senator does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I read it, there is nothing in it to interfere with the reappointment of these employees; but I am not in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho and therefore, except to point out the defects in connection with it, I do not desire to enter into that.

My only objection to the House provision is that it leaves a gap in the civil-service law big enough for a coach and four to pass through, and unless a modification or an amendment can be suggested whereby the five years' tenure can be harmonized with a nonpartisan and nonpolitical public service I would not advocate it.

I think I have succeeded in my scheme, to be explained in a moment, in doing that; but before I pass to that, Mr. President, I want to say that I would vote any day in the world for an old-age pension; I would vote for it in Mississippi, as a member of the legislature there, if I were one, or I would vote for it for the District of Columbia as a Member of Congress here, constituting the legislature for the District of Columbia; but I will not vote to segregate in a class by themselves the employees of the Government who receive 100 per cent more pay than men equally deserving or more deserving than themselves—hearty, self-dependent, working people everywhere—blacksmiths, carpenters, painters, preachers. I will not now vote, and I never shall vote, to segregate this office-holding class and make it the pet of the United States Government in giving old-age pensions to them, while we do not give old-age pensions to other people equally deserving or more deserving.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is right when he says that if the present system is perpetuated you must go to a civil-service pension list. You must either change it, or that is the necessary mathematical result; and you can not avoid it, because superannuation accumulates day by day and week by week and month by month in the public service under the present system, and it accumulates not only arithmetically, but geometrically. I say that is a great wrong in principle, in spirit, in ethics; it is a special privilege for which no Democrat could stand, and for which no Republican who stands upon an equality of opportunity platform ought to stand. That is demonstrable.

How are you going to avoid it? You must avoid it, if you avoid it at all, by limiting the tenure of office to a time certain. How shall you do that and at the same time harmonize it with the civil-service regulations of the country?

Mr. President, we all know how the Government employees live here. They have been fed upon the hope of having the Government of the United States take care of them in their old age; they have been fed upon that hope so long that hardly one in a hundred of them tries to save a dollar. Men elsewhere who earn half as much grow rich, or grow comfortable, at any rate—not rich. But these people spend up to the top notch. I am personally acquainted with four or five who have saved money, bought homes, and paid for their homes, and who to-morrow could be discharged without being ruined; but the great majority of them can not be; and the superannuated hang like barnacles upon the very bottom of the ship. Worse than an encumbrance upon the deck of the ship, they hang like barnacles to the bottom, and prevent its progress through the seas of public business. Oh, you can not get rid of them; you will have to take care of them, unless you change the system. You must either pension them upon the public service at full salary or you have got to create a retired pension list at half or three-quarters salary; and both are wrong; both constitute a special privilege extended to the office-holding brigade. Why should I vote to give public pensions to one-fifth of 1 per cent of the voting population of the State of Mississippi who happen to be in Washington holding public office, while the 99⅘ per cent at home have no such right or privilege?

Now, let me go ahead a moment. I want to keep the time tenure and prevent the breach of the civil service. This is the way that I think we can do it, and I ask the attention of the Senate because this is a matter of practical business: I would strike from the House provision so much of it as follows the semicolon in line 1, page 153, reading as follows:

And the employment of all persons in the classified service of the executive departments within the District of Columbia, at annual rates of compensation, who were appointed prior to July 1, 1912, shall cease and determine, unless previously separated from the service, on the 30th day of June, 1917.

I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] nor with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who has so eloquently described his experience as Secretary of the Interior. I do not agree with either one of them that a man in office has any vested right to the office at all; but I do acknowledge a certain degree of human sympathy with a man when he is there; and, therefore, I am willing not to interfere with the fellows who are already in. The object of striking out what I have read is not to interfere with those who are already in.

I would then adopt section 5, except that after the words "Provided, That all persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall be eligible," and so forth, I would insert this language:

Provided, That all persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall, except as hereinafter prescribed, be eligible for, and may, in the discretion of the head of the executive department, be reappointed," etc.

Then, in line 12, I would strike out the word "fair," and I would make it read in this way:

May * * * be reappointed—

I am reading now the House provision—without examination for additional periods of five years, if at the time of such reappointment they shall be up to a standard of efficiency prescribed by the Civil Service Commission.

The prescription by the Civil Service Commission is a part of my amendment.

I would adopt the balance of that. Then I would add to it the Senate committee's provision. I have said there, "prescribed by the Civil Service Commission." I have said, on line 8, "except as hereinafter prescribed." Now, this is what is "hereinafter prescribed":

SEC. 4. The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact.

I would add to that the language of the Senate committee:

Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted.

I would add, after the word "promoted," the words—

Or before he may be reappointed at the end of his five years of service.

I would add, after that, a provision that any employee having this maximum rating should be reappointed to a place in the service, and any man falling below the minimum rating should go out. Then, between those two, I would leave the matter as in the Senate amendment and in the House provision.

In order to accord the two with one another, of course you would strike out lines 14, 15, 16, and 17 in the Senate amendment, because they are already in the House provision. That is the provision for taking care of the old soldiers.

As between the Scylla of the spoils system and the Charybdis of a civil-service pension, who wants the civil-service pension? In God's name, have we not pensions enough? We have one hundred and forty millions a year of military and naval pensions; and it is proposed to add a civil-service pension list, which, take my word for it, in the life of a generation, 33 years, will amount to almost as much as the military and naval pensions. Besides that, there will be a constant pressure brought to bear upon Senators and Members of the House by the civil employees of the Government, asking them, year after year and year after year, to raise the salaries and likewise to raise the retirement pay.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? Speaking of civil-service employees' pensions, how does the Senator feel about a contributory-pension system?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the long run it amounts to exactly the same thing. If the employees want to pension themselves, they can go to work and form annuity societies and attend to it by themselves. But if you are going to provide for the employees contributing from their salaries, then either they will contribute that which they do not need as salary or they will contribute that which they do need. If they contribute that which they do not need, and which they ought not to have, then they are being paid too much. If they contribute that which they do need, then you and I will have to raise their salaries. And they will not have been engaged for one session of Congress in the business of contributing to retire themselves upon pensions before they will be coming to you and me and asking us to raise their salaries by the amount of their contribution. The Senator knows that as well as I do. I think we both know it. I mean by that, while we do not absolutely know it, we both think it, do we not? So it is the same thing in the long run.

In one of the little towns right near my home lives an old Mexican War soldier, an old Confederate soldier, who has grown old at the blacksmith business. Will you tell me why some chipper little girl or some great, strong, stalwart boy here in Washington should ultimately have an old-age pension after having received nine hundred or a thousand or twelve hundred or fourteen hundred and forty or eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars a year when that old fellow, who, I suppose, never earned over $750 a year in his life, should not have one? He has done more honorable service, he has lived a harder life in every respect, than any of these people. And, by the way, he has paid all the time such little taxes as he had to pay. He has been a taxpayer; these people have been tax eaters.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I suggest to the Senator that not only will this blacksmith not receive a pension, but he will be called upon to pay the pensions of these other people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, absolutely, absolutely. And if in his old age he should fall by the wayside, while in the particular case I am talking about it would not happen, because he has very dear children, daughters and sons, and friends as well, that would take care of him to the limit, yet cases like that exist where the man must go to the poorhouse.

Mr. WARREN. I suppose in that particular case the old soldier draws a pension as the result of having served in the Mexican War, does he not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He draws, I suppose—what is it; $12 a month?

Mr. WARREN. Twenty dollars a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know whether he does or not. I doubt if the old fellow ever asked for it. I imagine he was a good deal like my grandmother in that respect. When Maj. Pickett came around and said, "Mrs. Sharp, you have a right to draw a pension, because Capt. Sharp was an officer in the Federal Army in the Mexican War." She said, "Maj. Pickett, I will have you to understand, sir, that Capt. Sharp never fought for money." And I doubt if this old fellow ever drew a pension in his life, but about that I do not know.

We can fix this, and I think if Senators will run over what I have proposed they will find that it does fix it. It takes the House provision, with amendments, and grafts upon it the Senate provision, with some modifications to accord the two with one another, and it adds this idea of which I have spoken.

I will say to Senators the main idea in the amendment is that all employees shall go in, prima facie, upon a five-year tenure; that at the end of the five-year tenure the men who fall below the minimum rating shall go out; that the men who make the maximum rating shall be reappointed; and that the men between the two ratings shall be left largely to the judgment of the appointing officer, as they must be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One word further and I will yield to the Senator.

My objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho is that outside of the point of doubt as to whether it does not absolutely exclude them from reappointment anyhow—I do not think it does; if it does, that is a very serious objection to it—it does not contain any provision requiring or advising or recommending reappointment where the man is fit for reappointment.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been much interested in what the Senator has said in his analysis of the pending amendment and the changes he suggests. I will ask the Senator if he has his proposed amendment written out so that we may see it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have it here written out in the bill. I just got in this morning from Charlottesville, Va., and wrote it very rapidly, but I will get it ready and give notice of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course it would properly be a substitute for the pending amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am going to offer it as a substitute; but I will not take the time of the Senate to put it in shape right now.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator from Mississippi that it is too late to offer it now in Committee of the Whole, but it can be offered when we get in the Senate. I wish the Senator would have it put in typewritten form.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; then I will do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is quite desirable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I may not have made all of its details perfectly plain, but I have made the idea of it plain to all of us. It reads:

> All persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall, except as hereinafter prescribed, be eligible for reappointment.

The words "hereinafter prescribed" refer to those falling below the minimum rating.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to say to the Senator from Wyoming, as well as to the Senator from Mississippi, that I recognize that the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi entirely reorganizes the civil service.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to have the amendment printed and laid over until to-morrow, because there will be a very considerable debate if the entire system is to be reorganized. I have been studying the subject now for two years, and I have a bill before the Senate with regard to the retirement of civil-service employees, upon which I expected to address the Senate at some time. If I am called into it now, it will inevitably take very considerable time.

Mr. WARREN. I appreciate what the Senator wishes; but if it has taken so long to get the matter, it would be perfectly hopeless to undertake to get it arranged here in a day. If the Senator could have his amendment put into typewritten form and have several copies made of it, so that Senators could examine it, perhaps we could get along in that way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will tell you what I will do about that. I want to go on now with what I was saying, but I will step over to the office as soon as I am through and draw the amendment and bring it back; and I ask permission now to offer it. I will hand it to the clerk later and give notice of it and have it published in the RECORD.

I want to go on talking about this general subject for just a minute or two, and then I will relieve the Senate of any further trouble upon my account.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he thinks the standard of efficiency prescribed there would get rid of those who are enfeebled and rendered incompetent through age.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely, because it is a standard of efficiency; and for whatever reason newly appointed employees were inefficient they would fall below the minimum rating and be automatically discharged.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. So that we would not have dead timber in the departments?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No dead timber, except the dead timber we already have. I propose to let that stay in and die out. It will have to die out.

In my opinion this is a larger question than Senators think. It is not a question which merely concerns either the people who at this time are holding the offices, or the people who at this time are not holding the offices. I think the great danger to American institutions, just at this moment, is the danger of bureaucracy.

I find that we are carrying on just about as much legislation by departmental and bureau regulation as we are enacting in the halls of legislation in the Capitol itself. From a stay of nearly three years in my boyhood in the Empire of Germany I have learned to distrust a bureaucratic government. I have learned to distrust a segregated, separated, office-holding class, who do not hold their offices by election from the people, who do not hold them for any given length of time, but who hold them by appointment upon substantially a life tenure.

Nobody in the world has a greater contempt for the American people or American politics and public questions to-day than a lot of clerks in the city of Washington. They think that, as far as they are concerned, they are a privileged class; and they are right in thinking so if you are going to pass a civil-service pension law, because then they will be legally a privileged class.

For myself, it seems to me Thomas Jefferson was not very far wrong when he contended that those who held the offices of the Republic and those who formed the private citizenship of the Republic should be changing places right frequently.

It is a very good idea for a man to come and hold office here in Washington, and, as the Senator from Georgia says, to keep on holding it as long as he is efficient. But when he becomes inefficient either by carelessness or by intemperance or by superannuation or for any other reason, for him to regard that office as his is a curse. He ought not to be permitted to entertain the idea for a minute, and no class of the American people ought to be permitted to entertain the idea.

As for myself, I am a radical about some things. I do not think there is a State in the Union, I do not think there is a country in the world, that ought not to have an old-age pension law to take care of and preserve its honest, industrious people who in their old age can not take care of themselves. But I am not willing to segregate an office-holding class and make that sort of provision for them, while not making it for everybody else.

I will have the amendment drawn up, Mr. President. I apologize to the Senate for not having it ready; but I got in on the train just a few minutes before the debate began. I will bring it back in a short time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think every Senator is desirous of having an efficient public service, and where they differ is as to the method which will bring about such a service.

I have never heard any man who is familiar with the administration of the Government under the so-called civil-service rules and with its operations under the spoils system who did not agree that we have a better service at present than we had under the old plan.

I listened to the argument of the Senator from Idaho yesterday when he made his strong plea for the scheme of bringing people to Washington to serve as Government employees for a limited period, during which they shall acquire an education beneficial to themselves and which they can use upon their return home for the good of their neighbors and the people with whom they come in contact. It seemed to me the Senator lost sight of the real object the Government has in employing clerks at all. That object is not to give employment to men and women; it is not to educate its clerks except in the line of their employment and to the end that they may be able to render better service to the Government. The real object of such employment is to make better servants, to the end that the Government can be more efficiently administered. I do not think it is the business of the Government to encourage as many people as possible to enter its service, for an office-holding class is, I agree, most undesirable. Still we must have Government workers, and they should at once be as few and as efficient as possible, and therefore those few should be most capable, and they should be offered every inducement to stay as long as they are highly efficient. I can not see anything but harm which can come to the country by having a fixed tenure of office less than the one which can be terminated only by misbehavior or inefficiency.

My experience here compels me to agree with the senior Senator from Idaho in this, that under existing conditions public office holding is not conducive to highest personal development or to best citizenship. But that condition would be no better under his proposed changes; it is office holding and not its tenure which is demoralizing. The glamor and excitement of public office in the capital, even when indulged for a season, seem to unfit for the quieter and yet more important pursuits of life, and I am not encouraging young men to enter the employment of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside until the appropriation bill we have just been discussing is disposed of.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I rise to an inquiry. Would that unanimous consent be taken as any limitation on the right to move to take up the next appropriation bill when this is completed? I certainly intend to make that motion. If so, I object to that form of a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SIMMONS. I presume that immediately upon the conclusion of the pending appropriation bill the unfinished business would be proceeded with, and if the Senator from Minnesota wished to antagonize it with another appropriation bill, he could do so.

Mr. LODGE. The unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. It is not business disposed of, and it comes up automatically.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Automatically. It is not necessary to make a motion to that effect; it would be the regular order.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I can think of nothing much more pathetic than the scenes which are witnessed here in Washington nearly every day, produced by employees of the Government trying to hold positions in the public service when once in or trying to obtain them when out. This does not apply alone to clerks, but it applies to men in all the public offices. The officeholder becomes a sort of political toper. Having acquired the abnormal taste, it is difficult for him to break off; and the more uncertain the tenure by reason of possible political interference, the more violent he is in his desires.

It seems to me that under the plan of a limited or fixed tenure we would have a still larger class of people who ought not to be in the service; and yet the needs of government require that it shall have good and capable employees well qualified for the work; and about the only way to secure the highest efficiency is through experience.

Therefore, if I understand the committee provision, it attempts to secure high efficiency by providing a way to eliminate the inefficient clerks, whether produced by old age or by other disqualifying causes.

The great difficulties in maintaining an efficient civil service is to get rid of and keep out unfit people. The latter has been greatly aided by the civil-service law. The former still remains, and Members of Congress frequently aggravate this difficulty. They too often urge upon the departments the retention of unworthy people and insist that such shall not be discharged. I know it is unpopular, but I believe that we would have a better public service if no Congressman could exercise any influence over it.

I agree with the Senator from Mississippi in that. I am not in favor of civil pensions, certainly not until through the failure of all regulative methods it is found that the public service demands them. I want the Government to pay its employees good wages—generous wages; and then I want these clerks to understand that neither old age nor improvidence will prompt the Government to do for them what they have failed to do for themselves, namely, provide against the disabilities of age or failing efficiency.

Mr. President, I indorse practically the arguments which were made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. It seems to me that he has covered the case. Certainly he has done better than I can hope to do. But I did not wish this measure to pass from the consideration of the Senate until I had at least gone on record in favor of the most efficient civil-service law possible, because I have in mind not the effect upon the employees, but the effect upon the Government. We, as temporary managers of this great business of government, will not be excusable for doing less or different than the industrial manager of his business. He would not discharge a good man because he had served a fixed period, but he would hold out every inducement for the man to remain so long as he performed his duty acceptably.

We do not need civil pensions so much as we need efficient, hopeful, and contented Government employees, and no limits should be placed upon their tenure other than those of incompetency and unfitness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee as it has been heretofore amended.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, referring to the amendment suggested by the committee and the general subject which has been under discussion, it seems to me that the question which confronts the Congress is whether or not we shall devise some system by which employees, when they reach the incompetent period of life, when they can no longer work, shall be retired, and the method of their retirement. I do not think there is any doubt but what the departments now are filled with a good deal of what is termed "deadwood," and there is pressure being brought to bear on Congress in the organization of clerks and the lobbies they employ to get a civil-pension list established. The strongest argument that is being made for a civil-pension list is the fact that the departments are full of employees who have grown old and are incapable of rendering efficient service, and the older the service becomes, the longer the time which elapses since the establishment of the civil-service system, the more congested will the departments be with these incompetent old clerks.

As between a term and a civil-pension list, I should favor the term of service. I do not believe that the people of the United States are under obligations to keep during the remainder of their lives men who have had generous compensation for their services while they were in good health. I am in thorough accord with the expression of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] when he says that if the time comes when it is deemed desirable to put on the pension roll the aged employees of the Government, who have been receiving liberal compensation during the years and years in which they have been employed, he will vote to put every man and woman on the pension roll when they reach the same period and the same condition in life.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the question debated by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] further than to say that in my opinion it is not true that the alternative is either term employment or a civil pension. I am as much opposed to a civil pension as the Senator from Mississippi can possibly be. I believe, however, in a contributory system which will compel the employees themselves to create a fund for their old age. I believe that the law ought to compel the retirement of civil-service employees at a given age.

I hope, however, that the amendments which are now before the Senate will not be disposed of upon the theory that they must be adopted in order to avoid a civil-service pension. When that question comes before the Senate, I am sure another alternative will be presented that will meet the approval of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee as it has been amended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the committee amendment been amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was amended by an amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] by the addition of words which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 154, line 17, after the word "dropped," insert "or reduced in rank or salary."

Mr. CUMMINS. What has happened to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been defeated.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the amendment of the committee, known as section 4, as it has been amended by the words just read by the Secretary.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 133, in line 17, after the word "law," I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the compensation of not to exceed five special agents provided for in this paragraph may be fixed at an amount not to exceed $8 per day.

That refers to the census. In going over the matter we overlooked the fact that there are 20 of that class of inspectors, and it is necessary to retain some of them. Therefore the five are specified, at an amount not to exceed $8 a day.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 2, line 22, I move to strike out the words "first assistant librarian," and in line 19, after the word "each," to insert:

First assistant librarian, $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 2, line 17, after the word "bookkeeper," I move to insert "assistant journal clerk"; and, in the same line, to strike out of the committee amendment the words "one clerk" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "two clerks"; and on the same page, in line 23, to strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the following amendments, which are necessary to make two appropriation bills—the District of Columbia and the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bills—conform.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 148 add, at the end of line 17, the following proviso:

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1912, the surplus fees collected by the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall be deposited in the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 148 I move to add, at the end of line 12, the following proviso:

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1912, the fees collected by the clerk of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia shall be deposited in the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. That completes the committee amendments, but there is pending an amendment which I offered individually, referring to the physicist, and which we laid over for the time being.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to offer an amendment. I think the chairman has agreed to accept it, and it will be in the nature of a committee amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Shall we not dispose of the other first?

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The SECRETARY. On page 141, line 22, after the words "four thousand eight hundred dollars" insert:

Physicist, qualified in optics, $4,000.

On page 142, line 23, strike out "$236,340" and insert in lieu thereof "$240,340."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the following amendment, which I understand to be accepted by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 152, line 3, after the word "service," insert the following:

Provided, That no part of any money appropriated in lump sum in this act shall be available for the payment of personal services as salary in excess of that paid during the fiscal year 1912, and no salary shall be increased by transfer from said lump sum.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the amendment read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will add to it the words "except by promotion."

Mr. WARREN. "Except by regular promotion."

Mr. OVERMAN. "Except by regular promotion." I did have those words in the amendment, but the clerk left them out in copying it.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear those words in the first reading of the amendment, and therefore asked to have it again read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was going to add them myself. I have modified the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words will be added. The Secretary will read the amendment as perfected.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That no part of any money appropriated in lump sum in this act shall be available for the payment of personal services as salary in excess of that paid during the fiscal year 1912, and no salary shall be increased by transfer from said lump sum, except by regular promotion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 11, line 9, after the word "at," I move to strike out "$1,200" and insert instead thereof "$1,440." My purpose in offering that is because I feel the present arrangement is utterly unequal and unfair. Our stenographers render an infinite amount of service and are employed long after we adjourn. With a compensation of $1,200 they are receiving no more than the man who sits at a door as doorkeeper. I feel in sheer justice to the stenographers this amendment should be adopted, making it $1,440.

Mr. WARREN. I shall have to make the point of order against that amendment. It is not reported from any committee.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LODGE. And not estimated for.

Mr. WARREN. It is not estimated for, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Acting upon that statement of fact, the Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to offer an amendment on page 9, line 12.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to inquire upon what ground the point of order is made.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment is subject to several points of order. Of course it is not estimated for. It was not printed and sent to a committee a day in advance, as the rule requires, and it has not been reported favorably by any committee.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was not reported, I confess, but I consulted the chairman of the committee regarding it some days ago, and he felt that it was a matter of fairness and justice. I feel that the techincal point of order is uncalled for.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Do I understand that it is ruled out because we have not yet finished the committee amendments, or do I understand that no modification of any appropriation or any provision of the bill can obtain until it has come into the Senate? Have we finished the committee amendments?

Mr. WARREN. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. The committee amendments have been acted upon.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, do I understand, the bill being in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment, that no modification of any of the appropriations provided for in the bill can be made on the floor without being submitted to a committee and the committee passing upon it?

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President; but we have to act on amendments as they come up.

Mr. CULBERSON. My inquiry was due to the fact that the Senator from Wyoming suggested that the amendment was out of order because it had not been reported by a committee. If true, that would have the effect of saying that an individual Senator could not propose an amendment to an appropriation bill, and that is what I object to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. Of course I understand what is in Rule XVI that the Senator wants to read.

Mr. LODGE. The rule is perfectly clear. This is a proposition to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, and it is not in order. The rule reads:

Unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

This has none of those qualifications and is an increase proposed. It is clearly out of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Not on the point suggested by the Senator from Wyoming, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the ground upon which he announced his ruling was that stated by the Senator from Wyoming, that it is an increase not estimated for. The RECORD will show that that was the statement made by the Senator from Wyoming.

The Senator from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I propose an amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read, as the foundation of what I desire to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 12, after the word "gallery," strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Before the Senator objects, I desire to make a statement. I confess I have never become familiar with the rule which the Senator from Wyoming has invoked. I have been in this Chamber a great many times when propositions of this kind have been considered without objection. It is no excuse possibly for me that I did not know it was necessary to prepare an amendment and submit it in writing several days in advance in order to have it receive consideration, because that rule has not been followed. It may be invoked possibly on an occasion of this kind.

The proposition which I have to offer, Mr. President, is to increase the salary of the superintendent of the press gallery, and I had hoped to follow it with another one increasing the salary of the assistant superintendent and of the messenger of the press gallery. I thought from the statement that had been submitted to me that these were most desirable amendments to be made, and I supposed it would be in order for me to present them when committee amendments had been disposed of.

I offer this amendment, realizing of course under the previous ruling of the Chair that if the rule is invoked it must go out on a point of order. I present the amendment, however.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey will state his point of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not see wherein the amendment of the Senator from Michigan differs from mine.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is right. These matters, if the Senator from Michigan will think of it, should come before the committee in a regular way and be considered; but the chairman of a committee of 17 does not feel that he can permit all kinds of raises to be made that have not heretofore been considered by a single member of the Committee on Appropriations. It is necessary in order to protect these bills to have matters come in in the regular way. Of course, if they had been estimated for they would have come within the rule. I propose to be liberal. I will say to the Senator that I have already supported heretofore two or three increases of salary of the officers he speaks of, and it is only to preserve the correct order of business that I make the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let the Chair state the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Chair had sustained the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not ruled on it. The Senator from New Jersey has made a point of order which the Chair sustains. There is another amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. OVERMAN. Along this line I propose to say the committee worked on this bill for some 10 days and nights. The bill carries $1,400,000 less than the departments estimated for; it carries $1,600,000 less than the last legislative, etc., appropriation bill. We have gone over all these items and we have failed to allow this $1,400,000 that was estimated for. Though the committee have examined all these matters and carefully gone over them, an amendment is introduced here that has had no consideration. I think the wisdom of the rule is shown. There is no telling where we would land if we did not make the point of order against such amendments, that they have not been considered or that they have not been estimated for by the department.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I should like to know the status of the amendment which I proposed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is now in order. The reading was suspended while the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was making the statement which he has just made. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 13, after the word "gallery," it is proposed to strike out "$1,400" and to insert "$1,600."

Mr. WARREN. As to that amendment I make the same point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming makes the point of order that this amendment is out of order upon the grounds already stated. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 1, after the word "correspondents," it is proposed to strike out "$900" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I make the point of order——

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Michigan how many amendments he has offered?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Three.

Mr. WARREN. I make the same point of order on the amendment just offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming makes the point of order on the amendment just offered, on the grounds already stated. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] expresses his approval of the rule and thinks it has worked admirably just at this time. In looking over pages 3, 4, and 5 of the bill, in which I see liberal increases in compensation to the men employed by the big standing committees and certain other places controlled by certain Senators, I am impressed with the fact that it is unfortunate that the rule prevented the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] from having a chance to take care of the clerks of some of the Senators who are not chairmen of committees.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not contend that it is any violation of the rule to insert these provisions, does he?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I expressed my disagreement with the Senator's statement that the rule worked well.

Mr. OVERMAN. The rule works well, because the Senate has created these offices and appropriated for them for years, and the Committee on Appropriations are only carrying out current law. If any mistake has been made it has been made by the Senate heretofore. If the Senator desires to propose to decrease the appropriations it is in order for him to do so. He may move to strike out any appropriation here. That would be in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I was doing, Mr. President, was calling attention to the fact that the committee seemed all through pages 3, 4, and 5 to have taken care of the compensation of the forces of Senators where they have a number of them, and I could not help feeling that it was unfortunate that the rule did not allow Senators not upon the Committee on Appropriations and not chairmen of other committees to take care of some of their employees. I was just disagreeing with the Senator's statement that the rule worked so well in the present instance. It does work well in a certain way, but the real question is whether or not that way is very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate rule works well for the Senator from Georgia if he desires to move to decrease any of these amounts, and if he thinks anyone is getting too much salary he may move to reduce it. Let him move to strike out and the rule will protect him. Any Senator has a right to move to strike out or to reduce a salary; but he has not a right to stand here upon the floor, after a matter has been before the committee, and impeach the wisdom of that rule. There are over 90 Senators here, and if we should adopt a different system every one of them will have amendments to offer, and the thing will be endless.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was calling attention to the fact that it did not need action on the floor to take care of the increased pay of the employees of Senators who had committees; but it seems to me unfortunate that the rule works so as to take care of their assistants and to exclude those of the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I now move an amendment to come in on page 61, line 19. I desire to restore the figures of the current law as to three salaries in the office of the assistant treasurer at Boston—the paying teller from $2,250 to $2,500, the clerk from $2,000 to $2,200, and the vault clerk from $1,800 to $2,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has that been estimated for?

Mr. WARREN. I was about to ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WARREN. I think it has not been estimated for.

Mr. LODGE. I am afraid it has not been estimated for.

Mr. WARREN. Then I will make the same point of order against that amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I would——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I would like to inquire——

Mr. LODGE. I still have the floor, I think, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. To whom does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. I do not yield, Mr. President, because I wish to offer another amendment, which is not open to the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had not ruled on the point of order made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the amendment just offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]; but the Chair now sustains the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Chair had ruled on the point of order. I anticipated his ruling, however; it is a necessary judgment. I move to strike out, on page 109, the language from line 6 to line 19——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to finish this amendment, which has nothing to do with the rule.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wanted to recur to the previous amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Let me finish this amendment, and then the Senator can recur to it.

I wish to strike out from line 6 to line 19, on page 109, the language relating to the office of Superintendent of the Capitol Building and to insert the same words on page 13, before the words "Capitol police."

The purpose of the amendment is to transfer the Superintendent of the Capitol and the public buildings and grounds about the Capitol where they ought to be, under the control of Congress. The whole work of the superintendent is connected with nothing but the Capitol Building, the Capitol Grounds, and the office buildings. The Superintendent of the Capitol is the officer of the Houses of Congress, connected with nothing else, and it is an absurdity to keep on appropriating for him under the Department of the Interior, which is all that keeps him there.

My attention was drawn to this subject when the committee of Republican conference looked into the matter of the Senate offices. We all agreed that it was an absurdity to keep the Superintendent of the Capitol, our particular officer of the House and the Senate, under the control of the Interior Department.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I was about to ask a question of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who was very urgent in sustaining the point of order against my amendment. I recall very well about three weeks or more ago handing this identical paper containing the proposed amendment to the Senator from North Carolina, and I asked him to get it inserted in the bill. I had reason to believe that this particular matter had been considered by the committee. I should like to inquire whether the Senator ever presented it to the committee?

Mr. OVERMAN. I did; and it was considered by a committee of 17, and the "Senator from North Carolina" was one of the committee. They did not accept the amendment, but they did consider it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But the point made by the Senator was that it had not been considered by the committee. Now, I have the testimony of the Senator that it has been considered.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is mistaken. I did not say it had not been considered; I said it had not been recommended.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought the committee had recommended it when I left you with your smiling face.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to address myself to the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to transfer the words in lines 6 to 19, both inclusive, on page 109, to page 13, preceding the subhead "Capitol police," on line 7.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he has taken this matter up with the Superintendent of the Capitol, Mr. Woods?

Mr. LODGE. We talked about it some months ago when we were going over the offices. I do not think the Superintendent of the Capitol has any special attachment to the Interior Department; all his work is here. This tends to simplify it, and is in the interest of better administration.

Mr. WARREN. What I have to suggest to the Senator is, that I think this subject ought to have mature consideration, because this employee force is provided for in the bill in two different places. I am not certain but that the Senator is entirely right and that we ought to change the jurisdiction. At the same time we are confronted with the fact that there is no estimate for it, and that now it is provided for partially on page 109 and partially on page 10.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, every sentence, every line, and every figure that I move has not only been estimated for, but has been passed upon by both Houses.

Mr. WARREN. But it is not estimated to be changed and put into a different department.

Mr. LODGE. There is an estimate for the legislative department; it has been reported from a committee; I propose a change. I do not propose to increase the appropriation a cent; I simply propose to put the officer under our own control. He is our own officer. It is a simplification and in the interest of better administration. Therefore I do not think it requires any very mature deliberation to determine that it is better to have this officer serve under one master than under two.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts, perhaps, misapprehends what I was about to say. I think he is probably right. We ought to place this in a different position, but it is a matter that belongs to the other House as much as it does to us, and the provision has been passed through the House in this shape. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to waive any point of order that could be made and let the amendment go in, but, of course, it will take some further comparisons.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I beg pardon for just a moment longer. It will take a little further consideration, in my opinion, with relation to the House connection, and the central portion of the Capitol, which is neutral, and so forth. I think it can be done, and done right, after consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand, of course, that this is a matter which belongs to the House and the Senate. I put it in——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. LODGE. One moment. I put it in at that point. Like the Capitol police, it is a matter which pertains to both sides. Of course, if the House insist that the Superintendent of the Capitol shall remain under the Secretary of the Interior, they have a perfect right to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question for information. At what line and page of the bill does he propose to insert his amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I propose to remove——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I understand that; but at what line and page did the Senator propose to insert his amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I propose to insert the amendment in the Senate provisions before the provision for the Capitol police.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On page 13?

Mr. LODGE. On page 13; so as to bring it with the Capitol police, which both Houses control.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me, if the Senator from Wyoming will pardon me a moment, that would not bring it exclusively under the Senate at all.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would bring it under both Houses.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that is where it ought to be.

Mr. LODGE. That is my opinion, of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have got the Capitol police under our charge, and we ought to have the Superintendent of the Capitol and his force subject to our order also.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he thinks these employees are now under the civil service—I mean those directly under the Superintendent of the Capitol? Are they in the civil service under the Interior Department?

Mr. LODGE. Those are under the Superintendent of the Capitol and come under the control of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. No; I mean those detailed from the Interior Department.

Mr. LODGE. Well, there may be some detailed from the Interior Department; I do not know about those.

Mr. WARREN. They are Interior Department employees, are they not?

Mr. LODGE. Some of them may be detailed.

Mr. WARREN. If they are under the civil service, I shall not object to it.

Mr. LODGE. If it will take them out of the civil service, they can be recalled to the Interior Department, and new ones can be appointed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word. Of course no point of order would lie against the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, but it looks to me like better administration to transfer this official and his force to the point in the bill suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I hope that will be done. I will make this observation to the Senator having the bill in charge: I think he will have ample opportunity to look into this matter before this bill becomes a law.

Mr. WARREN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And hence, if there is anything wrong about it, it can be adjusted in conference.

Mr. WARREN. I may say to the Senator that I do not propose to interpose any objection, but shall leave it with the Senate. I think the matter can be adjusted, but there are some little minutia that will have to be looked after.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I am not especially concerned in any amendment which is pending, but I am anxious to know what the rules of the Senate are and anxious to see them enforced. I understood when I sought to interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts that he had moved an amendment to increase the compensation of some clerk and had stated that his amendment was in accordance with existing law.

Mr. LODGE. That is true.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the amendment was strictly in order under the provisions of the first section of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not informed of the fact which the Senator has just stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Massachusetts stated in effect, in a colloquy, that the amendment was to carry out existing law.

Mr. LODGE. That is true. The salaries have been cut down from the amount now provided by law and below the amount these men are now receiving.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then, the amendment is strictly in order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. But, if the Senator from Wyoming will excuse me, the estimate is for the salaries provided in the bill, and therefore—I am sorry to have to say so—the salaries which I moved were not estimated for, and I think the amendment was obnoxious to the rule on that account.

Mr. WARREN. That is the point I wanted to make.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is not necessary, Mr. President, because the rule says an amendment shall not be in order—

unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

Therefore—I give it as my opinion for what it is worth—the proposed amendment was strictly in order.

Now, with reference to the complaint of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] on my left—and I say this as a member of the Committee on Appropriations—all the increases of compensation of clerks for the Senate as found on pages 2, 3, 4, and so on, would have been in order if they had been moved in the Senate itself, because they were to carry out existing law or resolutions previously adopted by the Senate, and within the meaning and spirit of the first paragraph of rule 16 of this body. I thought I ought to say that much in justice to the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, knowing that it was not estimated for, I accepted the ruling on the point of order, but I am bound to say that I think the Senator from Texas is right and that the amendment I proposed would come under the exception:

or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

Now, the existing law gives these three men the salary which I move as an amendment; there is no dispute about that.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The existing law is simply that contained in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely; but that is existing law to-day; it does not make any difference if it terminates to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. But it dies within less than 30 days.

Mr. LODGE. It does not make any difference whether it terminates to-morrow or not; it exists to-day.

Mr. CULBERSON. It would be in order if it were merely in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate passed at this session, as in the case of the increases on pages 2, 3, and 4 of this bill, which have been referred to.

If I may be pardoned a further reference to the committee, I will say that I took this question up in the full committee, not being a member of the subcommittee, and was informed that the increases referred to were proper, because they were to carry out existing law or were in consonance of existing law or resolutions previously adopted by the Senate, fixing the salaries as carried in this appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true, Mr. President. The committee recommended them because they were in accordance with existing law, but the increases which the Senator from Massachusetts seeks to have made were not recommended by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, just a word. The estimates were made up on the basis, if I may use the term, of a reorganization of the mints, subtreasuries, assay offices, and so forth. Some of the estimates for salaries were higher and some lower, but they came in the regular way to the committee from the Treasury Department. If the Senator from Massachusetts is correct, it would leave us in this position, that no matter who tried to reduce salaries it would be nearly impossible to do so unless in every case they were passed upon and a majority voted to reduce them. In order to make the existing law applicable, the item must come under some law, resolution, or treaty already passed at this session.

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, no, Mr. President; whether we shall reduce salaries depends upon the vote of the Senate. I am only speaking to the question of order.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I am coming to. It would leave us where they would have to be settled there and could not be settled in any other way. There still remains the fact that they are not estimated for, and they are not here by a favorable report of any committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the ruling was made upon the point of order, the ground being stated that the increases were not estimated for. The fact that the amounts proposed were in accordance with existing law was not called to the attention of the Chair and was not embraced in the point of order. The Chair thinks the position of the Senator from Texas is correct, that if the amendment is to carry out existing law it is not within the prohibition. The prohibition is plainly that—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless—unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, right there I wish to state that there will be no existing law as to this matter on the 1st day of July, and furthermore the law did not pass at this session as required.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is another question. The Chair acts upon it as a statement of fact that there is.

Mr. LODGE. The law exists to-day.

Mr. WARREN. The law to-day is as indicated, but the salary now being appropriated for is for next year. There is no law for that salary next year. As we go along, I will say that the estimates did not call for the amounts provided in the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts; the committee did not report those amounts, and they are not existing law in the sense that existing law applies to what we are providing for the next fiscal year and law passed at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has made the ruling from the facts as stated. The point of order was sustained simply upon the ground that it has not been estimated for. Does any Senator make any motion? The Chair will state that if the fact had been brought to the attention of the Chair——

Mr. LODGE. The amendment was pending and was ruled out, and I suppose will take precedence of the other amendment I subsequently offered, but I shall move it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment now pending is to transfer the Superintendent of the Capitol from the Interior Department to the jurisdiction of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. To that I make no objection. It can go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands no point of order is made on that amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now, I move the amendment providing for the changes in the salaries of three employees in the office of the assistant treasurer at Boston. The first is, on page 61, line 19, at the end of the line, to strike out "$2,250" and insert "$2,500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "$2,250" and insert "$2,500"; in line 20, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,200"; and in the same line, to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before that passes I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether there is any reason for those increases outside of the fact that this is in Boston?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will explain to the Senator why I asked for it. Of course it was brought to my attention because Boston is in my State, and I represent, in part, the State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course I know that.

Mr. LODGE. A committee went on from the Treasury to investigate the salaries, and the chairman of that committee stated that the principal object of the reduction of the salary of the paying teller at Boston from $2,500 to $2,250 was to add to the amount of the paying teller's salary at Chicago. I have no objection in the world to increasing the salary of the paying teller at Chicago, but I do not regard it as a good reason for reducing the salary of the paying teller at Boston. He is a man who handles nearly a hundred million dollars a year in cash; he pays a premium on a heavy bond out of his own pocket; and his salary has been the same for nearly 30 years. I think to cut him down for any such reason as that stated is not fair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I listened very attentively to the Senator from Massachusetts, as I always do; but so far I have heard him give no reason at all except that he thinks it is unreasonable to reduce a salary that has been long in existence.

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I tried to give another reason. I think for a place of that importance, held by a man who has to deal with a hundred million dollars in cash, and who is obliged to give a heavy bond and pay the premium out of his own pocket, $2,500 is a very small salary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, if I understood the Senator, he gave another reason, which was that what they were taking away from Boston went to Chicago. That is a very good reason——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me again?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say that that was my reason; I said that is the only reason that was given by the Treasury Department for cutting down his salary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I expressed myself awkwardly. What I meant to say was that the only reason given by the Senator was his antagonism to the idea of transferring $250 from Boston to Chicago. Well, that may be a very good reason not to give it to Chicago, but it is not a good reason for keeping it in Boston. It seems to me, Mr. President, if we are ever to have any economical administration of the Government at all, when the House of Representatives and a committee of the House of Representatives act and a committee of the Senate acts and they both agree that certain salaries ought to be reduced—and you know what a difficult thing that is; it is awfully hard to get them both to agree; it is so exceedingly difficult that it hardly ever happens—but whenever they do both agree, the House committee and the House forming one party, and the Senate committee forming another, it seems to me that they must have had some good reason for their action.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, they took the estimate of the Treasury Department, which had made this cut. If the salary had been left where it has been for 30 years——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah!

Mr. LODGE. If the salary had been left, they would not have touched it. It was the suggestion of the Treasury Department. What I object to is that this man, receiving very moderate pay for a very difficult and responsible office, should be selected among all the other for economy. If that is to be done to all the paying tellers, I find no fault; but why should the man at Boston be picked out for it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, economy has got to begin somewhere.

Mr. LODGE. Well, let it begin somewhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well, that is what everybody says; but unfortunately for human nature and unfortunately for the method in which God has framed the universe, if you begin anything it has got to begin somewhere.

Mr. LODGE. Let us begin with the first one on the list, then, which is Baltimore.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, wait a moment. While I would not select Boston as exactly the initiative point of the entire universe, I still would not resent the beginning of economy in Boston simply because it was Boston.

The Senator from Massachusetts made the case much stronger than I thought it was. I thought, in my ignorance, that I had upon my side merely the House and the House committee and the Senate committee, but I find that I have the Treasury Department as well.

Mr. LODGE. You have.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I find that I have the estimate of the department.

Mr. LODGE. You have; and if the Senator thinks——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in all due reverence—because if there is a man that lives that just simply reverences Boston at a distance, it is I—as I said a moment ago, I would not take Boston as the initiative, but I am rather disposed to think that it is a very good initiative for any great reform. It pretends to have fathered human liberty and American independence and a great many other things, and I think it a very good opportunity to let Boston father economy in governmental administration, wherever the department, plus the House, plus the House committee, plus the Senate committee think it is an appropriate point for beginning economy of some sort.

I beg the Senator from Massachusetts to believe that I say that with that degree of reverence which is due from a mere countryman to a great metropolitan city.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator has a reason except that this is Boston——

Mr. LODGE. I have endeavored to give the reasons. I will give them again, if the Senator will allow me, and possibly I can make them clear.

I say the office is underpaid now for a man carrying that responsibility, handling a hundred million dollars in cash, giving a bond on which he has to pay a premium out of his own pocket; that there is no good reason to cut down the salary when Congress after Congress and Secretary of the Treasury after Secretary of the Treasury have for 30 years thought $2,500 was a proper amount.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. LODGE. Now, one minute. We are beginning economy. All right. If we are going to begin economy, let us go on. If this is economy, why do they raise the salaries at Cincinnati? Why do they raise them at New York for officers carrying no responsibility comparable to this officer? And when the Senator says his case is strengthened by the Treasury Department being behind the two Houses I beg to differ with him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, I always differ with the Senator from Massachusetts with great hesitation, not only because of our respective localities of residence but because of his general intellectual superiority. But I must differ with him in this respect. I have never found in my service in Washington a department or bureau recommending a reduction of a salary without an awfully good reason. I generally find them recommending an advance, a promotion, a reclassification, accompanied with promotions all the way round.

I must, with due deference, differ with another conclusion seemingly drawn by the Senator from Massachusetts. Custom may make laws, but I never heard of custom making salaries; and I do not think we can invoke the idea that because a man has been, perhaps, overpaid for a long, long while he ought to continue to be overpaid for a long, long while to come.

The Senator from Massachusetts said he would attempt to make his point plain, and repeated just what he had said before. If I understand what the Senator from Massachusetts says now and what he said before, it was simply that he thought, it was his opinion, it was his idea, that this man was not paid too much at $2,500 a year; but in opposition to that I put the opinion and the idea of the House and the House committee and the Senate committee and the Treasury Department that he has been paid too much.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, one more point following up the Senator's argument.

I hope the Senator will reduce all these other salaries to correspond, because I admit if Boston is overpaid at $2,500, Cincinnati and other places are also overpaid at the same amount.

I have been hunting all around for a place to begin economy. I have talked with Senators in the cloakroom; I have talked with Senators on the floor; I tried to begin with five regiments of Cavalry; I tried to begin with various things; and every time I speak with a Senator in private or in public conversation, he says, "I am in favor of economy, but that is not the place to begin." Suppose we begin with the cradle of independence, Boston itself.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not want to take up the time of the Senate wrangling over a petty salary of this kind. I thought an injustice had been done, and I think so still. The Senator says it is done with good reason. It is good reason. They want to take the $250 and give it to some one at Chicago. That is an excellent reason.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a mighty bad reason.

Mr. LODGE. That is the reason they gave.

I am perfectly willing to have a beginning made, and I do not object to Boston sharing in the reductions, but I suggest that when the beginning of reductions is made in Boston, it might not be a bad thing to stop the increases in New Orleans—to spread this economy about. I am not asking for decreases anywhere. I think the men in all these subtreasuries in the different cities are earning their money, and I think the paying teller in this important place, getting $2,500 a year, is not paid as much as men with similar responsibilities get anywhere else.

The singling out of Boston is the least important of it. It is only that we should pay men what they justly and decently earn. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate further.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say this man has been getting this salary for years and years.

Mr. LODGE. It has been the salary for 30 years.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. And the purpose is to reduce it?

Mr. LODGE. To reduce it by $250.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It seems to me if we can keep the salaries where they are, we shall be doing good service to the country. We do not find salaries being reduced in other departments of life, and it does seem to me that it is not fair to the subtreasury in Boston that this salary should be cut down.

So far as I am concerned I think we shall do well to keep salaries where they are. Some of them ought to be increased. For my part I think a good many of them should be increased. The responsibilities justify an increase.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In answer to the Senator from Maryland I merely want to say this: While it is true that in all kinds of private industries salaries are being raised, they are being raised because they were too low. But Government employees, in comparison with employees doing the same sort of work in all kinds of private industries—and it was true of the entire country for the last 40 years—have been overpaid, including ourselves, the Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is not my observation. My observation is that men get paid better in private walks of life than they do in the Government service at this time. I do not go back 30 or 40 years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Men who are doing very special expert work in industrial life get paid more than those in the Government service. But ordinary cashiers, tellers, clerks, men doing work that any honest man can do—the only requisite being that he should be honest—are paid very much more in the Government service than in private industries.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have no doubt about the point of order, but I will withdraw it and let the amendment go to the Senate for a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. I have some knowledge of the duties of this office and I am very fully persuaded that this man has not been overpaid.

Glancing at the bill I find 12 or 15 instances where clerks to committees of the Senate are getting $2,500, some clerks of committees receiving more. It is inconceivable to me that a man handling the amount that this paying teller does in the subtreasury at Boston, under heavy bond, for which he has to pay, is being overpaid in comparison with the salaries that are being paid to the officers of the Senate itself. It is current law, and I hope the Senate will agree to restore the salary to a point which I think is not extravagant, but rather, in my mind, is insufficient, considering the duties this man performs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 13, line 8, I move to strike out "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500." This relates to the Capitol police. The amount given to a man with a family to support, who is compelled to live here during the entire year, is less than that which is given the average female clerk in the department who, as a rule, has no large family to look after, and I believe that the amount ought to be increased. It is less than that paid to assistant and clerks and is grossly insufficient. My amendment, beyond this, would be to change the "$1,200" to "$1,500"; the two special officers at "$1,200" to "$1,500"; the 67 privates from "$1,050" to "$1,200"; and following the rule that was adopted in the case of the previous amendment I would move them all as one single amendment—that is, to strike out, in line 8, "$1,200" and insert "$1,500"; in line 9 to strike out "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500"; and in line 10 to strike out "$1,050" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

Mr. OVERMAN. I make the point of order that it is not estimated for and is not recommended by a committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am willing to submit it to a point of order. It is estimated for; and, of course, it would not have gone into the bill if it had not been estimated for. It is simply a question of changing the amount. We are not bound to follow the exact amount that is estimated, as long as there is an estimate for that particular office. That does not tie the hands of the Senate. It can make it either more or less.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Senator to move to increase the compensation of the 67 privates from $1,050 to $1,200.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have just as much right to increase the amount as we have to increase the number. They are estimated for. The only difference is that the Senate has now changed the number, and if we were to have the rule enforced as it is enunciated by the Senator from North Carolina we might as well have no discussion on any amendment as to amount or as to number.

Mr. OVERMAN. The amount estimated is $1,050. The committee recommended $1,050. Therefore this amendment is not estimated for or recommended by the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therefore if the recommendation of the department is $1,050 and the committee agrees to $1,050, the Senate can not put it at any more or any less. I submit that that is not the rule.

Mr. POMERENE. What occasion is there for increasing the number of privates from 33 to 67?

Mr. McCUMBER. That was discussed some time ago, and was agreed to, and I do not care to go into that branch now.

Mr. POMERENE. I was not present at the time.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was fully gone over, and we spent a day or two, I think, on the number that ought to be provided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not in a position to decide the question of fact whether or not it has been estimated for.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no claim that it is estimated for. The total will be increased very considerably, as the Chair can see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can only rule upon the point of order, assuming the state of facts stated to be correct. If the fact that the increases are not estimated for is disputed——

Mr. McCUMBER. No. I do not understand that there is any claim that that number has not been estimated for.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the point of order really lies on this. The number has been estimated for, as the Senator says, but this is a raising of salaries, increasing the amount in an appropriation bill without an estimate for the raise and without its being reported upon by any standing committee. That would be the point.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is in exactly the same position as the one just now passed. There is no distinction whatever. The only distinction whatever is that the committee itself in one instance sought to amend by inserting 67 instead of 33 as the number.

Mr. WARREN. To what amendment does the Senator allude as just having been passed?

Mr. McCUMBER. I mean the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Massachusetts did not ask any raise of salary beyond what the officer is getting now, but the Senator from North Dakota does.

Mr. McCUMBER. O Mr. President, I do not think that is the distinction at all. I do not think the Chair will claim that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ruled the former point of order not well taken upon the ground that the amendment was for an expenditure provided by existing law. That was the ground upon which the Chair made the ruling. The general rule is that unless estimated for, if an amendment increases an appropriation, it can not be received. But one of the exceptions is, to read the language:

> Unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

It was upon the ground that the amendment fell within that exception that the Chair made the former ruling.

The point of order now made is that this item is not estimated for. The Chair does not understand that there is any exception claimed to take it out of the general rule.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is no denial that it has been estimated for. The only question raised is that it has not been estimated for at this particular amount, and therefore that we can not raise the amount.

I submit to the Senator in charge of the bill that there has been an estimate made for a captain of police, at $1,800, and an estimate made for two lieutenants, at $1,200, which the committee changed to three lieutenants; that there has been an estimate made for two special officers, at $1,200 each; also, that there has been an estimate made for 33 privates, at $1,050 each, which the committee has changed to 67 privates.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think the rule is very clear:

> All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations—

That has not been done in this case—

> And when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this increase has not been estimated for, and that it comes directly under the terms of Rule XVI.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator claim that the amendment which has just been agreed to was referred to the committee one day before it was considered?

Mr. GALLINGER. That was determined upon an entirely different proposition—that it conformed to existing law, and hence was an exceptional case under the rule.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this is an increase of an estimate. The total amount estimated was $162,000. This amendment proposes to increase the estimate from $162,000 to about $170,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator if he claims that the committee has authority with reference to increases that the Senate itself has not?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate has made certain rules of order here by which the Chair is to be governed.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senate has made no rule that gives any committee created by the Senate a power greater than the Senate itself has. If there is such a rule, I should like to have the Senator point it out to me. If the creature of the Senate has under any rule a power greater than the power the Senate has with reference to an amendment, I certainly should like to see it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate has made certain rules to govern the Senate and to govern the committee. The committee has been governed as far as it knew how by the rules of the Senate. Rule XVI is to govern the Senate, and the point of order is made and is submitted to the President of the Senate to rule upon under the rule that the Senate has made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, so we may not misunderstand each other, and so it may stand as a precedent in future cases, the position is that if there is an estimate made by the department for one captain at $1,800, and the committee acts upon that estimate and adopts it, there is no such thing permissible as an amendment of it in the Senate——

Mr. GALLINGER. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER (continuing). That the Senate can not raise the amount? If we are to have that as a precedent, I want to know that it is a precedent which we can call up at any time, and interpose it against any amendment raising any salary by one cent unless it has been acted upon by the committee and the committee itself has changed it.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no, Mr. President; any standing committee of the Senate can recommend an increase, and that makes it in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the Senate can not recommend an increase?

Mr. WARREN. A Senator may rise in his place and propose it, but if a point of order is made the rule certainly covers the case, and always has covered it. To make it in order there must be either an estimate or a favorable report from some committee, either the Committee on Appropriations or some other standing committee. Otherwise the appropriation may not be increased.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not seem to understand my proposition. The difference between us is this: I insist that if there has been an estimate made, that opens the matter for discussion and amendment. If there has been no estimate made, of course I will agree that the rule applies. But we are not bound by the figures of the estimate; and once having the estimate made by a department and brought in by the committee, I insist that there is no standing rule of the Senate, when properly construed, under which the amount is sacred, and we can not change it. If there is, let us have it and follow it hereafter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, some time ago I gave notice that I would hand the Secretary an amendment. I want to hand it to him now, and ask that it be published in the RECORD for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The point of order made is that this increase has not been estimated for. The general rule is that no amendment——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one moment; I give notice that I want to call up that amendment to-morrow, when we get back to the consideration of the bill. For the information of the Senator from Wyoming, I wish to say that this is the amendment he asked me to have prepared and put in the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will not talk about "to-morrow," because we may not have the bill under consideration to-morrow. I should like to finish it to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please postpone——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, I fail to understand the object of the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was proceeding to rule——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Wyoming asked me to have the amendment prepared and put it in the RECORD so that Senators could read it. I do not see how we can read it in the RECORD to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was proceeding to rule upon the point of order.

The point of order made was that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota had not been estimated for, and therefore was out of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Chair says that is the point of order. I did not so understand it. That was only one branch of it. What becomes of the balance of Rule XVI?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator permit the Chair to proceed with the ruling? Then, if there is any other point, the Chair will be glad to hear it stated.

Mr. WARREN. I myself made the point under the whole rule. Perhaps I am not in order, though, if the other point has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming will please state his point of order.

Mr. WARREN. The point of order is that it has not been estimated for and that it increases the amount of an appropriation without having had the indorsement of any standing committee. The reading of Rule XVI will advise the Chair of the situation:

> No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation,

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was proceeding to rule upon that very point.

The general rule is this:

> No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless—

Then follow certain exceptions. One of the exceptions is:

> Unless * * * proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

The Senator from North Dakota contends that the estimate for the number of policemen would comply with that requirement of the rule.

In the opinion of the Chair, the words "proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments" refer to an estimate for that increase; and therefore, unless the increase has been estimated for, that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to call up an amendment submitted on the 28th of May.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. On page 136, line 13, immediately after the figures "$2,500," insert the words—

> Chief of Division of Compilation, $2,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, this is in pursuance of a letter of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor which gives this list, and states:

> The House bill does not provide for this position, although there is a chief of division (of compilation), at $2,000, now in the Bureau of Statistics. It will be still necessary to maintain this division without in any degree lessening its responsibilities or duties.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that to be within the estimate.

Mr. BURTON. It is.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator send the letter to the desk?

Mr. BURTON. I will send the letter to the desk. It is somewhat voluminous, however.

Mr. WARREN. I mean, just the point to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. BURTON. It is upon pages 5 and 6. That is, it is in the estimate as transmitted in this letter. I will suggest that perhaps I had better read the portion referred to, as the letter contains other unrelated recommendations.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor, as a substitute for the provision as it came from the House, gives an enumeration of the positions in the proposed Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce:

> Chief of bureau, $5,000—
> That is carried here at $4,000—
> assistant chief of bureau; stenographer to chief of bureau; chief clerk; chief statistician; chief, Division of Consular Reports; chief, Division of Compilation.

Then the letter gives the list of clerks.

I presume it is unnecessary for me to repeat his statement, which I have already read, to the effect that this position is necessary under the reorganization as well as under the old plan. This amendment is also in pursuance of existing law, as the position has existed for, I think, 10 years or more.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I raise a point of order against this amendment and cite the rule just cited by the Chair, that—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—

This increases the appropriation already contained in the bill—or to add a new item of appropriation—

This adds a new item of appropriation—unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation.

This is not to carry out the provisions of an existing law any more than the amendment which I proposed a short time ago was to carry out the provisions of an existing law. Also because the same has not been moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

Mr. BURTON. I think if the Senator from North Dakota will carefully examine the exceptions he will find that there are two exceptions very distinctly stated, either of which makes this amendment germane. In the first place, it is in pursuance of existing law, being a position of long standing and an integral part of the Bureau of Statistics. I will read the exceptions from the rule:

Unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

As I have said, there is an existing law for this position. It has been in existence for 10 years as an essential part of the Bureau of Statistics. Then, passing by others not applicable—or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

We come to another exception which clearly justifies this amendment—or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

Here is an estimate of the head of the Department of Commerce and Labor and a statement clearly setting forth his position in reference to it:

The House bill does not provide for this provision, although there is a chief of division (of compilation) at $2,000 now in the Bureau of Statistics. It will be still necessary to maintain this division without in any degree lessening its responsibilities or duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not in a position to pass on the question of fact raised. The Chair knows nothing as to whether an estimate has been made or not. The Chair would be very glad to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. I will say, in order to inform the Chair, that in the original estimate which precedes the law a chief was estimated for without giving the title of bureau or division, and we did not include it. The only difference is that the amendment now offered names the place the chief is to have. Therefore, so far as the estimate is concerned, it is true that it was estimated for. It is also true that in the combination made in this Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce there has been quite an uncertainty as to how the Department of State and the Department of Commerce and Labor were affected. In amalgamating them, one depended upon another. It seemed to the subcommittee, and later to the full committee, that in getting it together they missed this one place, which we thought was not necessary at the time. The letter explains the situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the assumption that the expenditure had been estimated for, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say as to the merits of the case that, so far as I am concerned, it was understood when these great departments were consolidated that there would be some money saved to the Government by the consolidation. I thought they had enough clerks, and I shall vote against this amendment. I do not see any reason for a consolidation if we are going to put all the old clerks back. Here are three departments consolidated into one department. It seemed to me that the compilation might be done by fourth-class clerks who get $2,000 each.

Mr. BURTON. On that point I will state that there is not an unusual number of chiefs here. There are two assistant chiefs. There is a very large amount of labor. This man has had 10 subordinates under him for a number of years, and the officials of the bureau state that the position is still necessary for the performance of efficient work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BURTON. I call for a division upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is demanded. [After a pause.] No quorum has voted. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. SANDERS's name was called). I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS] is paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is absent on important business. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON], and in his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. PERCY] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNTER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM], who is absent from the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. He has not voted, and I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM. I will inquire if the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If there is doubt about a quorum I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and this will permit the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] to vote. I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BURNHAM. Under the transfer of pairs just announced, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays, 20, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Bourne	Cullom	Heyburn	Stephenson
Bradley	Cummins	Jones	Sutherland

So Mr. BURTON'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I sent an amendment to the desk. I ask that the amendment be published in the RECORD, and that we agree to take a vote upon it to-morrow morning when the bill is called up. I do not care to discuss it, but I should like to give Members of the Senate an opportunity to read the amendment and compare it with the House provisions and with the Senate amendment. I call up the amendment for the purpose of making that request.

Mr. WARREN. I did not catch the drift of the Senator's remarks. What was his request?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I requested that the amendment be published in the RECORD, and that we take a vote upon it to-morrow morning without any further discussion. I do not care to discuss it, but I want to give every Member of the Senate an opportunity to read it and compare it with the House provision and with the Senate amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator think that if it were read the Senate would then be ready to vote on it to-night?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I doubt it, unless every Senator had the bill in his hand to follow it. It is a rather far-reaching amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows in what anxiety we are to try to finish this appropriation bill. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is shaking his gory locks at me now regarding the unfinished business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is nothing in my request which interferes with that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he proposes to make a point of order against the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No point of order would lie.

Mr. CUMMINS. If he does, it seems to me it might well be made now. I do not know whether he intends to do it, but from the general trend of his suggestions heretofore I believe that he would be of the opinion that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the amendment is not in order now, and will not be in order until we get into the Senate. It is not in order as in Committee of the Whole, because we have already adopted the amendments in the bill, and if in order at all it comes up in the Senate. Of course the amendment seeks to become a substitute——

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seeks to amend the Senate amendment.

Mr. WARREN. It is, in other words, a substitute for both the House provision and the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it is an amendment of the Senate to the House provision, and it is not subject to a point of order at all.

Mr. WARREN. It would be most desperately out of order were it not for what is already in the bill. I do not feel, with what we have in the bill, as if I should want to make a point of order against it, although when we come to act upon it it may seem to me to be subject to a point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not want to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that he could make a point of order, and I certainly do not wish to make one, but if one is to be made it might well be made now, because if we enter upon the debate of the entire civil service, what it has done and what we hope for it, it may take quite a while.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment is not offered yet.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I certainly hope that the Senator from Iowa will at least read the amendment before he repeats his last observation. It not only does not repeal the entire civil-service system, but it does not repeal a bit of it, except——

Mr. CUMMINS. I heard the very eloquent address of the Senator from Mississippi, and I assume that everything which he said in that address is pertinent to the amendment which he offers. His address covered the whole scope of the civil service. It covered the issue as between appointments during efficiency and appointments during a term. It covered the question of the contributory pension system, the civil-service pension system, and everything else that could possibly enter into one's consideration of the civil service, and the manner of appointment and the manner of dismissal. I could not, with my view of the matter, allow it to pass without some discussion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the very reason why I have made the request.

Mr. CULLOM. If the amendment is going to be discussed let it be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment does not in the slightest degree weaken or hurt the civil-service system. On the contrary, it strengthens it. The only thing it is intended to do is to remove from the future the deadened lumber in the way of an accumulation of superannuation which year by year takes place.

It may be true that while I was discussing the question I discussed everything as far as I could cognate to it, everything that it might affect, everything that it might help or hurt, but the amendment speaks for itself. The amendment is intended to coalesce and harmonize the existing nonpartisan and nonpolitical public service with a fixed tenure of office, so that there shall not be an accumulation of superannuation from year to year. That is all it does. There is nothing that has anything to do with entrance into the civil service; it is just as it is now. There is nothing in it that prevents reappointment, except a provision that where a civil-service employee falls below the minimum rate to be fixed by the Civil Service Commission he shall go out at the end of five years; that is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if I understood him correctly to say that if the amendment should be printed in the RECORD and go over until morning he is willing that a vote shall be taken upon it without further debate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Without further debate as far as I am concerned. I do not desire to debate it. All I want is to give Senators an opportunity to read it and compare it with the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am quite sure the chairman will agree to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think Senators can do that now, because most of them have not the bill before them. Talking about it is one thing and taking it and comparing it with the bill is another.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not seen the amendment. All I know is through the address of the Senator from Mississippi. I am not ready to agree that we shall take a vote upon it without debate.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the whole situation be cleared up by taking the vote Saturday morning, and then to-morrow morning bringing in the bill the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has in charge. That would harmonize with his desires.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would be very satisfactory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How will that do?

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi, if he pleases, that he let the proposed amendment be now read. It will then go in the RECORD, and the matter as to when the vote shall be taken will be determined later.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I ask for the reading of the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I can get the attention of the Senator from Mississippi for a minute I desire to say I had hoped very much that we might be able to finish the appropriation bill this afternoon. I have no sort of objection to the Senator's request provided it is coupled with the condition that if the bill is not disposed of this afternoon and the amendment is to be submitted for consideration to-morrow——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand that my request could possibly conflict with the chemical tariff bill. That is what the Senator is talking about. That will come up to-morrow if my request is granted. It certainly would not take 20 minutes to call the roll of the Senate and vote on the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. As the Senator from Iowa says he can not give consent to an agreement that there shall be no debate on the amendment to-morrow, my suggestion is that if possible we finish the bill this afternoon; and if we fail to finish the bill this afternoon then let the Senator's amendment be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not willing to agree that an amendment of this magnitude, without any opportunity on the part of Senators to read it and compare it with the provisions of existing law, should be voted upon this afternoon. So far as I am concerned I am willing to make any agreement that will give Senators an opportunity to read the amendment and compare it with existing law, compare it with the House provision, compare it with the Senate amendment, and take a vote upon it.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that the amendment is not pertinent until we get out of the Committee of the Whole and in the Senate. I understand we are still in Committee of the Whole and the bill is still subject to amendment. If the Chair will ask if there are further amendments in Committee of the Whole, and if there are none, and we go into the Senate, then the amendment will be pertinent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me get the situation. As the Senator knows, I was absent yesterday. Were the Senate amendments on pages 152 and 153 adopted yesterday?

Mr. WARREN. One was adopted yesterday and one was adopted to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When was one adopted to-day? It was not adopted while I was here.

Mr. WARREN. I think it was adopted while the Senator was here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it was not, for I was watching it very closely. I did not hear it. I had an amendment pending to it. I do not see how it came to be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Mississippi probably refers to sections 4 and 5 of the House bill. The amendments proposed by the committee striking those sections out were agreed to yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senate amendment, as a substitute for them, was not offered and never has been, if I understand it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment was agreed to to-day, as I understand it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Mississippi loses nothing by that course, because the amendment to which we agreed yesterday, as well as the other, made his amendment not in order until we get into the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I have no objection to the modus operandi at all. I merely want to know that there will be some modus; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendment has been called for. Without objection, it will be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest the reading of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the proposed amendment be read for information.

The SECRETARY. In the bill as printed it is proposed by the Senate to strike out from the House text section 5 as printed on pages 152 and 153. The Senator from Mississippi now proposes to perfect the portion of the bill proposed to be stricken out. In the first place, on the top of page 153, beginning with the word "and," line 1, strike out down to the word "Provided," in line 7. Then after the word "shall," in line 8, page 153, there be inserted these words: "except as hereinafter prescribed"; that in line 12, page 153, the word "fair" be stricken out, and that after the word "efficiency," in line 12, page 153, these words be inserted: "prescribed by the Civil Service Commission," so that the provision as amended will read as follows:

SEC. 5. That on and after July 1, 1913, all appointments to positions in the classified service of the executive departments within the District of Columbia provided for at annual rates of compensation shall be made, after the probationary period of six months shall have expired, for terms of five years each; at the expiration of each such appointment the employment of each person so appointed shall cease and determine: Provided, That all persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall, except as hereinafter prescribed, be eligible for and may, in the discretion of the head of the executive department, be reappointed without examination for additional periods of five years, if at the time of such reappointment they shall be up to a standard of efficiency prescribed by the Civil Service Commission and capable of rendering a full measure of service in return for the salary of the place to which they may be appointed: Provided further, That in reducing the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the head of any department from removing at any time for good and sufficient cause any employee of his department.

Mr. WILLIAMS also moves that in the Senate committee amendment, after the word "promoted," on line 5, page 154, there be inserted these words, "or reappointed at the end of his five years' service," and on line 6 strike out the words "below which no employee may fall without being demoted," and insert, after the word "rating," on line 6, this language, "and any employee having this rating shall be reappointed to a place in the service, unless on charges made he shall be deemed in character unfit," so that the amendment shall read as follows:

SEC. 6. The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted or reappointed at the end of his five years' service; it shall also provide a maximum rating, and any employee having this rating shall be reappointed to a place in the service, unless on charges made he shall be deemed in character unfit; it shall further provide for a maximum rating, below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Copies of all records of efficiency shall be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission for record in accordance with the provisions of this section.

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. That is a mistake of the committee. It should be "minimum rating" there, evidently.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to change the word "maximum" to "minimum."

Mr. WARREN. Both of those words are used in the original amendment, and properly used, I think.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I understand; but in that case, if the Senator will pardon me, it is evidently a misprint. The provision reads:

It shall further provide for a maximum rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency.

Mr. WARREN. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course it means a minimum rating.

Mr. WARREN. I beg pardon, it does not. It means just what it says. Employees must attain that maximum rating or they are to be demoted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; I understand.

Mr. JONES. I offer an amendment, in line 21, on page 68, after the word "other," to insert "clerks and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Wait a moment. I want to know where that amendment is proposed to be inserted.

Mr. OVERMAN. On page 68, line 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 21, after the word "other," it is proposed to insert the words "clerks and," so that if amended it will read:

For wages of workmen and other clerks and employees, $22,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. The word "other" ought to go out.

Mr. JONES. I will say, Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I have not yet located the amendment.

Mr. JONES. It is on page 68, line 21.

Mr. WARREN. It now reads:

For wages of workmen and other employees, $22,000.

Mr. JONES. Yes. I propose to make it read "other clerks and employees." The purpose of that, Mr. President, is simply this——

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator propose to increase the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. JONES. Not at all.

Mr. WARREN. Then I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. It is merely to meet an emergency which may require the use of extra help for a little time. I am not proposing to increase the appropriation at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the word "other" ought to go out, so that it will read:

For wages of workmen, clerks, and employees.

Mr. JONES. I follow the language that was in the last law.

Mr. GALLINGER. The word "other" ought to go out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment just proposed, before the word "clerks," it is proposed to strike out the word "other," so as to read:

For wages of workmen and clerks and employees, $22,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer another amendment, to come in on page 93, line 5, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 93, line 5, after the sum "$2,000," it is proposed to insert "who may act as or be appointed director," so that if amended it will read:

Nautical Almanac Office: For assistants in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, namely, one at $2,000, who may act as or be appointed director.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I offer another amendment on page 93, to strike out lines 9, 10, and 11.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 93, it is proposed to strike out lines 9, 10, and 11, as follows:

For pay of computers on piecework in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and in improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars, $7,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to say that the Senator from Washington may be better acquainted with this subject than I am. I do not know enough about it to object to his amendment. I am willing, however, that the amendment shall be agreed to and that the matter shall be considered in conference.

Mr. JONES. I will suggest that this amendment will not affect the efficiency of the work.

Mr. McCUMBER. On what page is the Senator's amendment?

Mr. JONES. On page 93, to strike out lines 9, 10, and 11.

Mr. LODGE. I should like——

Mr. JONES. I might first state the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like the Senator from Washington to explain why he wants to cripple that office in that way?

Mr. JONES. I desire to say that I do not want to cripple the office, but I want to make the office effective. I am satisfied that all the work that is provided to be done in lines 9, 10, and 11, on page 93, can be done under the regular appropriation and by the regular force of that office. I am further satisfied that the committee of conference, when the matter goes to them and they look into it, will be satisfied that the work can be done with the appropriation provided for in the lines from 3 to 8, and can be done more efficiently than if it were done with this additional appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I remarked a moment ago that I did not know very much about this matter, but the clerk of the committee calls my attention to the fact that a letter has just been received from the Navy Department in reference to it. I ask that the letter may be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, June 11, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 8, 1912, page 8323, in regard to the appropriation for pay of computers on piecework in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and in improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars, $7,000, and with particular reference to your statement in connection therewith that "unless I have further information in regard to it when the proper time comes, I shall not oppose the Senator's motion" (motion of Senator POINDEXTER to strike out this appropriation), I beg to furnish the following for your consideration:

The fund in question, $7,000, is used to supplement the work of the regular assistants in preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and in improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars, used in making the predictions in the Ephemeris. The regular assistants cost $13,600, all their work being done at the observatory here in Washington, but piecework is required in addition from computers in various parts of the country.

The law requires that the Ephemeris be published three years in advance. Due to changes made in the Ephemeris several years ago, the work fell behind, the date of issue becoming less than three years in advance, and recently the entire force of the office has been used in making up arrears of work. The Introduction to the Ephemeris for 1913 is dated January, 1911; that for 1914, October, 1911; and it is expected to send the final copy for 1915 to the printer next month, July, 1912, so that its issue will still be nearly a year late.

The total cost of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac for one year was, for 1912, $21,000; for 1913, $17,000; for 1914, $15,700. From one to two thousand dollars have been saved through exchange of work with the British Nautical Almanac Office. It is hoped to reduce the cost of publication still further, but the appropriation for the regular assistants alone, $13,600, was not sufficient to get out any one of the last three volumes published, and will not suffice to carry on the work and make up arrears.

The figures given in the preceding paragraph do not cover the cost of making up the work which is behind; so that, if the piecework fund is omitted from the appropriations without increasing the number of regular assistants, the work of improving the tables of the planets, moon, and stars can not be carried on, and the date of issue of future volumes of the Ephemeris may become more and more behind the three-year requirement of the law.

Further, it may be added that some of the best men employed in this work are pieceworkers, and that to reduce the appropriation, as proposed, might impair the value of the American publication as an astronomical standard of well-recognized accuracy.

Faithfully, yours,

BEEKMAN WINTHROP, Jr.,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senator, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only want to say a word in regard to this subject. The American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac is a publication of the utmost importance. It contains, as the Senate well knows, the tables by which the positions of the planets and heavenly bodies are fixed for a period ahead. Those tables are absolute necessities on every seagoing vessel, and on the accuracy of those tables the safety of vessels in determining their position largely depends. I have some familiarity with that matter; I have known about it for a good many years, and I know of no Government work that we could less afford to cripple than this. The computers are mathematical experts, and it is absolutely necessary to have their assistance in making these computations. I should regret extremely to see any reduction made in the House provision for such a very important work as this.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not dispute the estimate of the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to the importance of this work, and if I thought the adoption of this amendment would injuriously affect it in any degree, I would not offer it; but I am satisfied that with the proper conduct of that office and with the work done by the regular force there, under proper management the work will be more efficiently done than it is now done. I suggest to the Senator that up to 1910, without this appropriation, the Nautical Almanac was brought up to date and was kept right in line with the times, while since that time, or since the method of carrying on the work that has been adopted since then, it has not only not been carried on so efficiently, but it has also gotten far behind.

I should like to have this amendment go to conference. I am satisfied that the committee, by a little bit of inquiry, can get information that will convince them that this appropriation is not needed and that a very decided reorganization of that institution ought to be had. I want the work kept up, so far as that is concerned; but here is one place where we can save some money and get our governmental business carried on much more reasonably than it is now.

I will say, Mr. President, that I have secured some information along these lines. I have not secured all that I think could be secured and that could be presented to the Senate, and therefore I am not going into the matter more fully, except to suggest that the amendment be allowed to go to conference; and if the conferees, when they have investigated the subject, think that the amendment ought not to be adopted, I will make no objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course the Senator's view is that the work can be done with less help than they now have; but my opinion, from what I know of the matter, is that they require what they ask, and the view of those concerned in it is that they need additional money for computers. I can only repeat that I think it would be a great misfortune to cripple a work of this kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, on page 61, line 25, I move to strike out "$840" and insert in lieu thereof "$900." It will be subject to the same objection that the Senator from Wyoming urged against the other amendment, if he wishes to make it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am compelled to make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us hear what the point of order is.

Mr. WARREN. The point of order is that it is not estimated for, that it increases an appropriation, and that it is without the indorsement of any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's amendment it proposes to increase the salary of three watchmen provided for in line 25, page 61, from $840 to $850.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; to $900.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; the current law provides for $850.

Mr. WARREN. Eight hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. LODGE. Eight hundred and fifty dollars; they have been reduced $10 apiece on account of the economy movement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will submit the point of order to the Chair.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amount proposed—$900—is not current law; it is not estimated for; it has not the indorsement of any committee; and it increases an appropriation contained in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken if the facts are correctly stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so rules upon that statement of the facts. The Chair has no method of ascertaining the facts except from the statements made upon the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the facts are just exactly as they were in the case of another item in the same paragraph which the Senator from Massachusetts moved to amend. The ruling of the Chair in that instance was that the amendment was in order, whereas on another amendment of exactly the same kind, there was a ruling of the Chair that it was not in order. As I have said a ruling that is not consistent with rulings heretofore had as to what constitutes a report or an estimate will get us just into that position.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from North Dakota will permit, the Chair will state that if the ruling has been made upon the same state of facts as in the previous instance the Chair is misinformed and is ready to correct the ruling; but the Chair does not understand the statement to be the same. The Chair may be in error in his understanding of the statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. The ruling was made exactly upon the same statement.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will pardon the Senator, but I will still hold the floor.

Mr. WARREN. The statement of the Senator is incorrect; that is all.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have the floor. In the other case exactly the same objection was made upon exactly the same grounds and the point of order was overruled by the Chair. Again, in this instance a point of order was made upon exactly the same grounds and was sustained by the Chair. The only possible difference that was made at all, Mr. President, as a basis for the decision of the Chair was that in one instance the provision of the bill proposed to be amended was a reduction of the salary as carried in the last appropriation act, while in this case there is a difference, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, of $10. So in this case the appropriation is different from the amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912.

I take this position—and I am certain after a further careful examination of Rule XVI that it is correct—that when an estimate has been submitted by a department and a bill is prepared upon that estimate, neither a Senator nor the Senate is prohibited from amending that estimate; and if the department estimates for the salary of an officer $2,000, neither the Senate nor the committee is prohibited by any ruling either from raising that $2,000 to $2,100 or decreasing it to $1,900. That is exactly the same proposition that we had in the other case, and it is the same proposition that will come up to plague us unless the ruling is reversed which practically holds that the Senate can not amend an estimate, especially if that amendment adds in any way to the estimate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understood the Chair to rule on the preceding amendment to the same paragraph that it was not obnoxious to the rule because the amendment offered was to carry out the provisions of existing law, and I think the Chair's ruling was correct. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to pay the watchmen is not to carry out existing law, because the existing law fixes their pay at $850. Therefore it does not come within the ruling of the Chair. If an amendment providing that the salary should be $850 was moved, that would come within the ruling of the Chair, for it would carry out existing law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the point of order debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not, except by unanimous consent. It is usual, however, to give that consent.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have spent most of the afternoon debating points of order, and it seems to me we ought to proceed in the regular way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Whether it is debatable or not is in the discretion of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Absolutely.

Mr. McCUMBER. I propose to get this thing down to where it belongs and to follow it up to its logical conclusion as a guide in future controversies of this kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Chair having ruled that I can not amend this provision by increasing it from $840 to $900, I will now, to conform to the idea of the Senator from Massachusetts, move to strike out "$840" and to insert in lieu thereof "$850."

Mr. President, I want to say candidly that the department has only estimated for $840, and therefore increasing this amount $10 is actually raising the amount of the estimate made by the department. If it is subject to a point of order in the one case it must necessarily be subject to the point of order in the other case, but I will take up the several holes in this ruling until they are all filled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present amendment offered by the Senator is for the purpose of carrying out, as the Chair is informed, the existing law, and therefore the Chair would hold it to be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LODGE. I ask before the question is put that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment now is to increase the amount to $850. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment to section 10. It has been stated once or twice here that this section was not open to amendment until the bill reached the Senate, but I think that was a misapprehension. The Senate has rejected the committee amendment with regard to section 10, and it stands before us now as a part of the House bill and open to any amendment that we may see fit to make.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, having rejected it, it is not in order until we get into the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire a ruling upon that. It seems to me so illogical that I can not believe that is the parliamentary law governing the case. We have here a section from the House bill. The Senate committee proposed to strike it out. The proposal of the committee was rejected, and thereupon the section is before the Senate precisely as any other section in the House bill, and my inquiry is whether or not it is open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WARREN. I care nothing about the matter, and I am perfectly willing that it shall go in. I will not make any point against it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it will facilitate matters if there is no objection made to the amendment. I offer the amendment I send to the desk to follow immediately the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and adopted by the Senate heretofore. I can not make it more definite than that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 158, line 1, after the words "United States," an amendment offered by Mr. NELSON was agreed to, reading as follows:

And the procedure in the district courts shall be the same as heretofore in the Commerce Court, and the right of appeal from the district courts shall be the same as heretofore from the Commerce Court.

It is proposed after those words to insert the following:

If in any case it is sought to suspend or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission by an interlocutory injunction or restraining order, the provisions of section 266 of the Judicial Code shall govern the proceedings, except that the notice of the hearing upon any such application for interlocutory injunction or restraining order shall be given to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I may say a single word in explanation of the amendment. Without it, if these cases are brought in the district courts, as they will be in the future, a single district judge will have the power to issue an injunction restraining the enforcement of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is manifest that after a matter of this kind has been considered by a commission or a body consisting of seven men its order ought not to be set aside upon the judgment of a single man. Therefore I have asked that the provision which is now the law in regard to interfering with or suspending the enforcement of a State statute be made applicable to a case in which it is sought to nullify the action of the commission.

I need not go into the detail of it save to say that this section of the code provides for the association of three judges in hearing and disposing of an application for a preliminary or interlocutory injunction. It also provides, I think I ought to say, that where the injunction is issued there may be an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States directly from the court which issues the injunction. As applied to these cases it would mean that if a district court anywhere issued an injunction to restrain the operation of an order of the commission, the commission or the United States might appeal from the order issuing the injunction directly to the Supreme Court, instead of passing through the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the existing conditions in regard to the composition of our district courts. Now, as I understand the suggestion of the Senator, it is that three district judges shall sit to determine whether or not the injunction shall issue. There is no court composed of three judges nor is there any existing provision of law which recognizes a court composed of three district judges. How would you appeal from it?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Idaho will easily understand, I think, when I say that I am simply adopting his own work in this respect, and I think it is very good work, too. I have applied section 266 of the Judicial Code to such cases, and that section is as follows:

No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application.

Mr. HEYBURN. Unless I misunderstood the Senator he proposes now that three district judges shall pass upon it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all. The Senator misunderstood the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no copy of the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment simply takes this section and applies it in cases where it is sought to enjoin orders of the commission, so that it will be applicable to such cases exactly as it is now applicable to cases wherein it is sought to enjoin the operation of a State statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was listening to the statement by the Senator of the amendment, and I did not catch any expression which provided for the participation in this of a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator probably misapprehended me, because I was pointing out the unwisdom of allowing a single district judge to issue an injunction of this character. I have no doubt——

Mr. HEYBURN. My mind may have followed that thought a little further than the Senator's.

Mr. CUMMINS. He may have confused that with the amendment itself, which does no more than to apply this section to the cases I have stated.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see no good reason why the section should not be applied if it is applied as it is in section 266.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is. I thought I would myself write the procedure, but upon attempting it I found that those who revised the code had done so much better than I could that I simply adopted the section itself.

Mr. HEYBURN. We intended to, and I think we did, provide that this tribunal should be constituted of at least a justice of the Supreme Court and a judge of the circuit court of appeals acting together with the district judge.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. "Or."

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, "or." That was intended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the amendment be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to the amendment, because I think it is an admirable one, but it seems to me that it would be better if the Senator would insert in his amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reporter at the desk is unable to hear the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I simply suggested to the Senator an amendment. I do not move it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have looked over the section very carefully, and it was my opinion that the only part of the section not applicable is that which provided that the notice of the application for the temporary injunction should be given to the governor and the attorney general of the State and such other persons as may be defendants in the suit. I think that is the only part which is not just as pertinent in such cases as I have described as in the cases described in the section. But I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that instead of using the words "shall govern by" he say "as provided in, so far as may be applicable."

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection to that, if it means the same thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be perfected as suggested.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know, but possibly I would have to change the whole phraseology of the amendment if the suggestion is to be adopted.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the amendment is read, I think we can do it right now.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "shall govern" and to insert "provided in."

Mr. CUMMINS. We shall have no verb in there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

If in any case it is sought to suspend or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission by an interlocutory injunction or restraining order the provisions of section 266 of the Judicial Code shall, as provided in——

Mr. CUMMINS. Say "shall apply as nearly as possible."

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to get rid of the word "govern."

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing to get rid of it in that way—"shall apply as far as applicable."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have the amendment sent to the Senator from Iowa so that he can modify it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident that the bill will have to go over until morning to correct another matter. Would it please the Senator to withhold his amendment also and submit it in the morning?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am entirely willing.

Mr. WARREN. Then, with the Senator's kind consent, I wish we might finish the bill in Committee of the Whole and get it into the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the bill passes from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, I wish to give notice that I intend to offer an amendment, following the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, that will repeal explicitly the first six sections of the law creating the Commerce Court.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Iowa has his amendment ready, would he object to its being read so that it will appear in the RECORD and we can all see it in the morning?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," are hereby repealed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I may follow that with a specific repeal of some parts of those sections, although I can not see how a specific repeal of a part of the sections will be necessary if we repeal all of them. However, I suggest it so that we may take it up if necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the proposed amendment read?

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that it be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope it will be read, Mr. President.

The Secretary read as follows:

So much of the act of June 18, 1910, as provides or authorizes or directs the said five judges to preside in the circuit courts of the United States, or in the circuit courts of appeals, or to exercise any of the powers, duties, or authority of circuit judges, or of said circuit courts, or of said circuit courts of appeals, is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was read simply for information.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in order to acquaint myself as well as I could with the matters contained in the appropriation bills, being on that committee, some three weeks ago I introduced a resolution, which was passed through the Senate, asking the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information.

After three weeks, when the report of this bill by the committee had been made, I received from the Secretary of the Treasury a report on the matter referred to in the resolution.

The resolution asked that the Secretary furnish the Senate with a statement of the number and personnel of all the existing commissions, their traveling expenses, and how much money had been expended by them. I am sorry I did not get the report sooner, so that I might have investigated what all these things meant, and what was the use of them and the need of them. I want to ask some Senator upon the floor here what is the need of them; and I want to see if there should not be some limitation placed upon these salaries, and whether some of the commissions that are now in existence should not be abolished.

I see here one that was created in 1896, called the International Prison Commission. It seems that the man who fills the position of commissioner takes a trip to Europe about every year. Last year it cost $1,312.

Can any Senator tell me whether it is necessary to further maintain a commission appointed in 1896, called a prison commission, and whether it is necessary for this man to go to Europe and spend $1,300, and spend $243 for clerk hire, and $350 for something else?

I should like to know why we are keeping this man on the rolls, and allowing him to go to Europe every year and spend $1,300 or $1,400. If anybody can give me information as to why he is needed I shall not move an amendment. But I should like to know. I have not had time to inquire, because for some reason the Secretary of the Treasury has delayed this report for three weeks.

Then I should like to ask—and perhaps the former chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee can tell me—why this Santee commission is still existing, costing the country $6,000. I confess that my ignorance is such that I do not know what it is. I see the Secretary has reported back that there is a commission known as the Santee Competency Commission, composed of a man by the name of Pollock, a man by the name of Marble, and a man by the name of McIntyre; and its expenses last year were over $6,000. Is it necessary for that commission to continue in existence?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. That is a question which would have to be referred to the department. The only knowledge I have on the subject is that they think evidently it is necessary because there is still more work for the commission. It was appointed for the purpose of assisting the Indian Office in the release of Indians on the ground that they were competent to manage their own affairs. I assume that the work is not finished, or they would not ask for its continuance.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to have this document put in the RECORD. The former chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who is a very diligent and very able Senator, and always does his duty in these matters, will see what is being done in the way of spending money for these commissions. I think a great many of them have been provided for from time to time in the Indian appropriation bill.

No one seems to know about this prison commission. Therefore, if I get no further information than I have now, I shall reserve the right to offer an amendment to repeal the law creating it. When a man is appointed on a prison commission, if he goes abroad one or two or three times, I do not see why that is not enough, and why he should continue longer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I can give the Senator, perhaps, a very little information on this subject. I have been aware of the fact that an individual has gone to Europe, possibly every year, for the purpose of investigating prison conditions. I think he makes a report to the department having that matter in charge. There is in the Department of Justice a very competent gentleman who looks after those things in this country; and I feel very sure that this gentleman who goes to Europe makes a report as to conditions in European prisons. Whether or not it is desirable to continue the commission is a matter about which I would not be willing to express an opinion; but I think that is the function of the official who occupies the place.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, he does the work referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire, but it is a little more than that. There is an international prison conference which meets every year with a view of discussing matters of prison discipline, and so forth. The United States has been a member of that conference, and I think it is a matter of convention under an international agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is true.

Mr. LODGE. I think we send a representative every year, because we have agreed with the other nations to do it, for the purpose of improving prisons and the care of prisoners.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will not delay the Senate further with this matter. I am going to publish this document in the RECORD; and as other appropriation bills come up I may introduce amendments to them. It seems to me there are commissions that ought to be defunct carrying per diems of $10 and other large salaries and expenses and clerks. If there is no longer any necessity for them, they ought to be abolished, and the drain on the Treasury ought to be stopped. I therefore ask that this document be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the document referred to be printed in the RECORD. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 794. Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

PERSONNEL OF COMMISSIONS.

Letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of May 14, 1912, information relative to commissions in existence under congressional and Executive authority.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 11, 1912.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In reply to Senate resolution of May 14, 1912, calling for a statement of the number and personnel of commissions now in existence under congressional and Executive authority, the salaries paid to members, officers, and employees of such commissions, and the individual and total expenses of each commission and member thereof for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, I have the honor to say that there are no such commissions under the Treasury Department, and, as this department has no record of such commissions in other departments, I called on the heads of the several executive departments for a list so far as pertains to their respective departments, with the following result:

The Secretary of State reports as follows:

PERRY'S VICTORY CENTENNIAL COMMISSION, PUT IN BAY, 1913.

[Authorized by act of Congress approved Mar. 3, 1911.]

Joseph Warren Keifer, of Ohio; Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, United States Army, retired; Rear Admiral Charles E. Clark, United States Navy, retired, members.

No expenses incurred during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

The Secretary of War reports as follows:

Of this character there appear to be only two commissions under the War Department, and these are the Alaska Road Commission, which has charge of the construction of military roads in Alaska, and the Commissioner for Marking the Graves of Confederate Dead (authorized by the acts of Congress approved Jan. 27, 1905, and Mar. 9, 1906; 33 Stat., 616, and 34 Stat., 56, respectively).

The Adjutant General of the Army reports that the records of his office do not afford the detailed information concerning the Alaska Road Commission, called for by the Senate resolution. The president of that commission has been called upon by telegraph to furnish such information, and it will be submitted as soon as received by the department.

As to the Commissioner for Marking the Graves of Confederate Dead, the salary of such commissioner (Hon. James H. Berry) is $5,000 per annum, and the salary of the clerk (there is only one employee) is at present $1,600 per annum. The total expenditures during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, for the commissioner and clerk were, respectively, $4,486.11 and $1,447.79. The only expenses of these officials of the character referred to in the resolution were for travel on official business, and for this purpose $12.60 was expended for travel of the clerk during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911.

There are a number of commissions and boards under the department, such as the four national military park commissions located at the battlefields of Gettysburg, Shiloh, Vicksburg, and Chattanooga, the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, the Mississippi River Commission, and the California Débris Commission; but, as stated above, these commissions are not understood to be such as the Senate resolution was intended to cover.

The Attorney General reports as follows:

I have the honor to inform you that the only commission under this department is the Commission to Investigate the Title of the United States to Lands in the District of Columbia, as provided by the act of May 30, 1908 (36 Stat., 543). It consists of the following persons, ex officio: Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney General, chairman; Hon. Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, member; Hon. GEORGE SUTHERLAND, United States Senator, chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, United States Senate, member; Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, Member of Congress, chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, House of Representatives, member; Hon. Cuno H. Rudolph, president Board of Commissioners of District of Columbia, member.

No salary is paid to either of the commissioners for services rendered as a member of the commission, and nothing has been paid as expenses for any member of the commission. The commission has the following employees: H. C. Gauss, secretary, carried as special assistant to the Attorney General, who is receiving a salary of $3,500 per annum, and Miss Jessie M. Aldrich, stenographer, whose compensation is $900 per annum, both salaries being paid from the appropriations made for the commission. The total expenses for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, were as follows:

Salaries	$4,441.40
Filing cases	66.35
Traveling expenses of secretary	19.40
Special survey by surveyor of District of Columbia	100.00
Total	4,627.15

The Postmaster General reports as follows:

The Commission on Second-Class Postage, provided for by joint resolution No. 66, approved March 4, 1911, is the only such commission having its expenses met by an appropriation for the Post Office Department. No funds were expended by this commission prior to July 1, 1911. However, there is submitted a statement showing the names of the members and employees, their salaries, and the expenses incurred during the present fiscal year. It is understood that the members of the commission have completed their work:

Personnel.

Commission (total salary):
Justice Charles E. Hughes	$5,000
Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell	5,000
Hon. Harry A. Wheeler	5,000
Employees (monthly salary):
Colley W. Bell, secretary	150
May L. Alexander, clerk	60
J. E. Johnson, messenger	75

Total funds expended.

	Salary.	Individual expenses.	Total.
Commissioner Hughes	$5,000.00		$5,000.00
Commissioner Lowell	5,000.00		5,000.00
Commissioner Wheeler	5,000.00	$669.24	5,669.24
Miscellaneous expenses, including salaries of employees			2,898.32
Total			18,567.56
To balance			6,432.44
Appropriation			25,000.00

The Secretary of the Navy reports no commissions under that department.

The Secretary of the Interior reports as follows:

The Secretary of Agriculture reports that the Secretary of Agriculture, under the provisions of section 4 of the act approved March 1, 1911 (Public. No. 435), is ex officio member of the National Forest Reservation Commission, such service carrying no additional salary compensation. This commission is constituted of two Members of the Senate, two Members of the House of Representatives, and the Secretaries of War, Agriculture, and the Interior.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor reports no commissions under his department.

Respectfully, J. F. CURTIS, Acting Secretary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have been informed—I have not had an opportunity to look up the question myself—that when the Commerce Court was created, the so-called Erdman Act was amended so as to require a member of the Court of Commerce to be one of that tribunal in the settlement of disputes.

I simply want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to that fact, and to inquire whether it will be necessary, in connection with the abolishment of the Commerce Court, to further amend the Erdman Act.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I shall refer the Senator to the lawyers present who have had this matter under consideration—the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Iowa, and the Senator from Idaho. Among so many lawyers, who sometimes disagree, a layman hardly wishes to express an opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have had this matter called to my attention before. It is true, I think, that the Chief Justice of the Commerce Court is ex officio a member of this industrial tribunal. But I do not think it is necessary to take any action on that matter until the bill which we now have under consideration becomes a law. If it becomes a law I believe it will then be necessary to appoint some one else if we desire to keep this commission in existence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and still open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. On page 28 I desire to amend by striking out, in lines 14 and 15, the words "within the discretion of the librarian."

I will say that this provision undertakes to leave entirely within the discretion of the librarian the question when the Library of Congress shall be open for reference use from 2 o'clock to 10 o'clock p. m. on Sundays and legal holidays. That ought not to be. The Library of Congress is one of the institutions which ought to be open to the public as many hours as possible. Many people come to Washington for a very short visit or stop-over, particularly on holidays, and those are the days when it is most important to have the Library open. I do not think the librarian should be invested with the power of closing it up on those days.

Mr. WARREN. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, on page 147 no provision is made for the retired justices. Of course, the word "judges" does not include justices. They are a distinct class of judicial officers. I therefore move to amend, on page 147, line 19, first, after the word "Retired," by inserting the words "justices and"; and, on the following line, 20, after the word "States," by inserting the words "justices and." We have retired justices, or are liable to have them at any time. I move that amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 147, line 19, after the word "Retired," the first word in the line, to insert the words "justices and," so that if amended the heading will read:

Retired justices and judges.

Also, in line 20, after the word "States," to insert the words "justices and," so that it will read, if amended:

To pay the salaries of the United States justices and judges retired under—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that when the bill is in the Senate I shall move to disagree to the amendment made to-day, on page 141, providing for an additional physicist. I can not give the line.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is line 22, page 141.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand it is in line 22, page 141. I give notice that when the bill is in the Senate I shall move to disagree to that amendment, and shall direct some remarks to that bureau.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire now, Mr. President, to reserve the amendment I have just indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho reserves the amendment indicated by him.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to reserve the amendments I proposed with respect to the issuance of injunctions and with regard to the Commerce Court act.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendments are not in the bill. They were simply offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments are reserved, as stated by the Senator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, may I offer an amendment before the bill is reported to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been already reported to the Senate. It will be in order for the Senator from South Dakota to offer any amendment he desires in the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The bill has been reported to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I offer an amendment——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, have the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole been concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let them be acted upon first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota may be presented later, after the Senate has passed upon the question of concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, excepting only those which have been reserved.

Mr. WARREN. There should be reserved the civil-service amendments. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is not in his chair, but he expects that reservation to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will also be reserved.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to reserve the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], abolishing the office of the additional circuit judges and such other amendments as follow that, which have for their effect to prevent an appropriation for the salaries of those judges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reserved as indicated by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NELSON. I ask to have reserved section 10 of the bill as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota reserves the amendment to section 10.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to reserve the amendment on page 34, line 19, "resident diplomatic officer, $6,500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho reserves the amendment just stated by him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the necessity for our reserving the amendments? I have been out for a while. I understand the bill is in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, in response to the inquiry of the Senator, that when a bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole the question then is on concurring in the amendment which had been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and if concurred in, they would be no longer subject to amendment. For that reason a particular amendment specified is reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to interfere with the reservations, but on account of two or three matters I should be glad if we would now lay the bill aside, and I shall call it up the first thing in the morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without acting upon the amendment now at all.

Mr. JONES. I wish to reserve the amendment in line 17, page 103, relating to the salary of the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reserved as indicated by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I also desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. It is that when an amendment was adopted in Committee of the Whole that was subject to a point of order, a point of order can be made in the Senate upon it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same amendment can undoubtedly be offered again and the same point of order can again be made in the Senate.

Mr. JONES. But the amendment I have in mind was adopted in Committee of the Whole and no point of order was made against it. Can a point of order be made in the Senate upon it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will decide that point when it is raised, not in anticipation. When the Senator presents the point, the Chair will rule on it.

Mr. JONES. I will present that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator presents a supposititous case, and therefore the Chair must decline to rule on it.

Mr. JONES. Then, for the purpose of making the point, I will reserve the amendment made in Committee of the Whole on line 17, page 103.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask for information what action was taken upon the request, which I understood was made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that we vote on certain matters to-morrow without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no agreement made upon that subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wanted to be entirely sure of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No such unanimous-consent agreement was made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the bill been laid aside?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not formally. The Chair was simply awaiting the pleasure of the Senate. The Senator from Wyoming has suggested that it be laid aside.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Before that is done, I should like to send up an amendment that I wish to propose so that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota will send up the amendment, and, without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD and also printed in the form of an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps no formal action is necessary to lay the bill aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But there are certain amendments that are still being suggested in reference to it, and that is the reason why the Chair can not lay it aside.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the reservations have been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask that the Senate permit the amendment to be read which the Senator from South Dakota has sent to the desk.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say that it is to follow the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] which was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment to be offered, and it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That the provisions of section 266 of the judicial code approved March 3, 1912, shall also apply to the issuing and granting of interlocutory injunctions suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming, without objection, the bill will be laid aside at this stage, it being stated by the Chair that the Senate has not acted upon the amendments which were made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to reserve the right to object to the amendments on pages 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, down to line 19 on page 8, in which the Senate has increased the salaries or increased the number of employees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reservation made by the Senator from Georgia will be noted, and the bill is laid aside.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

H. R. 13041. An act to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 20585. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 21230. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 21597. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 22261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 23063. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 23799. An act to amend "An act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge, or bridges, or viaducts across the waters between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands."

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday I asked consent for the passage of the bill (S. 6453) to amend an act entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," approved March 3, 1899. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] entered an objection, which he withdraws, and I now ask for the consideration of the bill. It has been read.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire what this bill does.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say it has been unanimously reported by the Naval Committees of both Houses. It requires that in cases where officers are examined for retirement the entire record shall be before the board, and it also gives them the right of appeal to the President.

Mr. BRISTOW. It does not provide for any advance in rank.

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely none. On the contrary, it provides that when they are retired they shall have the same grade they now hold, while the present law gives them an increased retirement grade.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am glad to know that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 16, after the words "May first," insert "or as soon thereafter as practicable," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States, approved March 3, 1899, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That should it be found at the end of any fiscal year that the retirements pursuant to the provisions of law now in force, the voluntary retirements provided for in this act, and casualties are not sufficient to cause the average vacancies enumerated in section 8 of this act, the Secretary of the Navy shall, on or about the 1st day of April of each year, convene a board of five rear admirals on the active list and shall place before said board for its actual consideration and guidance the complete service and medical records of all the officers in the grades of captain, commander, lieutenant commander, and lieutenant.

"Each member of said board shall swear or affirm that he will, without prejudice or partiality, examine the records provided for in this section, having in view the special fitness of officers and the efficiency of the naval service, and that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act and recommend for retirement the officers who are shown to be least efficient as evidenced by these records, and arrange the names of said officers in inverse order of their merit. The board shall keep minutes and a complete record of its proceedings, and this record shall bear the certificate of the senior member of the board, and of the recorder if there shall be anyone serving as such, that it is a complete and a true record, and the findings shall be in writing, signed by all the members, not less than four governing. The record of the proceedings and finding of this board shall be transmitted to the President on or before May 1 of the current year, who shall select from the names submitted by the board the number of officers provided by this act for retirement. In order to provide for discretionary action on the part of the President, the board shall select two officers from each grade in addition to the maximum number from each grade that may be retired during any one year, as hereafter provided for.

"The President shall, as soon after June 30 as may be practicable, make by order the transfers of such a number of officers from the list herein provided for as will cause the necessary vacancies in compliance with section 8 of this act: Provided, That not more than five captains, four commanders, four lieutenant commanders, and two lieutenants are so retired in any one year: Provided further, That the President shall, through the Navy Department, immediately after the finding of the board shall be submitted to him, and not later than May 1, or as soon thereafter as practicable, notify the officers who have been recommended for retirement by said board, and offer to each the opportunity to submit in writing for the President's consideration any matters tending to show cause why such officer should not be retired: Provided further, That no officer whose name appears on the list as submitted to the President by said board shall be eligible for voluntary retirement pending the action of the President in the premises. The promotions to fill the vacancies thus created shall date from the 30th of June of the current year: And provided further, That any officer retired under the provisions of this section shall be retired with the rank and three-fourths the pay of the grade from which he was retired."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSS OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

Mr. CURTIS. At the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] I ask unanimous consent that the address I send to the desk be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 850) in the type in which it is presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks that the speech of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] in reference to the Titanic disaster may be printed as a public document in the type in which it is presented. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the printing of the speech, but if I am not mistaken the speech has already been printed as a public document. I may be mistaken, however. I am perfectly willing that it should be printed, but I think it has already been printed as a public document.

Mr. LODGE. It has been printed with the report of the committee as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I am informed that it has been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather that the request should go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. Then let the matter remain pending until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request will go over.

FISH HATCHERY IN MARYLAND, VIRGINIA, OR WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WATSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6414) to establish a fish hatchery and fish station in the State of Maryland or in the State of West Virginia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment, under the Bureau of Fisheries, of a fish hatchery and station for experimental work in fish breeding and the study of fish diseases, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point in Maryland, Virginia, or West Virginia, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a fish-experiment station and fish hatchery."

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD CONVEYANCES.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16689) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co. It is the bill to which I referred this morning in the notice I gave.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all conveyances or agreements heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or the Union Pacific Railway Co., or Union Pacific Railroad Co., or the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Co., or the Union Pacific Railway Co., Eastern Division, or the Kansas Pacific Railway Co., or the successors or assigns of any of them, of or concerning land forming a part of the right of way of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. granted by the Government by the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes"; and also all conveyances or agreements heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or the Union Pacific Railway Co., or the Denver Pacific Railway & Telegraph Co., or the successors or assigns of any of them, of or concerning land forming a part of the right of way between Denver, Colo., and Cheyenne, Wyo., of any of said companies granted by or held under any act of Congress, and all conveyances or agreements confining the limits of said right of way, or restricting the same, are hereby legalized, validated, and confirmed to the extent that the same would have been legal or valid if the land involved therein had been held by the corporation making such conveyance or agreement under absolute or fee-simple title.

That in all instances in which title or ownership of any part of said right of way heretofore mentioned is claimed as against said corporation, or either of them, or the successors or assigns of any of them, by or through adverse possession of the character and duration prescribed by the laws of the State in which the land is situated, such adverse possession shall have the same effect as though the land embraced within the lines of said right of way had been granted by the United States absolutely or in fee instead of being granted as a right of way.

SEC. 2. That any part of the right of way heretofore mentioned which has been, under the law applicable to that subject, abandoned as a right of way is hereby granted to the owner of the land abutting thereon.

SEC. 3. That nothing hereinbefore contained shall have the effect to diminish said right of way to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main track of the railroad as now established and maintained.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the question of consideration has not yet been determined. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I would desire to amend the bill with the proviso that has usually been attached to all of these bills—that is, without offering it formally—

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be taken as a recognition of the Union Pacific Railway Co. as successors to the rights of the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

We have guarded those bills in that way ever since the attempted reorganization in 1896, 1897, and 1898.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not insist on that amendment, because there is nothing in the bill that can by any possibility infringe upon the rule he has in mind. This is a bill to provide for the adjacent property owners, both in the country and in the cities, on account of either an indifference or an ignorance of the railway company concerning the width of its right of way. It does not touch the dealings of the railway companies with themselves. It simply says that if either of these railway companies has sold part of its right of way to an adjacent owner that sale shall have the same effect as though the right of way were alienable property.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that in this particular measure the necessity is not so urgent as it has been in other measures presented to Congress, but the question is one of very great importance. There are those who refused to surrender their bonds at the time of the reorganization of that road, amounting to millions of dollars, and they were required either to surrender their bonds or to lose. They were required not only to surrender their bonds, but to pay so much money, and in the Northern Pacific case it was a very large sum. The same facts apply in substance to all these reorganizations. Now, those people still contend for their rights. They were left out of the reorganization and were not entitled to participate in it. It is a large question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have had hearings before the Committee on Railroads of the Senate involving this question, and it is one of such importance that the reservation ought to be inserted. It can do no harm.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course I want to meet the views of the Senator from Idaho if I can, but I put this question to him: Suppose the Union Pacific Railroad Co. had executed a conveyance of land that it had a right to sell and afterwards it attempted to repudiate that conveyance, and on behalf of the right of the grantee of the conveyance Congress sought to validate it, the Senator from Idaho would not contend that to such a bill there should be attached the condition or proviso he has mentioned, because the subjects are so widely separated it would seem a reflection upon our knowledge of the whole matter to put such a proviso in this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will give the Senator some light on that subject. It has been one of the attempted defenses in more than one case that Congress has recognized those transfers by reciting in legislation or basing legislation upon the assumption that the railway company was successor to the railroad company. The Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Oregon Railroad & Navigation, and I could name a number of them, under this pretended reorganization merely changed the name from "railroad" to "railway." It involves millions and millions of dollars of unsettled questions in the courts, and it can certainly militate nothing against the purpose the Senator has in view to make that provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Idaho write out the amendment, because I am unfamiliar with the subject he is talking about?

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not anticipate that the bill was coming up today. I am quite familiar with the subject. I will propose an amendment.

Mr. LODGE. While the Senator is preparing his amendment——

Mr. HEYBURN. I was going to state the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will move to amend by inserting at the end of the substitute the words:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be taken or construed to be a recognition of any right in the Union Pacific Railway Co. as successor in interest to the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

Mr. CUMMINS. In so far as I can, I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following words:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be taken or construed to be a recognition of any right in the Union Pacific Railway Co. as successor in interest to the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the amendment proposed by the committee been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho is necessarily an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; I repeat that I accept it so far as I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice on the calendar that this bill is stated as having been reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; it was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMOOT. The calendar states that it was reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CUMMINS. The calendar is wrong in that respect.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason I called attention to the fact was that the calendar should be corrected, because the bill was never considered by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CUMMINS. It was considered by and unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is properly stated on the bill itself as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

MARY BRADFORD CROWNINSHIELD.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1152) granting an increase of pension to Mary Bradford Crowninshield.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the words "rate of" to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Bradford Crowninshield, widow of Arent Schuyler Crowninshield, late rear admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 6688.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6688) to repeal section 13 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes.'"

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal section 13 of an act entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes,'" approved March 2, 1907, which authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to convey to the purchaser from the United States of square 1131, the south part of square 1117, and the squares south of squares 1123, 1148, and 1149, in the city of Washington, all the interest of the United States in the land lying south of the squares so purchased and between them and the channel of the Anacostia River upon the payment by the purchaser into the Treasury of the United States of such sum of money as the Secretary of War, upon consideration of all the circumstances, shall determine proper to be paid for the land, and which authorizes and directs the surveyor of the District of Columbia to mark out such land and determine the areas and to record a plat thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETRIAL OF MILITARY ACADEMY CADETS.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 99.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title of the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing the President to reassemble the court-martial which on August 16, 1911, tried Ralph I. Sasse, Ellicott H. Freeland, Tattnall D. Simpkins, and James D. Christian, cadets of the Corps of Cadets of the United States Military Academy, and sentenced them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has heretofore been read in full and an amendment agreed to. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] was very much interested in this joint resolution, and I do not think it ought to be taken up in his absence. Personally, I have not any objection to it; but he was very much interested in it and spoke on it.

Mr. DU PONT. I think, Mr. President, the Senator's objections were largely of an impersonal character and on points of law which were raised. I doubt very much if he objects to the joint resolution itself.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think it is the custom not to take up any matters of that kind in the absence of a Senator interested; and it seems to me that the Senator from New York ought to be present when it is considered. At least I should not want it taken up under such circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator from New York had an amendment which he desired to offer to the joint resolution. Personally, I would not object; but I do not think the joint resolution should be taken up in the absence of the Senator from New York, and therefore I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. SWANSON. I understood the Senator from Delaware expected to move to take up the joint resolution, and not to ask that it be considered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asked that it be taken up by unanimous consent. The Senator did not make a motion to the effect stated by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to be recognized after the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has concluded, in order that I may make that motion.

APACHE INDIANS, FORT SILL MILITARY RESERVATION, OKLA.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 6776.

Mr. LODGE. I thought a motion had been made to take up the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand. The Chair did not hear such a motion.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply gave notice to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6776) for the relief of the Apache Indians held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I shall have to interpose an objection, because I want the report read when the bill comes up, and that will take up more time to-night than I care to consume. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will not be inclined to press the bill to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho objects.

RETRIAL OF MILITARY ACADEMY CADETS.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 99, unanimous consent for the consideration of which was asked by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution named by him notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. SWANSON. We should dispose of the matter one way or the other because if it does not pass soon it will be too late to do anything at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask for division.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we had better have the yeas and nays if we are going to have anything. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As I am not aware as to how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. In his absence I will refrain from voting. If he were here, and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BOURNE. I should like to announce that my colleague, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is unavoidably detained. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the negative). I voted through inadvertence and I wish to withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHIVELY. My colleague [Mr. KERN] is detained from the Senate Chamber on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. DU PONT. As I have already stated, I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea" on this question, and I therefore will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. OWEN] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 16, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 14, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 13, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that the way is always open for the betterment of the conditions of life and its far-reaching purposes. Possess us, we beseech Thee, with Thy spirit, that we may see clearly the way, and walk fearlessly in consonance with the highest dictates of conscience in all that pertains to the duties of the hour, that Thy will may be done in us, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

IMPEACHMENT OF CORNELIUS H. HANFORD.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I present to the House a privileged report on a resolution referred to the Committee on the Judiciary a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] presents a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

[House Report No. 880. Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

RELATIVE TO THE ALLEGED OFFICIAL MISCONDUCT OF CORNELIUS H. HANFORD.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report, to accompany House resolution 576:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House resolution 576, report the same back to the House with the following amendment and recommend that the amendment be agreed to and that as amended the resolution do pass:

Page 1, line 1, strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert in lieu of the language so stricken out the following:

"That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is requisite concerning the official misconduct of Cornelius H. Hanford, United States judge for the western district of the State of Washington, and say whether said judge has been in a drunken condition while presiding in court; whether said judge has been guilty of corrupt conduct in office; whether the administration of said judge has resulted in injury and wrong to litigants in his court and others affected by his decisions; and whether said judge has been guilty of any misbehavior for which he should be impeached.

"And in reference to this investigation the said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a clerk and stenographer, if necessary, and to appoint and send a subcommittee whenever and wherever it may be necessary to take testimony for the use of said committee. The said subcommittee while so employed shall have the same powers in respect to obtaining testimony as are herein given to said Committee on the Judiciary, with a sergeant at arms, by himself or deputy, who shall serve the process of said committee and the process and orders of said subcommittee and shall attend the sitting of the same as ordered and as directed thereby, and that the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does this resolution as reported follow the precedents in cases of this kind in the past?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, I may answer the gentleman. I have before me a copy of the report of the 10th day of December, 1903, in the House of Representatives—a report made by Mr. Henry W. Palmer, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Judiciary—on what was known as the Judge Charles Swayne case; and in drawing the amendment to the original resolution I have followed as nearly as practicable the language in that resolution of the 10th day of December, 1903, in the Swayne case.

Mr. MANN. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. CLAYTON. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5176. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Preston.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. J. Res. 299. Joint resolution proposing an international maritime conference.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5176. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Preston; to the Committee on Pensions.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the report of the conference committee on the Army appropriation bill. I will state that the report has already been read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on Tuesday the matter rested on points of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]. If anybody desires to be heard on either side on the points of order, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, on June 11, 1912, I made points of order, as will appear from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 7980, against the conference report. At the same time I specified certain points of order that I would call to the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. PRINCE. I will speak a little louder. I say that on that date I made points of order against the conference report. I submitted to the Speaker, upon his request, the following points of order against the conference report:

That the conferees have discussed and proposed amendments which have not been committed to them by either of the Houses and therein have exceeded their jurisdiction, and which amendments, agreed to and reported by the conference committee, are not germane to the amendments of the Senate or to the original bill, specifically calling attention to amendments Nos. 40, 42, and 73.

In looking over the conference report, I have found one or two other points of order that I thought would lie against this conference report. This morning I called the attention of the parliamentary clerk of the Speaker to these two points. I had fortified myself with the right to object to the entire conference report, as appears from the RECORD on that day, and the Speaker very nicely put it in, saying—

The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order.

I make these preliminary remarks, so that I shall not appear to be unfair in my presentation of the points of order.

At the earliest moment I had I gave notice to the parliamentary clerk as to some of the points I would mention. I desire to call the Speaker's attention to this amendment. It will be found on page 20 of the bill and is No. 23. The trouble with the copy of the bill I have is that there is a top number and a bottom number. The top number of the bill is 20 and the bottom number is 21. The amendment to which I wish to call the Chair's attention is No. 23. The House made a provision for a traveling allowance of enlisted men on discharge, $900,000, and then there was a proviso that the Senate amended by providing that hereafter when the enlisted man who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912, is discharged from service his pay shall be reduced. The conferees amended that amendment by making the provision apply to all men in the Army.

The SPEAKER. Where did they make that change?

Mr. PRINCE. The Senate amended it by striking out all after the word "provided," in line 12, and inserting that hereafter when an enlisted man who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912, is discharged from the service, he shall receive 2 cents a mile. And the conferees changed the pay of all enlisted men so far as travel and pay is concerned. Under the law as it now is he gets 4 cents a mile. The Senate wanted it to apply to men hereafter discharged, beginning on the 1st of July, 1912. The conferees set aside the hereafter and made it applicable to between 75,000 and 80,000 enlisted men who are under contract with the Government to receive pay of 4 cents a mile, cutting squarely in two the travel pay and allowance of the present enlisted force. Now, the only point in dispute between the two Houses was whether it should apply to July 1, 1912. The conferees made a provision which was not a question in difference between the two Houses, and made a provision which is violative of the contract entered into by the enlisted man when he entered the Government service, because it cuts the travel and pay of the enlisted man in two.

The SPEAKER. Is that the end of that objection?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes. Does the Chair desire me to take up these points one after another, or will the Chair dispose of them as we go along?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will dispose of them all at one time, but the Chair would like to have the gentleman complete his argument on each point as he goes along.

Mr. PRINCE. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that the conferees exceeded their jurisdiction. The difference between the two Houses was whether the deduction should begin with men who enlisted after the 1st of July, 1912, or not.

The SPEAKER. What change does the gentleman claim the conferees made which exceeded their jurisdiction?

Mr. PRINCE. They exceeded their authority in making it applicable to all men in the Army, when the purpose of the amendment was in dispute as to the men who enlisted hereafter in the Army. I claim that in doing that the conferees have changed legislation now in existence—have made legislation which is violative of the contract which the soldier entered into with the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman whether that is parliamentary law for the Speaker to decide or a matter of contract for the decision of the courts.

Mr. PRINCE. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is a question which the Speaker should take into consideration as to whether the conferees shall go outside of the difference between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The question involved is whether they did go outside. What does the gentleman claim the provision agreed upon by the conferees does?

Mr. PRINCE. It affects the enlisted man that is discharged to-day, while the purpose of the amendment of the Senate was to affect the enlisted man who enlisted after the 1st of July, 1912. The point in dispute between the Houses was whether we should have it apply or not to soldiers hereafter entering the service.

The SPEAKER. The intention of the House amendment was simply a proviso to limit——

Mr. PRINCE. I beg the Chair's pardon, but the House made no amendment; it made the ordinary allowance for travel and pay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair intended to say the Senate amendment.

Mr. PRINCE. That applied to men who enlisted on or after July 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER. What was the subject matter of the controversy between the two Houses?

Mr. PRINCE. The subject matter was the travel allowance of enlisted men.

The SPEAKER. That is all there was to it?

Mr. PRINCE. That is the subject matter, but the point of difference between the two Houses was whether it should begin at a certain time or not. If the Speaker takes the position that the travel allowance was there, then they could legislate with reference to every kind of travel allowance to men of any kind.

The SPEAKER. Is not that precisely the thing that was in controversy, and the whole thing?

Mr. PRINCE. The only thing in controversy, as I take it, was whether it should begin to apply before July 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER. This was the House proposition:

For travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge, $900,000.

Mr. PRINCE. And that is all.

The SPEAKER. And the travel allowance was the only conceivable question involved.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Senate put a proviso in, and all that the conferees do is to strike out about 9 or 10 words of one proposition of the Senate proviso. Were they not empowered to discuss it?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; but, Mr. Speaker, the lines of decision are these, as I understand them: The conferees must determine the point of difference. If you open the question of the subject matter, the Army is the subject matter of this whole bill.

The SPEAKER. True; but we go by sections and paragraphs. The general proposition about it is that all of the Speakers have held in the last 15 or 20 years, so far as the Chair knows, that the conferees can not take up brand new subject matter and inject it into a bill.

Mr. PRINCE. That is true.

The SPEAKER. But if the subject is treated in either the House proposition or the Senate proposition, then the conferees have a pretty wide latitude as to what they will do with it.

Mr. PRINCE. If it is germane to the original bill or amendments, and that is the question I am making. There is no doubt about its being germane to the subject matter. I grant that. But the point of difference is as I limit it there, and the conferees have exceeded the point of difference and gone beyond it, so as to apply to all men now in the service as well as those hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the next proposition.

Mr. PRINCE. Take up amendment 48, page 45. On page 45 the subject matter is water and sewers at military posts, and I call the attention of the Speaker to the subject matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to read that proposition.

Mr. PRINCE. It is as follows:

Water and sewers at military posts: For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance; for the installation and extension of plumbing within buildings where the same is not specifically provided for in other appropriations; for the purchase and repair of fire apparatus, including fire-alarm systems; for the disposal of sewage; for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing within buildings; and for extra-duty pay of enlisted men and hire of employees, $1,702,595.

That was the bill as presented to the committee by the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee of the Whole added the following proviso to that original bill when it was presented to them:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts: Fort Apache, Boise Barracks, Fort Brady, Fort Clark, Fort George Wright, Fort Jay, Fort Lincoln, Fort Logan H. Root, Fort McIntosh, Fort McKenzie, Madison Barracks, Fort Meade, Fort Niagara, Fort Ontario, Fort Wayne, Whipple Barracks, Fort William Henry Harrison, Fort Yellowstone, Fort Ethan Allen, Plattsburg Barracks, Fort Robinson, Fort Missoula, Fort Logan, Fort Douglas, and Fort D. A. Russell.

When the bill as amended went to the Senate, the Senate struck out the proviso and made no counterproposition of any kind. The conferees agreed upon the following:

In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That not exceeding $1,000 of the sum herein appropriated, together with the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of the appropriation in the Army appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, for the improvement of the Crow Creek or Fort D. A. Russell target and maneuver reservation, Wyoming, may be expended by the Secretary of War, in his discretion, in the acquirement by purchase or condemnation proceedings of certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes lying within the limits of the aforesaid reservation."

That is clearly new matter, not germane in any shape, form, or manner. There is no possible way by which it can be made germane. Here is a proposition for water and sewers at military posts. It is for procuring and introducing water for buildings and premises at such military posts and stations, and so forth, for the installation of plumbing, for the purchase and repair of fire apparatus, for the disposal of sewage and for repairs to water and sewer systems and plumbing within buildings and for extra-duty pay of enlisted men and hire of employees; and there is not a syllable, not a word, not a hook upon which this can hang, not a single scintilla, not a word or expression that can be strained by the most extreme possible way into part of a water and sewer provision for military posts.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The matter reported by the conferees is an amendment to that part of the text that was agreed to by both Houses, is it not?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is to say a certain portion of the paragraph was permitted to remain as it was?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the proviso was stricken out?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the conferees now attach an amendment to that part of the text which was agreed to by the House and the Senate and was not, and is not, in dispute. Is not that the fact?

Mr. PRINCE. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. The gentleman from Indiana only states one-half of it. What the Senate did was to strike out the proviso.

Mr. PRINCE. That is it, and that is all.

The SPEAKER. But the proviso that was stricken out by the Senate went to conference as a matter in controversy, did it not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the only matter in controversy, and the question of substituting something for the proviso must relate to the dispute or disagreement upon the proviso, must be upon the same subject matter, and of course must be germane thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows—the Chair did not ask the gentleman from Indiana as to that, but because the statement of the gentleman left out the gist of the matter by not referring to the part that the Senate struck out of the House bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that the matter reported by the conference committee had no sort of relation to the matter stricken out by the Senate—to the matter which was really in dispute. There is no kind of relation between the matter reported by the conference committee and the matter that was stricken out by the Senate—the only thing in dispute—and they left the matter out that the Senate struck out and attached another and independent amendment to the text that was agreed to by both Houses.

The SPEAKER. Now, the trouble is, passing on one point and not on the whole thing, they struck out one proviso and put in another——

Mr. MANN. They did not put in another.

The SPEAKER. Well, the conferees put it in.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The conferees put in one that had no relation to the proviso which was stricken out—an entirely different subject and not at all germane to the proviso which was stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not ask the gentleman about that; he was asking about the other.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. PRINCE. I would like to finish up this point.

Mr. MONDELL. It is right on the point that has been raised by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well; I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Indiana suggests the conferees exceeded their authority, following the suggestion or contention of the gentleman from Illinois. The fact is that the House put in a proviso that had to do with permanent improvements at military posts. The Senate struck it out, and the conferees put in a proviso which also has to do with permanent improvements at military posts. In other words, what was inserted in conference was entirely germane, because it related directly to the same sort of improvements that were prohibited by the House provision.

The SPEAKER. What is the subject matter of this whole paragraph?

Mr. MONDELL. The subject matter is permanent improvements at military posts, including Fort D. A. Russell.

The SPEAKER. Where does the gentleman get his authority to make that statement?

Mr. KAHN. It is under the heading of water and sewers.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment is amendment 48, as I understand it. The language is—

No part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts.

Here is a provision in lieu of that which has to do with permanent improvements at a certain Army post. It would have been impossible for the conferees to have adopted a provision more directly in line with the provision stricken out; furthermore, if I may be permitted to say so, it does seem to me that the gentleman from Illinois is making a good deal of stir about a thousand-dollar appropriation in a bill carrying over a hundred million dollars.

Mr. PRINCE. There is more than that. That does not make any difference.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a question?

Mr. PRINCE. I will consent to one question, but I would like to address myself to the Speaker and get this out of the way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] declines to yield.

Mr. PRINCE. Now, Mr. Speaker, to get over this question, this is a section of the bill which has to do with water and sewers at military posts and nothing else.

The SPEAKER. The main section had to do with that. There is no question about it.

Mr. PRINCE. Now, then, turning back to page 37 of the bill, you will find where it has to do with barracks and quarters. Looking down to line 10, it reads as follows:

Of barracks or authorized allowance of quarters for noncommissioned officers and enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available.

The SPEAKER. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. PRINCE. On page 37, line 12.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman go by the top numbers or the bottom numbers.

Mr. PRINCE. By the top numbers here.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] yield to one further suggestion?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; I will yield to one.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the gentleman contends the language stricken out had to do exclusively with matters of water supply. I do not so understand it, but admitting, for the sake of the argument, that to be true, the lands proposed to be purchased are a part of the watershed of Fort Russell. They are essentially a part of Fort D. A. Russell and its water supply. The gentleman insists that no amendment would be in order in conference excepting one relating to water supply. Then his argument has no force against this amendment, because it is one that affects the water supply of Fort D. A. Russell and provides for a permanent improvement of the same.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. I will yield to my colleague [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], there is an amendment by the Senate which relates to water and sewers at military posts. Then the proviso is:

That no part of this appropriation will be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts.

Now, that was the matter in conference. If the Speaker will turn just across, on page 45 of this document which I hold in my hand, in lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment it says to insert the following.

What is the following? Down in the middle it says:

For the improvement of the Crow Creek, on Fort D. A. Russell target and maneuver reservation—

And not a word about the matter that was in controversy or was submitted—may be expended by the Secretary of War, in his discretion—

For what?—

in the acquirement by purchase or condemnation proceedings of certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes, lying within the limits of the aforesaid reservation.

It seems to me that that was not in conference either by the House provision or by the Senate amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield there for a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question before he sits down. What is the subject matter of the proviso the House put onto that bill?

Mr. CANNON. The subject matter is in the proviso—that no part of the appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts.

Now, the House disagrees to the Senate amendment, and upon that disagreement the conferees get their jurisdiction. And there is nothing either by a liberal construction, and, it seems to me, a forced construction, that would allow the conferees to purchase the land which the agreement covers. For what? Not for water, not for sewers, or military posts, but for a matter independent of either the House provision or the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague, in passing, yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the original proposition in the House bill was an appropriation for certain purposes—water, sewers, and so forth. If enacted in that way, simply as an appropriation, that money could not be expended for any other purpose than the purposes named in the bill. But it could be expended at any Army post, because the appropriation was, generally speaking, for sewers and water supply at the Army posts. Thereupon the House inserted a limitation upon that appropriation, which reads:

No part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts.

Now, the appropriation could not have been used, regardless of this limitation, for any purpose in the way of permanent improvements except water supply, sewerage, and so forth—that is, without the limitation. The purpose of putting that limitation upon the appropriation was to prevent this money being used for water supply and sewerage at these Army posts. The purpose was not to prevent the money being used for the purchase of land or for the construction of buildings or other permanent improvements, because the appropriation could not have been used for those purposes if the limitation had not been put upon the appropriation. It is true that the wording of the limitation is "expended for permanent improvements," and the words "permanent improvements" have a very wide latitude. But the Senate having stricken out the limitation, and the House having agreed to the amendment, the point of difference between the House and the Senate was whether any portion of this appropriation for sewer and water purposes could be used at any of the named Army posts.

The point of difference was not whether this money could be used for the construction of buildings, because it could not have been used for that purpose if there were no limitation on the appropriation. The general law is a limitation itself upon the expenditure for any purpose except the one named in the appropriation.

Now, that being the point of difference between the two Houses, whether this money appropriated for sewer and water purposes could be used for those purposes at those Army posts, the conferees leave that without settling it and bring in a provision providing that a portion of this money can be used for the purchase of maneuvering grounds. Maneuvering grounds have nothing to do with water supply and sewerage, and although the gentleman has suggested that they may aid in water supply, that is purely ephemeral and imaginary. There is nothing in the bill to show that the purpose of the new appropriation is the conservation of the water supply, nor is it confined to the purchase of land for the post. The conference report is for the purchase of maneuvering grounds, regardless of the expenditure in connection with the posts. The language is—

For target and maneuver reservations; and the power of condemnation is granted.

How can it be claimed that a limitation upon an appropriation for water supply, providing that that money shall not be expended for a particular purpose, brings into controversy between the two Houses the question of using that money for the purchase of maneuver grounds? Because, unless that is in controversy and difference, the conferees could not bring in a report upon that. The question of the purchase of maneuver grounds out of this money appropriated for sewerage and water supply was not in difference between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman a question. What is the subject matter of the proviso?

Mr. MANN. The expenditure of the appropriation at these posts for water supply and sewerage purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if this is not true, that the subject matter of that proviso, "that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements," and so on, was permanent improvements or not?

Mr. MANN. Permanent improvements in the way of water supply and sewerage only.

The SPEAKER. But it does not say that.

Mr. MANN. It does not say that in so many words, but that is plainly what it means. It is not to be supposed that they would insert in the bill a provision which means nothing. This money could not have been expended at these posts for any other purpose, regardless of the limitation, and the purpose of the limitation was to limit the expenditure to provide that it could not be expended at these posts for the purpose named in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The contention of the gentleman, then, is that this section was the subject matter and that the subject matter of the section was water and sewers at military posts, and that the proviso does not change the subject matter?

Mr. MANN. It does not, in my opinion.

The SPEAKER. And that the matter which the conferees undertook to insert treats of an entirely different subject?

Mr. MANN. An entirely different subject.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, one further suggestion. On page 37 of the bill, at the top of the page, you will find the question of barracks and quarters. Beginning at line 12, you will find these words:

Of grounds for cantonments, camp sites, and other military purposes.

There was the place for this amendment, if it was germane, because this deals with camp sites, and does not deal at all with water and sewers.

Now, as I said before, the point of difference is in the question of water and sewers, and that no part of this money shall be expended on these particular posts for the purpose of improving the water supply or the sewerage, and the place for the other is at another point in the bill, for barracks and quarters. It is the subject that this would treat of, if it was proper at all, and it is here foreign, and has nothing to do with it, and is outside, and I can not see how it can be called germane to a subject matter to which it is not pertinent, when it is germane to another subject matter that is not in dispute.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Is it the contention of those who oppose the gentleman from Illinois that under the language "permanent improvements" the Senate amendment is germane which provides for the purchase of new land?

Mr. PRINCE. I presume that is the contention.

Mr. COOPER. Then the question amounts to this, if the gentleman will permit an interruption: The Government of the United States having certain land, can it be held that the purchase of other land is an improvement upon the land which it now holds? If a man has a piece of property and puts permanent improvements upon it, the words "permanent improvements" have a definite meaning, and the purchase of new land is in no sense an improvement of existing property.

Mr. PRINCE. I think that is all I care to say about that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the contention is——

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did have the floor, but the Chair thought he yielded it to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. PRINCE. No; I said I was through with that section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming can get an opportunity to express his views on the other side later, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], who has the floor, objects to yielding now.

Mr. PRINCE. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming now.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not care to have the gentleman yield to me at all.

Mr. PRINCE. I am perfectly willing to yield. It is no purpose of mine to foreclose discussion.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman evidently did not want the other side heard.

Mr. PRINCE. I am perfectly willing to have any side heard. The gentleman can go on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers to hear the gentleman from Illinois make a statement of all these points, and then if the Chair has any doubt in his mind about any of them he will suggest that to the House.

Mr. PRINCE. The next is amendment No. 40, on page 38. I call attention to that because perhaps it may be well to consider it in discussing amendment No. 42. Amendment No. 40 provides:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any Army post which the Secretary of War has decided or may decide to abandon in the interest of the service.

Then it enumerates a number of Army posts.

The SPEAKER. The Senate struck that out.

Mr. PRINCE. The Senate struck that out. As to amendment No. 40 I make no contention.

The SPEAKER. What is it that the gentleman is making a point about?

Mr. PRINCE. I am reading amendment No. 40, because I think, in fairness to the Speaker, it should be considered.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's contention?

Mr. PRINCE. My contention is that the conferees have gone outside of their right and have introduced into this conference report matter that is not germane and proper to be considered.

The SPEAKER. What is the matter that the gentleman thinks is not germane?

Mr. PRINCE. On page 39, amendment No. 42, is another proviso that was in the House bill that was stricken out by the Senate:

Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated by this act shall be used to convert a mobile army post of less grade or size than a regimental post into a regimental post or a regimental post into a brigade post.

Now, in lieu of these two—No. 40 and No. 42—the Senate having disagreed to them, the conferees put in amendment 42, which is found on page 39. It is as follows:

No. 42. In lieu of the amendment, insert: Provided, That a commission, to consist of Lieut. Gens. Samuel B. M. Young and Arthur MacArthur, retired, and Maj. Gens. George M. Randall, Jesse M. Lee, and Charles F. Humphrey, retired, and two members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, who shall be designated by the President of the Senate, and two members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, who shall be designated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is hereby created to consider and report to the Senate and House of Representatives on or before the 1st day of January, 1913, upon the location and distribution of military posts which are required within the continental limits of the United States for the proper accommodation, instruction, and training of the Army, but not including Coast Artillery posts and troops. The commission shall make recommendations, giving reasons in detail therefor, as to which of the existing posts shall be retained or abandoned, and of those recommended to be retained which, if any, shall be enlarged, and to what extent. In all of its recommendations the commission shall have due regard for the proper distribution of the different arms of the service as determined by strategic, sanitary, and economical considerations, and by the relations which should be maintained by the Regular Army with the Organized Militia and the public at large, and taking into consideration the number of troops which may be stationed in Hawaii and the Canal Zone. The commission shall meet upon the call of the chairman, who shall be the senior lieutenant general on the commission, at the earliest practicable date, and proceed to the execution of the work of the commission in such manner as the commission may determine. Prior to the rendition of the report hereinbefore required it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to authorize the commencement of no new posts within the continental limits of the United States and to preserve and maintain in the same manner as at the time of the passage of this act all posts now in existence which are liable to enlargement or retention, according to the terms of this act. Actual and necessary expenses of the commission shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively and equally.

Now, what is the point at issue? There are in the United States, not including Alaska, 168 posts. Of these 141 are at present garrisoned. The original bill provided that no part of the appropriation should be expended at any of the 25 posts named therein. Here is an appropriation that no part of which shall be expended upon 25 posts named in the bill. The Senate disagrees to that proposition and a commission is appointed; for what? Now, the question in dispute was, shall any part of this appropriation go to these posts? What posts? Twenty-five specifically named in the bill. The Senate disagrees to that, and the conferees now come in and agree that a commission shall be appointed to consider all the Army posts, 168, of which 141 are at present garrisoned.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois does not want to mislead the Chair. There are not 168 mobile army posts in the country. A large number of the 168 are Coast Artillery posts, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman from Virginia state how many at present are garrisoned that are not coast-artillery posts?

Mr. HAY. About 55 or 60; not over 60.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois to read the first proviso on page 38—the words struck out by the Senate. What does the gentleman say is the subject matter of that?

Mr. PRINCE. The subject matter is that no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any of the following-named Army posts.

The SPEAKER. That is not the whole statement:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any Army post which the Secretary of War has decided or may decide to abandon in the interest of the service—and then it goes on to enumerate a lot of posts. What is the subject matter of those lines?

Mr. PRINCE. The abandonment of Army posts.

The SPEAKER. That is it.

Mr. PRINCE. Now, let me answer. The House—and this is supposed to be a part of the RECORD—the House, on December 18, 1911, passed a resolution asking the Secretary of War to give information as to what Army posts he had abandoned or contemplated abandoning. On January 25, 1912, the Secretary of War answered the House upon that question that the number was 25, and these are the 25 mentioned in this provision. Here are the RECORD proceedings of the House asking what the Speaker has asked me, that no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any Army post which the Secretary of War has decided or is going to decide to abandon. He was asked a question by resolution, and replied on January 25. These are the 25 that are mentioned. The chairman of the committee puts it at 60 posts in all, and therefore there are 35 here that were not in dispute at all before the conferees.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. I understand the gentleman is making a point of order to amendment 42. Now, amendment 42 provides that no part of the sum appropriated by this act shall be used to convert a mobile army post of less grade or size than a regimental post into a regimental post, or a regimental post into a brigade post. That includes every mobile army post in the whole country, and therefore all of the posts are included under this amendment 42.

Mr. PRINCE. Let us understand ourselves, so that we will not present anything to the Speaker that is not in controversy. The gentleman contends that the forty-second amendment, on page 39, is to the proviso on page 39?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. And it stands or falls on that and not anything prior thereto. Let us see. I want to be fair about it, so that the Speaker will get all the information. I want to be fair with the Speaker, and I do not want to be unfair with the House in any way.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I simply state that amendment 42 includes all the posts—that no money shall be expended in any of these posts.

The SPEAKER. But the contention of the gentleman from Illinois is that amendment 42 as recommended by the conferees covers amendment 40, which strikes out the proviso beginning on line 12 of page 38, and also amendment 42, on page 39. The whole thing in issue is the abandonment of Army posts.

Mr. HAY. That is the point.

The SPEAKER. That is the subject matter of that controversy.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the question at issue is the abandonment of Army posts, the question of whether a post shall be enlarged or reduced is not at issue.

The SPEAKER. That is one of the conditions on which they abandon Army posts—that is an incident of the discussion.

Mr. PRINCE. The proviso says that no part of the sum appropriated by this act shall be used to convert a mobile army post of less grade or size than a regimental post into a regimental post, or a regimental post into a brigade post.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman a question. Undoubtedly the whole controversy at this particular time is the abandonment of Army posts. The Chair has to decide as to whether this amendment suggested by the conferees is germane to that subject. What has the gentleman to say about that?

Mr. PRINCE. My answer to that is this: That if it was confined to the question of the abandonment of Army posts, pure and simple, it might be germane, but here is an Army board or commission created—

To consider and report to the Senate and House of Representatives on or before the 1st day of January, 1913, upon the location and distribution of military posts which are required within the continental limits of the United States for the proper accommodation, instruction, and training of the Army, but not including Coast Artillery posts and troops. The commission shall make recommendations, giving reasons in detail therefor, as to which of the existing posts shall be retained or abandoned, and of those recommended to be retained which, if any, shall be enlarged, and to what extent. In all of its recommendations the commission shall have due regard for the proper distribution of the different arms of the service as determined by strategic, sanitary, and economical considerations, and by the relations which should be maintained by the Regular Army with the Organized Militia and the public at large, and taking into consideration the number of troops which may be stationed in Hawaii and the Canal Zone.

As I understand it, the House has asked how many posts do you expect to abandon, and the answer is 25. The House then puts in its bill the 25 and they are in dispute and none other. If there was a commission appointed to determine what to do with those 25, very well.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman does not state the whole of the proposition. Amendment No. 40 strikes out this proviso:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in any Army post which the Secretary of War has decided or may decide to abandon in the interest of the service.

I will ask the gentleman if that is not an unlimited extension to abandon any Army post or to refuse this appropriation to any Army posts that the Secretary of War may hereafter determine to abandon. Suppose we were to pass this bill to-day and leave in the 25 Army posts, if that is the number which the Secretary of War has already determined to abandon, and suppose after the bill goes into effect on the 1st of July, on the 2d of that month, for some reason or other, the Secretary of War makes up his mind that there ought to be one or more of these other posts abandoned. Does not this limitation then apply to those he names?

Mr. PRINCE. It might. We will now go on to the next, Mr. Speaker. On page 67, line 1, the House had a provision to abolish The Adjutant General's Office and the Inspector General's Office, and consolidate them with the Chief of Staff.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the number of the amendment?

Mr. PRINCE. Amendment No. 73. The House sought to consolidate the establishment of The Adjutant General and the Inspector General and the Chief of Staff. The Senate rejected the proposition. The conferees offered in lieu of that an amendment as follows:

SEC. 5. That hereafter, except in time of war or when war is imminent, no officer who shall have served four years as Chief of Staff shall be eligible for further service as Chief of Staff until after he shall have served for at least two years with the line of the Army, neither shall any officer, after the 5th day of March, 1913, be detailed nor be permitted to serve as Chief of Staff unless he shall have served at least 10 years as a commissioned officer of the line of the Army in grades below that of brigadier general, and the General Staff Corps shall hereafter consist of 2 general officers, 1 of whom shall be Chief of Staff, 3 colonels, 4 lieutenant colonels, 8 majors, and 10 captains or first lieutenants, all of whom shall be detailed from the Army at large in the manner and for the periods provided by law, and hereafter details to the General Staff Corps, excepting the 2 general officers, shall be subject to the provisions of section 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States." All officers of the line of the Army now detailed for service in any Staff Corps, or department or in the General Staff Corps shall be relieved from duty in said corps at the expiration of their present periods of detail, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and all officers hereafter detailed for service in the Staff Corps, departments, and General Staff Corps shall be relieved therefrom at the expiration of four years of such service, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and no officer who shall have served for four years under detail in any Staff Corps, or department, or the General Staff Corps shall be eligible for further service therein until after he shall have served at least two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in time of war or when war is imminent: Provided, That hereafter when any officer shall, under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, be appointed to an office with rank above that of colonel, his appointment to said office and his acceptance of the appointment shall create a vacancy in the arm, Staff Corps, or staff department from which he shall be appointed, and said vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed by existing law, but he shall retain in said arm, Staff Corps, or staff department the same relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office, and he shall return to said relative position upon the expiration of his appointment to said office, unless he shall be reappointed thereto. If under the operation of this proviso the number of officers of any particular grade in any arm, Staff Corps, or staff department shall at any time exceed the number authorized by law, no vacancy occurring in said grade shall be filled until after the total number of officers therein shall have been reduced to the number authorized by law.

At the bottom of the first page of that amendment will be found the following words:

All officers of the line of the Army now detailed for service in any Staff Corps or department or in the General Staff Corps shall be relieved from duty in said corps at the expiration of their present periods of detail.

I object to the words "in any Staff Corps or department" as being new words. The purpose of this legislation is to consolidate The Adjutant General, the Inspector General, and the Chief of Staff. The provision does not consolidate The Adjutant General and the Inspector General with the Chief of Staff. It makes a provision with reference to a detail of officers in the Staff Corps or department. There are 10 Staff Corps or departments in the service, and if this provision of detail applies, it applies to 7 corps not mentioned in this paragraph and that are no part of this section.

The provision in the conference report, lines 5 to 10, that "no officer who shall have served for four years under detail in any Staff Corps or department or the General Staff Corps shall be eligible for further service therein until after he shall have served at least two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in time of war or when war is imminent," is new matter so far as the provision is applicable to Staff Corps and departments other than The Adjutant General's and the Inspector General's departments and, of course, the General Staff Corps. See the corresponding provision as passed by the House and rejected by the Senate. The conference report thus makes the provision applicable to the following-named Staff Corps and departments not affected by the provision as passed by the House and rejected by the Senate:

Judge Advocate General's Department, 3 officers (acting judge advocates); Quartermaster Corps, 144 officers; Ordnance Department, 57 officers; Signal Corps, 26 officers; Bureau of Insular Affairs, 2 officers.

Now, the House passed a provision consolidating the Inspector General, The Adjutant General, and the Chief of Staff. The Senate rejected that. They brought back this other provision for a Chief of Staff. They brought back a provision affecting officers of the General Staff which the House never passed upon, which the Senate never passed upon, which was never in conference at all. The question they had before them was section 6, page 67, "That the office establishments of The Adjutant General, the Inspector General, and the Chief of Staff of the Army are hereby consolidated."

The SPEAKER. Where is that language?

Mr. PRINCE. It is at the bottom of page 67 (continued 1):

All officers of the line of the Army now detailed in the service in any Staff Corps or department or in General Staff Corps shall be relieved from duty in said corps at the expiration of their present periods of detail, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and all officers hereafter detailed for service in the Staff Corps, departments, and General Staff Corps shall be relieved therefrom at the expiration of four years of such service, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and no officer who shall have served for four years under detail in any Staff Corps or department or the General Staff Corps shall be eligible for further service therein until after he shall have served at least two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in time of war or when war is imminent.

Now, what was the question of difference? Consolidation of the Adjutant General's Office. There is the other section consolidating the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence Department, and the Paymaster's Department, but that is another section. Here is a provision to consolidate the Inspector General, The Adjutant General, and the Chief of Staff Corps. Now, the Senate rejected that proposition and the conferees did not insist upon it, and there is nothing in the provision consolidating these two with the Chief of Staff, but the conferees bring in another matter for the detail of officers which affects not only these departments which they had jurisdiction of, if you please, or the subject matter, but it traveled outside and affected the other departments of the service that I have read about, the Judge Advocate General's Department, the Ordnance Department, Signal Corps, and Bureau of Insular Affairs. There they have gone outside of their right in that and it is new matter, foreign to the question in dispute; new matter, foreign to the subject matter which was the consolidation of The Adjutant General's Office and the Inspector General's Office. Now, further, that is the end of that part. Now, the question in dispute was not in regard to qualifications. There was no dispute as to the qualifications of the Chief of Staff. There was a dispute as to the tenure of office when he got into the office. That was the question of difference, tenure not qualifications. The conferees passed upon the question of qualifications of the Chief of Staff. The law fixes the qualifications of the Chief of Staff.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In relation to the matter of tenure, was there any different tenure provided in the original section 6 from what is already the law?

Mr. PRINCE. I think not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Section 6, you know.

Mr. PRINCE. It is a repetition of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is simply a declaration as to tenure, so there is no difference of opinion about that. The matter of tenure was repeated in section 6.

Mr. PRINCE. I was going to say that it does not change the law at all. It is simply reenacting the law.

The SPEAKER. Reenacting a law that already exists is not an unparliamentary thing; it is possibly surplusage.

Mr. PRINCE. I want to read the law. Section 3 of the law is as follows:

SEC. 3. That the General Staff Corps shall consist of one Chief of Staff and two general officers, all to be detailed by the President from officers of the Army at large not below the grade of brigadier general. * * * All officers detailed in the General Staff Corps shall be detailed therein for periods of four years unless sooner relieved, * * * and no officer shall be eligible for further detail in the General Staff Corps unless he shall have served two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in case of emergency or in time of war.

I say to the Speaker that the question of the qualification or the tenure of the Chief of Staff, unless the intention of the law puts it in dispute, was in dispute between the two Houses. The House mentions him and the Senate mentions him not at all, but they come back with a new provision as to the question of his qualifications, changing existing law when the question was not in dispute at all, like a proposition that was not in dispute. Now, let us see if it was in dispute. On page 68 of the bill, beginning with line 20, it says:

The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's departments by the terms of this act.

Now, that is the subject matter—the consolidation of it—that is all. It says further:

And nothing in said sections or in this act shall be held or construed so as to nullify or change any of the provisions of existing law as to the detail of officers for duty as Chief of Staff, or as to the period for which officers so detailed may serve; and no officer who shall have served four years as Chief of Staff shall, except in case of emergency or in time of war, be eligible for further service as Chief of Staff until after he shall have served for at least two years with the line of the Army or on such other duty not pertaining to the General Staff Corps as the President may direct.

Now, there was no dispute about the qualification; no dispute, as I can find and understand, about the tenure. Then, if it is not in dispute, why attach any qualification. If you do so, is it not new matter? Is it not subject matter in dispute? Now, what have they done? They have said here, by bringing in new matter—

That hereafter, except in time of war or when war is imminent, no officer who shall have served four years as Chief of Staff shall be eligible for further service as Chief of Staff until after he shall have served for at least two years with the line of the Army.

The House bill simply said there was no intention or disposition to change the qualifications of the detail. It was not in dispute. The conferees therefore decided to put in new matter and fix an eligibility that was not in dispute between the two Houses.

I think that is all, Mr. Speaker, that I desire to say. If there are any other suggestions, I will ask the indulgence of the Speaker to present it if anything new should present itself.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, on this amendment I would like to submit some views and a few authorities.

The SPEAKER. Which one is it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Seventy-three—the one the gentleman from Illinois has just finished discussing. And in the meantime I shall be very glad if the confusion in the House would abate just a little. It is very difficult to talk on a question of this kind when there is a buzz of conversation all around on the floor of the House.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, section 6 contained in the House bill was stricken out by the Senate and nothing substituted in its stead. That section provided for the merging of the Adjutant General's Department and the Inspector General's Department with the General Staff Corps. That is the purpose of section 6, and it is the only purpose. It is a long section and everything contained in it belonged essentially to the consolidation of the three departments, and the detail provisions went largely to locate and to fix the status of the offices and officers of the two departments merged into the General Staff Corps. The section expressly declared that nothing in the bill should be construed as affecting in any way the offices or officers of the General Staff Corps. Those officers, including the Chief of Staff, should remain as they are under existing law. It declared further that the provision in relation to the tours of service, the tenure of service, should not be affected, and that those detailed into the General Staff Corps should serve four years and then they should serve an interim of two years in the line somewhere else before they could again be detailed to the Staff Corps. The act of February 14, 1903, defines and fixes the qualifications for the position of the Chief of Staff. That law declares that the Chief of Staff shall be selected from the Army at large among those whose grade is above that of colonel. It includes simply general officers of the Army—lieutenant generals, major generals, and brigadier generals, who are all eligible to detail to the position of Chief of Staff. There is absolutely nothing in the text of the bill relating to the question of qualifications; absolutely nothing in the text of the bill to change, either directly or by implication, the provisions of section 3 of the act of February 14, 1903. Section 6 of the House bill was struck out by the Senate altogether, and the conferees report an amendment as a substitute that has nothing to do with the consolidation of the departments.

That was the only purpose of the original section. Everything else contained in it was but incidental detail necessary to complete and perfect the consolidation. One can not read the section critically without reaching that conclusion. It affected staff officers in no other department, and did not purport to affect them in any other department. That section was stricken out altogether, and the conferees reported a proposition in its stead to reorganize in a way the entire staff of the Army, without any provision whatever for the consolidation of the departments.

The conferees reported a provision amending section 3 of the act of February 14, 1903, fixing qualifications for those who are eligible to detail as Chief of Staff, and declaring that no person shall be eligible to detail to that important position unless he shall have served at least 10 years in the line of the Army below the rank of or the grade of a brigadier general. That is an amendment of a section of existing law that was not involved, that was not in dispute.

I repeat—and I want to emphasize it, Mr. Speaker—that the question of the authorization of Army officers to be detailed as Chief of Staff was not in disagreement between the two Houses and was not in the original text. It was not put in dispute by the Senate striking out the entire original text. It is substitutive legislation upon a new proposition.

Even the policy of the amendment does not follow the subject matter of the original section—a subject matter that looked toward the consolidation of three departments in the Army, with a view to, perhaps, a better organization and with the avowed object of saving expense to the Government. That was one of its avowed purposes.

Now, in the desire of the committee to emphasize its purpose to allow or require the General Staff Corps to remain as it was it not only embodied in the section a declaration that nothing in the act should change its status, but it went on to recite in substance that the details should be four years, and two years off, declarative of part of the act of 1903.

It is true that if an existing law is reenacted it is subject to amendment, but only the portions that are reenacted. There was not a single word in the original text about the qualifications of officers for detail, not a single word about the question of eligibility.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the general proposition is that the purpose, and the only purpose, of original section 6 was to consolidate the three departments, and the only purpose of the proposed amendment is to change the qualifications of the Chief of Staff which was not touched upon in the bill or any amendment thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. Take section 6 in its entirety, and does not that bring forth to the conferees the entire subject of the staff and these other parts?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Only to the extent, Mr. Speaker, that it is involved in the section in dispute. The Speaker, of course, has in mind the fact that the power of the conferees is always strictly construed. Here is an instance now of reporting new legislation, legislation that never was considered in the House and that never was considered in the Senate; legislation of great importance; legislation that will result in excluding from the important position of Chief of Staff a large number of distinguished Army officers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not take into consideration the motive which prompted anybody, either in the House or the Senate, upon the conference.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am discussing now only the question of policy in the construction of the rule. Adding to what I have already said, there is no opportunity to amend a proposition when it comes up in this manner, and matter to be under the jurisdiction of the conferees must not only be in dispute, but it must be germane. It must not only be germane to the text or to an amendment, but it must be in dispute between the Houses. The House might have offered amendments to section 6, but it did not. The Senate might have offered amendments to section 6. But section 6 was stricken out by the Senate.

Is the Speaker ready to decide that the conferees have the same broad scope of amending provisions originally, with even germane amendments, that the House would have or that the Senate would have? The amendments, I repeat, must not only be germane, but they must be subject matters of dispute. This proposition, however, was agreed upon in a sense by both Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. How can the gentleman make that contention, that they agreed upon it, when the Senate struck out section 6?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I mean the qualifications of the Chief of Staff. The House declared that the law should stand as it is. The Senate struck out the whole section, leaving the law as it is. Can it be said in any proper sense, under those circumstances, that the question of the qualification of the Chief of Staff was a matter of dispute between the two Houses?

The SPEAKER. Now, is not this the truth, that part of that section simply reenacts an existing statute?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not. It is declaratory of some things that are in an existing statute; but I want——

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to get at the facts. Practically it reenacts an existing statute, and the Senate goes to work and strikes out that section, including this existing statute.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My contention is that there is no part of the existing statute reenacted; but it declares things that are already the law, and that only the part that is reenacted is subject to amendment or open to question. It did not reenact the statute in relation to the qualifications of the Chief of Staff. That subject is not mentioned in the section at all, and therefore it was not subject to amendment. The House did not declare that the qualifications should remain as they were. Absolutely nothing is said in relation to the qualifications fixed by the act of February 14, 1903.

Now, there is another proposition I want to submit. This matter would not have been germane if it had been offered on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not contend, does he, that the Chair must rule this thing out of order, or any part of it, simply because it could have been ruled out originally in the House on a point of order?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Most certainly it must be germane.

The SPEAKER. Of course it must be germane. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And if it is germane it could have been offered in the House.

The SPEAKER. Somebody gets up and offers a proposition, or the committee itself brings in a proposition, that is subject to a point of order—a legislative proposition—and everybody sits here and lets it go through, and it goes over to the Senate, and the Senate does something or other to it, and then it goes to conference. The gentleman does not contend that we can go back now, here in the House, and take cognizance of the point of order that might have been raised against the provision at the right time, does he?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, indeed, Mr. Speaker. This is the situation: The House enacted section 6——

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the Senate struck out section 6 without substituting anything for it, and therefore the question now is as to whether this is germane to section 6. That is the proposition, and that is the point I want to discuss.

The SPEAKER. That is undoubtedly the proposition that ought to be discussed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I made the assertion that if this amendment had been proposed in the House it would have been ruled out on a point of order, because it is not germane to anything in the section.

Suppose a bill is brought up in the House changing the term of service of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from four years to six years. That would affect the tenure of their service. Would it be in order to propose an amendment that no man shall be qualified for appointment originally to that office unless he be 40 years of age, has lived in the District of Columbia for 10 years, and is a taxpayer? Surely not. The subject of the tenure of office, the length of the term, and the subject of qualifications are altogether different propositions. I want to impress upon the mind of the Speaker the importance of reading analytically and critically the provisions of section 6, so as to know exactly what it contains. Then read along with it the proposition reported by the conferees. I feel an abiding confidence that the Speaker can not reach any other conclusion than that an amendment offered on the floor of the House or reported by the conferees changing the qualifications of the officer who may be detailed as Chief of Staff would not be germane. I said a moment ago that the two Houses had agreed upon that proposition.

But an amendment must not only be germane, but it must be in dispute. The House Manual and Digest, on page 279, paragraph 539, sums up the situation as follows:

> The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences committed to them and may not include subjects not within the disagreements, even though germane to a question in issue.

They must be more than germane to the question in issue. They must be matters in dispute, matters in relation to which, in one form or another, one House or the other has taken some action. Of course, when a proposition has been disagreed to and submitted to the conferees they may report a substitute, but it must be confined to the subject matter in dispute. But when, as in this case, the entire text is struck out in the Senate, the conferees have a broad latitude in arranging matters of detail; but they can not report anything except that which pertains to the subject matter of the original text which was put in dispute by the Senate striking it out.

I repeat that the change of qualifications is a new and substantive proposition. It has no relation to the consolidation of the departments; it has no connection with it, no bearing upon the mere matter of tenure.

A case I want to refer the Speaker to is in volume 5, Hinds' Precedents, page 727, paragraph 6419. That case arose on an omnibus war-claims bill. An omnibus bill went through the House covering a number of war claims and went to the Senate. The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and substituted an omnibus bill of its own. That amendment was disagreed to by the House, and the subject matter went to conference; and the conferees reported, among other things, three claims that were not in the Senate bill or the House bill. It was admitted on both sides that they were germane to the bill. It was an omnibus war-claims bill, and they were the same class of claims as those embodied in it. They would have been admissible as germane amendments on the floor of the House or in the Senate. Speaker Henderson sustained the point of order to the report of the conferees, because those claims were not in dispute.

Now, on page 720, paragraph 6410, of Hinds' Precedents, at the bottom of the page, is a ruling by Speaker Reed, in which he says:

The Chair dislikes to pass upon such matters as this, but it is a well-established principle that no conference committee can introduce a new subject, one that was not in dispute between the two Houses.

The subject of qualification of an officer to be detailed as Chief of Staff is entirely a new substantive proposition. It bears no relation to the purpose of section 6; it is a new subject, one that is not in dispute between the two Houses and could not have been.

And it is evident that everybody in the House realizes that this amendment which has been presented is really beyond the power of the committee of conference. That being so, and the point being made, there is no other course but to sustain the point of order, which the Chair accordingly does.

In that same paragraph is another case where a bill went through the House granting certain privileges to a railroad company, and the Senate amended it by adding two more railroad companies to enjoy the same privilege.

The House disagreed to the Senate amendment and it went to conference. The conferees agreed by striking all of them out, and a point of order was made against the report of the conferees.

Speaker Reed sustained the point of order because the subject matter of the railroad that had already enjoyed and was enjoying the privilege had been agreed to by both Houses, and it was not a subject matter in dispute. They were all connected together, the Senate agreed to leave that one in on condition that the two others should go with it. The conferees, being unable to agree, struck them all out, and Speaker Reed said that the one railroad was not in dispute. It was entirely germane to move to strike it out in the House or in the Senate. Speaker Reed said:

If we were to adopt the idea that when once the subject matter that was to control, and not the difference between the two bodies, we should be likely to enlarge the powers of the committee of conference rather beyond what was intended by the House. To the Chair it seems the point of order is well taken, and therefore the Chair sustains it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the suggestion the gentleman refers to have any application to a case like this, where the entire subject matter agreed to by the House was stricken out and therefore everything embraced within that subject matter was before the conferees?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. In the case the gentleman cites, both Houses agreed as to one matter; they had agreed to give one railway certain privileges, so there was one matter agreed upon. Clearly the conferees could not strike that out.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is where the gentleman is mistaken. The House put one railroad in the bill and the Senate left it in on condition that two others go with it. How were the conferees going to get together? The Senate did not propose to give up the privilege going to the two railroads if the one railroad should enjoy it, and that could only be done by striking out all the railroads. I do insist that they were connected; they were tied together. The Senate agreement to the one railroad was on condition that two others should enjoy the same privilege.

Mr. MONDELL. But no such decision could apply to a case where all the subject matter was stricken out and there was an agreement upon nothing—a complete disagreement.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I am using this case to illustrate the fact that even germane amendments can not be put in a measure by conferees unless the subject matter of the amendments is in dispute. There are a number of decisions in Hinds' Precedents on the pages preceding and following the one that I have cited, but what I desire to emphasize in conclusion is the fact that the purpose and object of section 6 was to merge The Adjutant General's staff and the Inspector General's staff in the General Staff Corps, without changing the status or qualification or tenure of the General Staff Corps. That was its purpose, and the conferees reported a measure that is altogether foreign to any purpose of that kind. It does not embody it all. It departs entirely from that purpose. Every provision in section 6 originally is incidental to the purpose of merger or consolidation, and the conferees abandoned that purpose altogether and reported a new substantive proposition that had no relation to it, and one which I think I have perhaps demonstrated to the Chair was not even germane to anything in section 6. I have no doubt about it. I feel that the conferees went beyond their parliamentary power.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on three of these propositions. He will give gentlemen a chance to be heard on the fourth one.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, is the Chair ready to rule on amendment 48?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on all of them except the one relating to water and sewers.

Mr. KAHN. That is the one I would like to be heard upon.

Mr. MONDELL. Before the Chair rules I should like to be heard briefly on the amendment just discussed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that it is superfluous.

Mr. MONDELL. I should like to be heard also on the water and sewer amendment, No. 48.

The SPEAKER. That is the one the Chair reserved and invited further argument upon. As soon as the Chair rules on the three propositions he has in mind he will hear any gentleman who desires to take one side or the other upon amendment No. 48.

On page 20 of the bill, in line 11, the House inserted a provision:

For travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge, $900,000.

The Senate added a proviso:

Provided, That hereafter when an enlisted man who is enlisted on or before July 1, 1912, is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be entitled to transportation in kind, etc.

All that the conferees did to that Senate amendment was, in line 1 of the amendment, after the word "man," to strike out all down to and including the comma after the word "twelve"; and those words are:

Who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912.

All that that does is simply to broaden it, and it is not a parliamentary question. It is a question for the court to decide whether those men are entitled to the pay they otherwise would have received. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

On page 38 of the bill the House inserted a proviso, beginning on line 12, as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any Army post which the Secretary of War has decided or may decide to abandon in the interest of the service.

The Senate struck that out. The conferees then inserted a proviso on the same subject, appointing a commission to inquire into and advise the Secretary of War, or anybody seeking information upon that subject, what Army posts should be abandoned; and the rest of the proviso is simply detail thereof. It has been repeatedly held—I do not know by how many Speakers, but by more than one—that in a case like that, where there is no departure from the subject matter—and the subject matter in this case is the abandonment of Army posts, and the reciting of 25 Army posts was simply a detail—a commission might be appointed. The Chair calls attention to one case where a bill was brought in providing for the construction of a public road. The conferees changed that so as to appoint a commission for a survey of the public road. That was held to be in order. The subject matter of this amendment or proposition is the abandonment of Army posts. The matter that the conferees put into it is simply a detailed arrangement of how to get at abandoning the Army posts.

The Chair therefore overrules that point of order.

The next point of order is the one made to section 6, which treats of the consolidation of the establishments of The Adjutant General, the Inspector General, and the Chief of Staff. It is a very long section. It fixes the term, among other things, of the Chief of Staff. It fixes the length of recess, if the Chair may be permitted to use that term, that any man who holds that position shall take from that office.

It may be that it is simply the reenactment of an existing statute; if it is not, it is very close to it. Now, it treats of the subject of the General Staff and the Chief of Staff. The Chair has nothing to do, as the Chair stated to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], with the motives or quarrels that have been going on in the War Department about the Chief of Staff and several other things. It does not make any difference how it got in, and it does not make any difference, so far as the parliamentary situation is concerned, as to the effect of it on individuals. The only question is whether this matter, inserted by the conference committee, is germane to the proposition touching the Chief of Staff. The Chair thinks it is, and the point of order is overruled.

Now, the Chair will hear any gentleman who believes that the matter which the conference committee inserted in lieu of amendment 48 is germane and ought to stay in the bill, but does not care to hear anybody else on the other side unless in rebuttal.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the paragraph to which the proviso stricken out as amendment No. 48 is attached provides for procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance; for the disposal of sewage, and so on and so forth. Now, the proviso which was striken out, in lieu of which the language in controversy was inserted, provides that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at, among other posts, Fort D. A. Russell. The subject matter therefore of the language stricken out is permanent improvements at Fort D. A. Russell, and therefore in striking out that provision prohibiting the expenditure of any money for permanent improvements the conferees were within their authority when they inserted a provision for the purpose, after condemnation if necessary, of purchasing certain tracts of land for maneuvering of troops and other military purposes. It has been suggested that purchase of land does not constitute a permanent improvement, but I think it is hardly necessary to argue that matter with the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman this question: Suppose the gentleman owned 15 feet of land down here somewhere on some street, and he wanted to build a house that would cover 20 feet. Does the gentleman believe that buying a strip 5 feet wide could be construed as an improvement of that 15 feet?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so. It certainly would improve the property, for anything that is done that tends to its improvement is an improvement of the property. The purchase of an additional strip might be necessary to make possible any permanent improvement. If the Government owned a tract of land in the center of which was some privately-owned property, it might very well be that the Government would hesitate to proceed with the permanent improvement of that property by the erection of buildings or otherwise until it had acquired title to the land which it did not own. It might be an entirely necessary and essential thing to be done in connection with the permanent improvement of the property.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman make this distinction. Suppose the proviso instead of saying "this appropriation" had said "of the appropriation for the above-named purposes," would the gentleman draw the distinction whether that could be said to be a permanent improvement?

Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair will permit further discussion along the line of the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio I will be glad to answer, but assuming now for the sake of argument the subject matter of the provision stricken out is "expenditures for permanent improvements at Fort Russell," the question is raised as to whether the purchase of land is a permanent improvement. I think unquestionably so. In this particular case the Government has a very large reservation, between six and eight thousand acres of the original reservation and some 50,000 or 60,000 acres of the adjacent reservation from which the post receives its water supply, and it is essential in the improvement of this post and its water supply that the Government acquire all privately owned lands within the boundaries.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman will note the language of the proviso says:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named posts.

Now, does not the language "permanent improvements" refer back to the heading of the item "water and sewers at military posts"?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. KAHN. Is not that the question?

Mr. MONDELL. I propose to discuss that, if the Chair will allow me, a little later; but for the present my argument is that the subject matter of the language stricken out is permanent improvements at this and other military posts and no other, and therefore the committee was within its rights when it provided for permanent improvements, to wit, purchase of some land necessary for the enjoyment by the Government of its property and necessary to its enjoyment of the water system on which it has expended several hundred thousands of dollars.

The acquisition of the remaining small tracts is an essential part of the permanent improvement of the Government's property. So much for that.

Now, it has been contended that inasmuch as the section to which this proviso was attached relates to certain specific expenditures or expenditures for specific purposes, the improvements must be improvements in line with the provisions of the section. Taking that view of it, the conferees were still within their authority, and I call the Chair's attention, as having an important bearing on this subject, to the Army appropriation bill of last year, in which this same section, containing the same language, also contains a provision almost identical with this and for the same purpose.

The section down to the proviso is in the identical language of the section now under consideration, and is in part as follows:

That not to exceed $100,000 of this sum may be used for the improvement and protection of the water supply and for the improvement of the grounds of the Fort D. A. Russell Target and Maneuver Reservation, Wyo., and that from the sum hereby appropriated the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase or condemnation proceedings, certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes.

Following that language is another proviso to the same section providing for the purchase under this appropriation of a quarter section of land located on Dead Mans Creek, S. Dak., adjacent, I presume, to Fort Meade, S. Dak. So, in the same section of the Army bill of last year, written in the identical language that we have now before us is the proviso for the expenditure of $100,000 for this same purpose and for the purchase of land on Dead Mans Creek. The practice, therefore, has been to make the sort of purchases provided by the conference report under this section.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield? Was there any point of order against that language last year?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know as to that. But let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that while the language added by the conferees does not refer to the tract of land proposed to be purchased as land necessary for water supply, the fact is, and I assume that fact was known by the conferees, that the land proposed to be purchased is necessary to the water supply of Fort D. A. Russell, because it is a part of the watershed of Fort D. A. Russell. It refers to the same areas the purchase of which was provided for in last year's bill. So, if we place the narrowest construction on this proviso, to wit, that it must be expended for the purposes of water supply at posts where it is necessary to bring the water from a distance—that is the language, and it applies to Fort D. A. Russell—then the provision inserted by the conferees is in order because it provides for the purchase of a tract necessary for the protection of the water supply of Fort D. A. Russell. That must have been understood by the conferees, because a similar provision was carried in the bill last year under the same heading and for the same purpose. It is true that the words "for maneuvering" are used, but the words "for other military purposes" are also used, and "other military purposes" may well include and do include a water supply. By a necessary implication in this connection they must mean water supply else the provision would not have been inserted by the conferees. The tracts proposed to be purchased are on the watershed of Fort D. A. Russell. It is a part of the land from which the fort receives its supply of water through its extensive water system. There is no other place in the bill where this provision would be germane or, if there be any such place, there is no other part of the bill in which this amendment would be as clearly in line with the purposes of the appropriation, following as it does past precedents and following the provisions contained in the bill of last year. So, from whatever standpoint you view it, whether the subject matter under consideration by the conferees had to do with permanent improvements, in which case this clearly comes within the rule, or whether you view it from the narrower construction that it must be an improvement, having to do with water supply, in either event the conferees were within their right and acted within their authority in bringing in a provision of this sort.

Mr. SAUNDERS and Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is recognized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the question that is presented to the Chair of course is a parliamentary proposition. The Chair must decide according to the rules and precedents of the House. I would not occupy the time of the Chair if I did not feel that it was of some great importance that this bill should not go back to conference unnecessarily if it could be prevented, as the fiscal year is approaching when this money must be available for the use of the Army.

The question involved is whether the conferees have exceeded their authority or not. That can be the only question that the Chair has to pass upon. The House in this appropriation added a proviso to the provision that had been carried in the bill for many years, providing that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at certain forts, and, among others, at Fort D. A. Russell. Now, the question is, and I think, Mr. Speaker, the whole question hinges upon it, What was meant by the words "for permanent improvements"—whether the House intended to use the words "for permanent improvements" in order to limit them to permanent improvements in the paragraph preceding, or any other permanent improvements?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can dismiss one part of the contention from his mind. The Chair does not believe that the words "permanent improvements" in the proviso are intended to limit the preceding part of that paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The position I intended to take is the position which the Chair has just announced. That being the case, Mr. Speaker, it brings the question down to a very simple proposition. The words "permanent improvements" not applying to the preceding paragraph, the language of the proviso simply states that none of the money available in the paragraph above shall be available in the permanent improvements at Fort D. A. Russell. It prohibits the use of it. Now, when the Senate knocked that out, so far as this proviso is concerned, it left that money available for any improvement at Fort D. A. Russell, so far as the proviso is concerned. Then the conferees, that being the issue between them—whether there should be a prohibition against using this money for permanent improvements, or whether there should be no limitation, as provided by the Senate amendment—the conferees agreed upon a provision which, leaving out the surplus words, reads as follows:

That not exceeding $1,000 of the sum herein appropriated * * * may be expended * * * in the acquirement by purchase or condemnation proceedings of certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes at Fort D. A. Russell.

Now, what is the effect? The House put an absolute limitation upon the expenditure of this money not only at Fort D. A. Russell, but also at a number of other forts. The Senate struck out any limitation as to the expenditure of the money. The conferees agree that there shall be a limitation at Fort D. A. Russell; that only $1,000 may be expended for certain purposes, leaving no limitation as to the other forts.

Therefore I say that that being the case, the words "permanent improvements" not being limited by the preceding portion of the section, it leaves the question as to whether there shall be any limitation or no limitation; and between those points it was within the power of the conferees to fix a specific limitation at Fort D. A. Russell and leave it without limitation at the other forts. That clearly comes within the terms of the power of the conferees.

Mr. MANN and Mr. KAHN rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Suppose the Senate amendment should be disagreed to entirely and not go into the bill. Could this money be expended for the purpose named in the conference report?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not go into that argument, because I agreed with the Speaker when the Speaker announced that this language is independent of the language of the preceding section.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the point of difference between the two Houses must be on account of the Senate amendments, and that the conference must come within the difference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like the gentleman to state the first proposition again.

Mr. MANN. The point of difference must be on account of the Senate amendments. The conference authority must come within the points of difference. Suppose the Senate amendment is entirely disagreed to and goes out, so that there is no point of difference. Could this money have been expended for the purpose named in the conference report? That is the final test.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not think the gentleman is right about that; because—suppose the House had written into this bill a new proviso. The gentleman says "the Senate amendment." The Chair presumes he refers to the House proviso.

Mr. MANN. I refer to the Senate amendment striking out the House proviso.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amended it by striking it out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There was no affirmative legislation, of course, in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. But the point of difference between the two Houses is based upon the action of the Senate striking out a limitation. Now, supposing the Senate amendment were entirely disagreed to, could this money have been expended for the purpose named in the conference report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman a question: What did the House put that proviso in there for?

Mr. MANN. I went over that. They put it in there for the purpose of limiting the expenditure of the money.

The SPEAKER. Now, if they could not have done what you are inquiring of the gentleman from Alabama whether they could do or not—if that proviso had not been put in by the House—what was the sense in putting in the proviso?

Mr. MANN. Of course, if the proviso had not been put in, it is perfectly plain that the unexpended balance of an appropriation not referred to in this bill at all could not have been expended for this purpose or any other purpose. That could not have been in controversy or a matter of difference between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Then what did the House put that proviso in for?

Mr. MANN. For the purpose of preventing the money appropriated in this bill being expended for permanent improvements, or, as I think, for permanent improvements in relation to water and sewers at this post.

Mr. KAHN. At these posts.

Mr. MANN. It certainly did not relate to any other appropriation.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The War Department had sent to the House the names of a number of forts that it proposed to abandon, and the House, as I understand it, decided that none of this money for water and sewers should be expended in permanent improvements for water and sewers at any of these posts, and therefore put in that language.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman is not entirely right on that question.

Mr. KAHN. I think that was the purpose of the House.

The SPEAKER. The only question in this thing is this: Within reasonable construction does this amount to an improvement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the question is this as I understand it: The proposition has been pending before the House that certain forts should be abandoned. The House put in a proviso here to prohibit the expenditure of any further money in permanent improvements at those posts.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and we all understand perfectly well—this is not a parliamentary proposition I am going to lay down—that that proviso was put into that bill as a kind of step toward abandoning a lot of what are considered by various persons to be useless posts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely. It was not put there for the purpose of limiting the specific appropriation above, but it was put there for the purpose of preventing any more money being expended at those posts. Now, the Senate would not agree to that.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me finish my sentence, please. The Senate would not agree to that. They would not agree that no more money should be spent at these posts. Now, the question before the two Houses in controversy was the issue on the one side by the House that no more money should be spent in permanent improvements at those posts—Fort D. A. Russell, among others—and by the Senate that that limitation should not be placed there. The conferees met at a common point between the two points at issue and put a limitation on the expenditure at Fort D. A. Russell.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Suppose this proviso had never been put in. Does the gentleman believe any money could have been spent at Fort D. A. Russell for any other improvement except one specifically provided?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is not the issue; the proviso was put in, it is in here, and it was put in clearly not for the purpose of making a limitation on this paragraph, but was put in for the purpose of preventing in the future——
Mr. LONGWORTH. But the committee says specifically, "This appropriation for water and sewers at military posts." It uses the word "this," and therefore is not a limitation generally, but a limitation on this specific appropriation. Now, then, does the gentleman from Alabama think that if that proviso was not in the bill any portion of this appropriation could be spent at Fort D. A. Russell or any other fort not specifically authorized? It seems to me that is the real point.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. That question is not in issue and is not the one I was discussing. The Speaker had already agreed to the proposition about permanent improvements—that it did not refer to the preceding paragraph. But I will say to the gentleman that this proviso above provides that the money may be spent for repairs to the water and sewer system. The provision that is put in here clearly is connected up with the water and sewer system, and it says it is for other military purposes. The fact that it says it can be used for maneuver purposes and other purposes does not disconnect it for the purpose provided in the last appropriation bill. But take the point of view of the gentleman from Ohio. If that was the point of view the committee and the House had when it wrote this provision, it was clearly to prevent the use of the money in this bill for that specific purpose of broadening the appropriation that already exists. This is only carrying out the existing law, and that was the issue between the two Houses. The House said it should not be used to continue the work and the Senate said it should, and they agree on the point between the two questions in conference; that is, they left all the other forts out, and they provided for the specific limitation in reference to the expenditure of money at Fort D. A. Russell.
Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman justifies his position, then, on the theory that this was a permanent improvement for the purpose of adding to the water supply or increasing the water supply at Fort D. A. Russell, when the language says "the purchase of certain tracts of land for maneuver of troops or other military purposes"?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no question but that this is a permanent improvement.
Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.
Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that under this language in the bill and the Senate amendment that the conferees would have been authorized to increase the amount of the appropriation?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the question of increasing the amount of the appropriation was in controversy or is involved here at all.
Mr. MANN. The Senate amendment strikes out the provision that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for certain purposes. If that is to be restored by conference, would they have authority at the same time to make an additional appropriation for that purpose, because that is what they have done?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. They have merely made a limitation on the appropriation that is already to be expended, so far as the appropriation is concerned.
Mr. MANN. Oh, no; they have added to the amount of money.
Mr. HAY. The conferees did not add anything.
Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the conferees have added to the amount of money.
Mr. HAY. How?
Mr. MANN. Because they say, "together with the unexpended balance heretofore appropriated."
Mr. LONGWORTH. And how much does that involve?
Mr. MANN. About $15,000; but the amount does not make any difference. Here is the limitation on this appropriation. Can the conferees increase the amount of the appropriation?
Mr. HAY. They do not increase the amount of the appropriation.
Mr. MANN. But they do; the gentleman is mistaken. We do not differ as to the facts, but they increase the amount of the appropriation by reappropriating the unexpended balance.
Mr. HAY. We reappropriate the unexpended balance, but we do not increase the amount appropriated.
Mr. MANN. The conferees did not increase the sum carried in the bill because that was not in disagreement, but they increased the amount appropriated because they reappropriated money not available for the next fiscal year.
Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.
Mr. MONDELL. The House amendment was a prohibition against the use of the appropriation for permanent improvements at this place. That clearly put in conference the question as to whether the moneys could be used for permanent improvements at that post. There was a certain unexpended balance heretofore appropriated for permanent improvements, and having in disagreement the question of permanent improvements, it was clearly within the authority of the conferees to provide that permanent improvements could and should be made of the unexpended balance.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman. I think the real issue before the two Houses was as to whether permanent improvements should be continued at those forts. The House took one position and the Senate another. If the House provision had been agreed to, there could have been no continuation of permanent improvements there. Striking it out, there can be. The real issue between the conferees was the question of the continuation of permanent improvements. The balance was an incident to it. The conferees came to a compromise between the two positions and stated a limitation, that the permanent improvements could be made at Fort D. A. Russell, and it seems to me that this provision is within that limitation when you take the view of the situation from the standpoint of what the House was desiring to accomplish and what the Senate intended to negative.
Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, as has been aptly said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], this whole question turns upon the proper construction to be given to the words "permanent improvements" found in this bill. But I disagree entirely with the argument of the gentleman on this point.
It is a fundamental rule of statutory construction familiar to every Member of the House that in making laws legislators are supposed to use words in the sense in which they are commonly understood. Now, the gentleman contends that the words "permanent improvements" when applied to real estate include not only the making of permanent improvements on that real estate but include also the buying of other real estate. That is, if a man owns a piece of land, he makes "permanent improvements" on it when he buys another piece of land. Can it be seriously contended that that is the sense in which the words "permanent improvements" are commonly understood and used? Not at all. I undertake to say that never before in this House has such a contention been made.
If a farmer buys 160 acres of land of the Government, does he put permanent improvements upon it by simply buying an additional 40 acres? No. He enlarges the size of his purchase, but he has made no permanent improvements. That statement clearly shows the sense in which we always understand the words "permanent improvements" when referring to real estate, and that is the exact sense in which the House used these words in referring to permanent improvements at Fort Russell.
A permanent improvement upon real estate is something erected upon, or done to, that real estate itself. It is not another piece of land bought near it, and nobody ever so understood the words until the defenders of this conference report undertook here to maintain that sort of construction.
Let me put this question to gentlemen: Suppose a farmer owns 160 acres of land upon which there is a mortgage of $2,000. He goes to the mortgagee and asks for $2,000 more, saying that he wants it to use in making permanent improvements on his farm. The mortgagee looks at him and says, "Are you going to dig ditches?" "No." "Do you want the money to put in tiling?" "No." "Do you want it to put up a brick silo or any other kind of a silo?" "No." "Do you want it to improve your house?" "No." "Or to build a barn and corn cribs?" "No." "Or to put in electric lights or water works or to construct a sewer?" "No." "Then what permanent improvements do you propose to put on your 160 acres?" "Why, I propose to buy another 40 acres." The mortgagee looks at him and says, "Well, you may call that an improvement, but does it add to my security on the 160 acres which you say you are improving?"
This illustration absolutely refutes the construction put upon the words "permanent improvements" by the defenders of the conference report. No Member of the House, when the bill passed this body, understood the words "permanent improvements" to include a possible purchase of more land at Fort Russell.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman states a case, but I would like to state another case and ask him if it does not apply equally well. Suppose the gentleman is the owner of a cotton mill, and his cotton mill covers the whole area of the land that he owns. Suppose he puts a mortgage upon it for permanent improvements in order to build a new cotton mill. Is not the buying of the land adjacent to his property an incident to the permanent improvement that he is going to put on the property?

Mr. COOPER. No; the buying of other land is not in any sense an improvement put upon my first cotton mill nor upon my first area of real estate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If you have a sewage system and you have to have additional grounds for the sewer pipe or a drain pipe, is it not necessary as a permanent improvement to Fort D. A. Russell to extend the ground so that you can properly take care of your sewage and buy an additional tract?

Mr. COOPER. No. It might be advisable to buy additional ground in such case, but that is not the question here. The question is whether the words "permanent improvements" when applied to land means the mere purchase of more land. No Member of the House had the slightest idea of giving those words such a meaning at the time the bill went through the House.

The preceding section of the bill, on page 44, provides that no portion of the appropriation in that section for roads, walks, walls, and drainage should be expended at any of the posts mentioned, including Fort Russell; and the next section, that no part of this appropriation for water and sewers should be expended at any of the enumerated posts, including Fort Russell. The proviso to that section provides that no permanent improvements at Fort Russell shall be paid for out of that money. Nobody on this floor understood "permanent improvements" at Fort Russell could possibly mean the buying of additional acres of land.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman consider that it would be an improvement to that watershed, and therefore the post's water supply, to buy a small tract of privately owned lands within the land owned by the Government? That is what is proposed.

Mr. COOPER. I am saying that this language ought to be construed as the House meant it to be understood. When this bill went through the House, the House knew the object of this section and of the previous section was to get rid of these Army posts, including Fort Russell, and therefore that they should not be permanently improved. Of course, no one pretended that the Committee on Military Affairs wished to enlarge the area at Fort Russell at the very time it was advocating that the fort be done away with. Gentlemen on the other side urged we should get rid of these Army posts.

Of course, while refusing to make appropriations for sidewalks or for electric lights or waterworks or sewers or anything of a similar nature at Fort Russell, the House did not expect that any money would be used to enlarge the area there for maneuvering purposes. I understand that at Fort Russell there is abundant land for maneuvering purposes. I understood the gentlemen who argued for this House provision when it first came up here, the chairman of the committee himself, to state that he desired to get rid of Fort Russell. Nobody thought of any enlargement of the area there. I knew nothing about Fort Russell. But every man on that side of the aisle who had contended for the House provision said that this fort was not needed, that it involved a useless expenditure by the Government, and ought to be abandoned, and yet it is contended here now that by using the words "permanent improvements" the House authorized the use of money to enlarge the area of a fort which it was trying to get rid of.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. This bill enlarges the area of that fort in another section, on page 48 of the bill, under the item "Shooting galleries and ranges," where this proviso is put in:

That of this amount the sum of $3,450, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is made immediately available for the purchase of additional land adjoining the military reservation of Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., for use in connection with the rifle range, $93,366.

Now, that proviso is in its proper place—that is, for shooting galleries and ranges—but this provision that we are now considering is in here under the heading of "Sewers and water supply" and has no part in that specific appropriation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact the provision just read by the gentleman from California applies to a piece of land for the purpose of target practice, and so forth, at Fort Russell, but does not apply to the water supply, whereas the matter under discussion applies to a part of the military service that has to do with this water supply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from California a question in connection with the language he has read, and that is, if that is not rather contradicting and running counter to the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin, just delivered, that the House had made up its mind that it was not going to increase the possessions of Fort D. A. Russell?

Mr. KAHN. Well, that may be; but the fact of the matter is this item for the purchase of additional land for a target range is provided for in its proper place in the bill under the caption of "Shooting galleries and ranges."

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but if the House had made up its mind it was not going to put any more money on Fort D. A. Russell for permanent improvements, would it have put in the clause which the gentleman is talking about?

Mr. KAHN. Well, this was done by the House and the Senate, I presume. Of course the suggestion of abolishing Fort D. A. Russell came from the War Department originally and was agreed to by the House, and the Senate never did agree to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] briefly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Chair has indicated that he would like to hear from those gentlemen who believe that this amendment is germane and in order. Firmly believing both propositions, I wish to submit a brief argument in support of them. The substance of the rule as to conference committees, is that the managers must confine themselves to the matters in controversy submitted to them. Having this in mind, they may report new matter within the theme discussed, provided the new matter would be germane to the House bill, or Senate amendment. This is the working principle. Now for the application of the same to the proposition in hand. There are two or three grounds, Mr. Speaker, on which this amendment may be sustained. The House proviso declares that no part of an indicated appropriation shall be expended on improvements on Fort D. A. Russell. It would certainly have been germane to this proviso to have added an amendment to the same to the effect that $1,000 of this appropriation should be expended on improvements at Fort Russell.

No point of order could have been raised against this amendment on any ground, much less on the ground that it was not germane. Suppose in addition this amendment had contained a description of what this improvement should be. The amendment would still be germane, this description not affecting the quality of germaneness. Suppose in addition the amendment provided that certain sums in addition to the $1,000 should be included in the appropriation for improvements at Fort Russell. The amendment would still be germane. It is obvious that the objection, if any, to the amendment would be on the ground that it was new legislation in part, and not that it was not germane. But the point of order can not now be raised in the pending situation. Provided that the amendment proposed by the conferees would have been germane to the House bill, it is a matter of no consequence whether if offered in the House to the original bill, it would have been subject to some other parliamentary objection. Provided it would have been germane, the provision is now in order. Suppose we carry the illustration a little further. The recommendation of the conferees in part is as follows:

That $1,000 of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended by the Secretary of War in his discretion for the acquirement by purchase, or through condemnation proceedings, of certain tracts required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes.

The question is raised whether maneuvering grounds are permanent improvements? I think it is a sound proposition that in determining what is a permanent improvement, reference must be had to the purpose for which the subject matter is to be used. Obviously the tract of land for maneuvering purposes would not be a permanent improvement of a tract used for private or high school purposes. But does this objection hold when we have in mind that the ground to be acquired is to be used for purely military purposes in connection with a fort, or post, and is needed for that purpose. The addition of this ground for this purpose increases the utility of the post for military ends, it so effectuates, and carries out the purpose for which a post in part is created and established, that it may be fairly and properly called an improvement.

But Mr. Speaker, this is not all. As I said, if the amendment which provides for the permanent improvement should define in the body of the amendment what those permanent improvements should be, no objection could be raised on the ground that this amendment was not germane?

It may be objectionable on other parliamentary grounds, but as we have seen these objections can not be raised at this time. The sole inquiry proper to be made by the Chair, with respect to the recommendation of the conferees is, Would it have been germane, if offered to the House proviso?

May I put this matter to the Chair in another way? The House bill provides that no money should be spent on permanent improvements at Fort Russell. A germane amendment could have provided for spending money on improvements at Fort Russell. The inquiry would then have been made, What are the improvements in contemplation? And the answer would have been, any permanent improvements contemplated by the general law or the preceding language of the section. If the general law provided that land could be purchased for a maneuver ground, and considered an improvement, then undoubtedly the money appropriated for Fort Russell by the amendment would have been available for the purchase of maneuver grounds. But if there was no general law, and the amendment itself in substance, provided for maneuver grounds as a permanent improvement, it would have been germane and if not otherwise objected to, would have authorized the appropriation.

The recommendation of the conferees does in substance what the foregoing hypothetical amendment would have done, it supplies the authority that the general law would have afforded, had such a law existed, and is therefore within the authority of the conferees, and in order. Further it is stated that the ground to be acquired is as a matter of fact water-bearing ground, and on the authority of the preceding language of the paragraph, the acquisition of this land could be justified. The securing of water may be either the purchase of water rights, or water-bearing ground, that might in addition be available for maneuver and other military purposes.

Another proposition not to be forgotten in this discussion is that the thing in issue, in controversy, is the whole proviso that was eliminated by the Senate.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No. The Chair cautioned me to be brief and I am afraid I have already exceeded that caution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No; I do not yield. I have not the time.

Another element proper for consideration, as suggested by one of the gentlemen in argument, is that the real purpose of the House proviso was not to expend any money at the posts indicated, while the recommendation of the conferees is to spend some money at one post. From this viewpoint the recommendation related to the real matter in controversy, the substance of the situation, and was intended to bring the two Houses to an agreement.

I disagree with those gentlemen who undertake to say that these conference reports must be strictly construed. On the contrary, they should be liberally construed, to the end that differences being removed, the Houses may be brought together, and legislation should be enacted. So that from various points of view, Mr. Speaker, I submit that this particular proposition is within the parliamentary precedents, and is, as I said before, germane, parliamentary, and proper to be considered by this body.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the Speaker permit me a moment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. COOPER. In my judgment, to justify such a construction of the words "permanent improvements" as is put upon them by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the bill should in express terms appropriate a sum of money to construct a sewer on the Fort D. A. Russell Reservation and also to purchase such additional land as may be necessary for the completion of the sewer. But never should the mere words "permanent improvements" be construed to authorize not only the construction of a sewer on certain land, but also the purchase of additional land. Such a construction involves a plain perversion of the meaning of the words "permanent improvements."

The SPEAKER. The reason why the Chair invited argument upon this amendment is that day before yesterday, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] made his points of order, he very kindly, at the suggestion of the Chair, furnished the Chair with a copy, and the Chair had Judge Crisp, parliamentary secretary, hunt up the authorities and examine them. The Chair had formed somewhat of a general opinion, not fixed, but subject to revision, on the points of order suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]; but this one, the most difficult of all of them, the gentleman from Illinois had not noted before, and it came on the Chair unexpectedly.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and Members holding his views have argued the question elaborately, and the truth is that the reason why the Chair invited gentlemen on the other side to argue it is that the Chair was very much inclined at that time to hold with the gentleman from Illinois, and did not need any more instruction from that point of view. Now the whole matter has been argued elaborately.

The paragraph over which this controversy arises is subheaded "Water and sewers at military posts."

The proviso which the House put in is as follows:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts.

Here follows a list of 25 Army posts, including Fort D. A. Russell. The Senate struck out the proviso, the gist of which is "permanent improvements." The conferees inserted the following words in lieu of the proviso:

Provided, That not exceeding $1,000 of the sum herein appropriated, together with the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of the appropriation in the Army appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, for the improvement of the Crow Creek or Fort D. A. Russell target and maneuver reservation, Wyoming, may be expended by the Secretary of War, in his discretion, in the acquirement by purchase or condemnation proceedings of certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes, lying within the limits of the aforesaid reservation.

There are two general rules governing conferences. The first is that conferees can not inject into a bill an absolutely new subject, and the second is that what they do inject into a bill must be germane. The view of the Chair is that in the ordinary construction of language this proviso is separated entirely from the preceding part of this section. The paragraph is headed, "Water and sewerage at military posts." It treats of that. Then comes the proviso, "That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts."

That introduces a brand new subject, namely, permanent improvements. We have knowledge that what the House was trying to do, or preparing the way to do, was to get rid of these 25 posts. That was the view of the House. The bill went over to the Senate, and the Senate struck out that whole proviso. Some of us know, I think, how it came to be stricken out. Of course, it is not the business of the Chair to comment on the Senate or any Senator thereof, but when you consider what was put in at last, it does not require a very difficult process of reasoning to find out how it happened to be put in. The House conferees had to agree to this proposition made by the Senate conferees, otherwise there would have been no agreement in conference.

During the time that this exceedingly interesting debate has been going on, various gentlemen have suggested various things and cited various authorities. So far as the Chair has been able to ascertain, the authorities he is going to read now seem to be very nearly in point, and these authorities have largely influenced his opinion.

In the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress (RECORD, pp. 410–411; Journal, pp. 423–424) Mr. Speaker CANNON delivered a very elaborate opinion, and here is the rule which he laid down:

It is true that if the whole paragraph in the bill as it passed the House had been stricken out—

And that part of it is exactly what happened in this case—

and a substitute therefor proposed by the Senate—

That did not happen—

or if the Senate had stricken out the paragraph without proposing a substitute, and the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate, then the conferees might have had jurisdiction touching the whole matter and might have agreed upon any provision that would have been germane.

That is the general rule, as Speaker CANNON laid it down, and it fits this case. Then in section 6422 of Hinds' Precedents—this is Speaker Carlisle's decision. On August 3, 1886, the House had under consideration the report of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill. Mr. William M.

Springer, of Illinois, made the point of order that the conferees had included new matter in their report—the Speaker ruled:

The House passed a bill to provide for the improvement of rivers and harbors and making an appropriation for that purpose. That bill was sent to the Senate, where it was amended by striking out all after the enacting clause—

Now, that is exactly the same state of case as Mr. Speaker CANNON passed on—and inserting a different proposition in some respects, but a proposition having the same object in view. When that came back to the House it was treated, and properly so, as one single amendment and not as a series of amendments, as was contended for by some gentlemen on the floor at the time.

It was nonconcurred in by the House, and a conference was appointed upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. That conference committee having met, reports back the Senate amendment as a single amendment with various amendments, and recommends that it be concurred in with the other amendments which the committee has incorporated in its report. The question, therefore, is not whether the provisions to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes are germane to the original bill as it passed the House, but whether they are germane to the Senate amendment which the House had under consideration and which was referred to the committee of conference. If germane to that amendment, the point of order can not be sustained on the ground claimed by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair thinks they are germane to the Senate amendment, for, though different from the provisions contained in the Senate amendment, they relate to the same subject, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

And in a case almost parallel to this the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] raised the point of order that the conferees had exceeded their authority, and Mr. Speaker Henderson overruled that point of order in an elaborate decision.

During this debate it has been discovered that on the sundry civil bill approved March 3, 1911, in the closing days of the Sixty-first Congress, the House agreed to a bill in which the following language is contained:

Water and sewers at military posts: For procuring and introducing water to buildings and premises at such military posts and stations as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance.

That is the very same subject that this disputed paragraph is about—

For the purchase and repair of fire apparatus; for the disposal of sewage; for repairs to water and sewer systems and for hire of employees, $2,250,903.27: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of this sum may be used for the improvement and protection of the water supply and for the improvement of the grounds of the Fort D. A. Russell target and maneuver reservation, Wyoming—

Nearly the same item that is being discussed here to-day—and that from the sum hereby appropriated the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to acquire by purchase or condemnation proceedings certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes, lying within the limits of the aforesaid reservation.

And so on. The Chair does not remember, although he was present at the time, whether the point of order was raised against that or not; but if it was not raised against it, all of us sat here and let it go through without any objection whatever.

Mr. PRINCE. May I be permitted——

The SPEAKER. Judge Crisp informs me that this provision was put on by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. There could have been no point of order raised against it here, if it was a Senate amendment.

Mr. PRINCE. It was put on by the Senate, and we could not raise the point of order. But let me suggest this to the Speaker, that in what he has read there is a specific mention of water supply, but in the amendment under discussion there is no mention of water. This amendment that I am contending is not in order reads as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following: Provided, That not exceeding $1,000 of the sum herein appropriated, together with the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of the appropriation in the Army appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, for the improvement of the Crow Creek or Fort D. A. Russell target and maneuver reservation, Wyoming, may be expended by the Secretary of War, in his discretion, in the acquirement by purchase or condemnation proceedings of certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes, lying within the limits of the aforesaid reservation.

What the Chair read did specifically mention water supplies which would be proper under water and sewer military purposes, but there is no word of water mentioned in this amendment, which I contend is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is certainly of the opinion that the first part of this paragraph, down to the proviso, contained one proposition, and the proviso contained an entirely different proposition. While it is a close question, and while it is a very liberal construction, it seems to the Chair that under all the circumstances the point of order ought to be overruled, and it is accordingly overruled.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he desires any time on the report.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I have had a number of requests for time on this side and I do not see how I can get along with less than one hour on this side of the House. I am making it as short as I can.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the conference report may continue for two hours, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered, and that one half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that debate on the conference report shall be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]; at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. PRINCE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRINCE. If that proposition obtains, would we be permitted to have a separate vote on some of the propositions?

The SPEAKER. No; the conference report is to be voted upon as a whole.

Mr. PRINCE. That was my understanding, but several Members thought they were entitled to a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. As far as the Chair knows the ruling has been continuous and universal that conference reports must be accepted or rejected as a whole. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia to limit and divide the time and at the end of two hours the previous question shall be considered as ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the provisions in this conference report as briefly as I can, to correct some misapprehension and misstatements which have been made by the newspapers with regard to the provisions of this Army bill. As the bill passed the House it appropriated $87,770,000 for the support of the Army for the next year. As it passed the Senate it appropriated $95,314,710, being an increase of $7,537,000 over the House bill.

The Senate receded from items amounting to $4,660,148, and the bill as it stands now carries $90,654,000, being $1,033,000 less than the amount of the bill carried last year.

I think it can be fairly stated that the House succeeded very well in its conference on this bill so far as the appropriation part of it was concerned.

The bill also carried when it went from the House various legislative provisions. It has been stated by the newspapers, inspired from what source I do not know, that this bill was revolutionary in its character, and that the legislative provisions in the bill were destructive to the efficiency of the Army. I say, without fear of contradiction from any man either here or in the Army, that the bill does not carry a single revolutionary provision, and that it carries provisions that have been recommended by Secretaries of War and by Presidents of the United States for the last 25 years, including the present Secretary of War and the present President of the United States.

It carries a provision providing for the consolidation of the Quartermaster's, the Commissary, and the Paymaster's Departments of the Army. It carries a provision providing for a service corps, both of which have been repeatedly asked for by the War Department. It carries a provision for four years' enlistment in the Army. The bill as it left the House provided for a five-year term of enlistment. That was opposed by the War Department and the Senate struck that provision out of the bill. When that came into conference we agreed upon four years, because it appeared that the enlistments in the Navy are for four years, the enlistments in the Marine Corps are for four years, and we saw no reason why the enlistments in the Army should not be four years so as to make all the services for the same term.

Much has been said of what this bill does to certain corps in the Army. It is stated in an editorial in a morning paper that this bill destroys the efficiency of the Panama Canal organization under Col. Goethals. There is not a word of truth in that statement. There is not a line in this bill which affects the Engineer Corps of the Army in any possible way. The same statement was made in the Washington Herald of yesterday morning, as coming from an officer in the General Staff of the Army. The officer who made that statement and the man who made the statement in the editorial in the paper of this morning were ignorant of what they were talking about, and the officer does not deserve to be an officer of the United States Army.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Then there is not anything in this measure as it is pending here which will remove any of those officials who have been useful to Col. Goethals on the Isthmian Canal?

Mr. HAY. There is not a thing that will remove a single Engineer officer. There may be some captains of the Commissary Department on the Isthmus whose places will be taken by some other captains.

Mr. BUTLER. But none of the Engineer officers?

Mr. HAY. Not one of them.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman know who is responsible for the promulgation of these lies in regard to this measure?

Mr. HAY. I do not know, I will say to the gentleman, and therefore I would not like to make a statement. It is also stated in this editorial that this bill disorganizes the General Staff and makes it impossible to carry on the work of the War College.

The bill, as a matter of fact, does reduce the number of General Staff officers, but it does not affect in any way the Army War College. The Army War College and the General Staff are not the same organization. The War College is a college where officers instruct other officers of the Army, and the officers are detailed there just as they are detailed for duty in other branches of the service. The General Staff has nothing to do with the Army War College except that the General Staff has had so many officers on duty here who had nothing else to do that they had been sent down to the War College to be instructed or to instruct.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Those same officers could be detailed to the War College, even though the General Staff were reduced?

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly. The details to the War College are details from the Army at large and not from the General Staff.

Mr. MONDELL. And are entirely independent of any changes in the General Staff?

Mr. HAY. Entirely so. The editorial further says that this bill takes from the President and the Secretary of War and the War Department the direction of the general military policy of the Government and places it in the hands of a number of retired officers. Of course, that refers to this commission created in this bill to go into the question of Army posts and to decide what Army posts shall be abandoned and what shall be built up, and whether this concentration of Army posts shall take place. It must be recognized by everybody who is at all familiar with Army matters that it is necessary for this House, in order to intelligently legislate upon this question of Army posts, to have some expert opinion from somebody who knows something about it.

It has been the history of Army recommendations in the past that one Secretary of War recommends one thing and another Secretary of War recommends another, one Chief of Staff is in favor of one policy and another Chief of Staff is in favor of another. What we desired to do by the appointment of this commission was to get from these retired Army officers, who would be uninfluenced from any source because their Army career is ended, who will not be under the influence either of the War Department or of Members of Congress who might aid them in their career, a fair statement of this question as to what would be the best policy for Congress to pursue. We wanted to get their advice and the benefit of their knowledge in order that this House and the Senate together might map out a policy and carry it out, and not be subject to the changing opinions of Secretaries of War and Chiefs of Staff.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion in regard to section 5, whether under the provisions here Gen. Wood, Chief of Staff, would not be retired on next March and could not be again returned to the same position?

Mr. HAY. I would state to the gentleman that under the provision to which he has referred Gen. Wood will cease to be Chief of Staff on the 5th day of next March.

And I want to state in connection with this amendment, which seems to have caused a great deal of comment, that it was put in this bill because the conferees believed that it was good general legislation. It was not intended to be aimed at any individual. It was because it was thought that a man who was Chief of Staff should have had some experience in the line as a commissioned officer with troops and not be some one who never had had that experience. Much has been said about Col. Goethals and Gen. Crozier not being able under this provision to be Chief of Staff. I want to point out to this House that under the law as it stands neither Col. Goethals nor Gen. Crozier are eligible to be Chief of Staff. They would have to be promoted to the line of the Army either as brigadier or major general before they could be made Chief of Staff under the law as it now stands, and I have never heard it suggested that men who are in these specialized corps, like the Engineer and Ordnance, should be made Chief of Staff. It was never intended that they should be Chief of Staff. The very staff act itself provides that a Chief of Staff shall be taken from officers in the Army at large and not from these specialized corps, and this provision as it is written does not interfere with the President selecting in time of war anybody he pleases for his Chief of Staff. Nobody can deny the proposition that the Chief of Staff of the Army occupies a position in which he ought to have a large experience of all branches of the Army, experience which can only be had by some man who has served with troops and who is familiar with all the different branches, particularly the line of the Army. He supervises, although he does not command, the various departments in the War Department.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman did not want to legislate Gen. Wood out of this office, why did not he do what would have been a very simple thing to have done, and that is put in a proviso that it should not affect any general officer now or heretofore occupying the position of Chief of Staff?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that in the preparation of this provision, which I prepared myself and for which I take the responsibility, it did not come into my mind as to whether or not it would affect this, that, or the other man, but I prepared it with a view of obtaining hereafter as Chief of Staff of the Army men who had had the necessary experience. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does the gentleman mean to say that he absolutely originated this proposition himself?

Mr. HAY. I certainly do.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And never consulted with anybody or had any advice or assistance or any suggestion about the matter?

Mr. HAY. I certainly do; and I may say to the gentleman that in asking a question of that sort he is stepping a little beyond the bounds of propriety when I just stated I originated the proposition and that I drew the proposition and that I am responsible for it, if there is any responsibility attaching to doing what I have always tried to do ever since I have been on this committee, and that is to do something for the benefit of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me to further interrupt him?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman has also stated to me he originated the proviso with reference to the commission that is to determine what is to be done with these Army posts and that he named the commissioners therein.

Mr. HAY. I did.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say to him instead of putting these men in, if he had just named one of his fellow conferees as a commissioner the result would not be any different, so far as certain recommendations are concerned, from what it will be as it is, and the gentleman will ascertain that fact before he is many months older.

Mr. HAY. Well, I do not regard that as asking me any question.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. But I think the gentleman understands it perfectly.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman, so far as I know—of course I do not know who is to be appointed by the Vice President as members of this committee, nor do I know who will be appointed by the Speaker——

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not either, but I will tell you what they will do after they are appointed.

Mr. HAY. Well, the gentleman is a prophet, and is far above all the rest of us in knowledge as to what is going to happen in the future.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I was called out for a moment, and I did not hear the entire controversy. Do I understand the gentleman to say he is responsible for the naming of this commission in the bill?

Mr. HAY. I did so state, in connection with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], the other Democratic conferee. I drew the amendment providing for the commission to examine into these posts, and the officers are named as they appear in this bill.

Mr. KAHN. Did the gentleman know that three of these officers named by him made a report in the Fifty-seventh Congress respecting various Army posts?

Mr. HAY. I did not until after the conference report had been agreed upon, and then I had my attention called to the fact that three of these men named on this commission had made a recommendation with regard to Army posts, but I do not think that those three men—Gen. Young, I believe, Gen. MacArthur, and Gen. Randall—would feel that they are bound by that report, as the conditions under which they acted then are not the same as they are now.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. How about Humphrey?

Mr. HAY. Well, how about Humphrey?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. He is agent of the Powder Trust.

Mr. HAY. Does that make him a dishonest man? I want to say for Gen. Humphrey that he is all right, and as able and as honest a man as there is in this country, and because he happens to represent a powder company or anything else does not disqualify him from doing his duty as an honest man when it is devolved upon him by Congress.

Mr. COOPER. One of the conferees, the Senator from Delaware, is a member of the Powder Trust.

Mr. MANN. I do not want my colleague to understand——

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] knows it is out of order for him to call the name of a Senator on this floor, and I will say to him that he ought to know, if he does not know, that the Senator from Delaware has no part in the powder company.

Mr. COOPER. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that I do not know that it is out of order to make a mention of a Senator on the floor, and I will do it whenever I wish.

Mr. HAY. I said in such a connection.

Mr. KAHN. I did not want the House to understand that I desire to impugn the honesty or integrity of any of these gentlemen. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this, that three of the commissioners named in this report did pass upon this question. They have made a report, and that report is one of the published documents of this House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement right there?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. In addition to what the gentleman from California has said, they also served on a commission to select a camp of instruction.

Mr. KAHN. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have not.

Mr. KAHN. If he will read their report he will find they went fully into the subject of Army posts.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I just wanted to interrupt the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] a moment or two. Some statements have been flung about recklessly in speaking the names of the gentlemen who are upon this commission to advise with Congress with reference to the policy of maintaining military stations. I was consulted, and I dare say other gentlemen were consulted about that matter. The purpose of everyone seems to be to find gentlemen of experience in the military service who could advise best on the knowledge of the requirements of the situation, and also, if possible, to find gentlemen who were so far removed from current, Government, or political life that the recommendation, when it came to Congress, would receive respectful attention. I was asked if I could suggest the names of gentlemen measuring up with that standard of fitness. I happened to have a personal acquaintance with one man who served for more than 40 years in the Army, beginning his service as an enlisted man, as I believe, in 1861, and serving almost continuously with the line of the Army. Almost all his long military career was with troops. He finally reached the rank of major general on retirement. He is a man of excellent character, and a citizen of the State of Indiana. I selected his name because I believed him in every way qualified and suitable for the work. Certainly gentlemen of such eminence as these, ranging in rank from lieutenant general to major general on the retired list, can not be suspected of having ulterior motives.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is it not also true, in the selection of these generals whose names have been mentioned, that the committee had also in view the fact that each of them had served at one or the other of these military posts, and therefore were qualified to act in that capacity?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I dare say that most of them have served in the greater part of those posts, because they are all old Indian fighters and were in the Army for more than 40 years, I think, every one of them. Yes; it was their peculiar qualifications for the place that suggested their names.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is this one of the officers who joined in the report mentioned?

Mr. HAY. No, sir; he is not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said all I care to say at this time, except that under the provisions of this bill there will be ultimately saved, in my judgment, at least $10,000,000 a year in the Military Establishment; and there can be no question as to the fact that the bill is one that deserves the support of every Member of this House. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman kindly state to what extent officers in the department of the Commissary General are affected, as I understand, by Senate amendment No. 71, as agreed upon by the conferees?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that the officers in the Commissary Department are not affected by the consolidation at all. If the consolidation had never taken place, they would get the same promotion now that they would get after the consolidation has taken place. However, there are some officers of the Commissary Department who will not have the same relative rank as they would have had if this consolidation had not taken place, and for that reason the conferees undertook, in the section dealing with the consolidation of these corps, to provide that they should have such relative rank; but by a clerical error the Army Register of 1912 was inserted instead of that of 1911, and the two committees propose, if possible, to have that corrected on the Military Academy bill.

Mr. SMALL. May I ask the gentleman if there is any legislative difficulty in correcting that clerical error in the future?

Mr. HAY. I think none in the world.

Mr. SMALL. In what way does the gentleman propose to correct it?

Mr. HAY. As I said, on the Military Academy bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been often printed about Gen. Wood and said about him to-day, I propose myself to say a word concerning him and his record as a man and soldier. I do this without his knowledge, nor is there anybody who knows of my intention. I do it simply because I deem it the duty of somebody to place the facts in the record of the House, where all the people may read them and learn the truth about a man who has served the Nation so well.

In all my experience in public life I have never known a man to be more maliciously misrepresented than has been Gen. Leonard Wood since his return from Cuba at the close of his superb administration of the affairs of that island. An officer of the United States Army repeated to me yesterday what he said to me 3 or 4 years ago and first told me 10 or 12 years ago. Gen. Wood was in this city on a visit from Cuba. During that visit of Gen. Wood this officer of the United States Army said to me: "I heard a Senator"—and he mentioned his name—"I heard a Senator say to Gen. Wood to-day, 'What are you going to do with Rathbone in Cuba?' Said Gen. Wood, 'Senator, I shall prosecute him if he is guilty of crime.' The Senator replied, 'You prosecute him, and you will never get further than captain in the Regular Army.'"

Gentlemen will remember the prosecution and conviction, and I need not remind them of the persistent attacks to which Gen. Wood has been subjected.

In answer to all these I shall read only from the official records of the War Department. Under date of September 9, 1886, is a letter from Gen. Henry W. Lawton, killed in battle in the Philippines, one of the bravest soldiers and noblest spirits the Union Army ever knew.

"I desire to particularly invite the attention of the department commander to Asst. Surg. Leonard Wood, the only officer who has been with me through the whole campaign. His courage, energy, and loyal support during the whole time; his encouraging example to the command, when work was the hardest and prospects darkest; his thorough confidence and belief in the final success of the expedition, and his untiring efforts to make it so has placed me under obligations so great that I can not even express them. * * *

"Gen. N. A. MILES.

"MY DEAR GENERAL: I inclose a letter just received from Dr. Wood, which will explain itself. When the question of brevets for Indian service was being considered at the War Department, soon after the passage of the act authorizing them, I personally interested myself in behalf of those officers who served under my immediate command, and who had been mentioned for distinguished services in my report; but was met with the argument that the law contemplated only those who were distinguished under fire, or in 'fire action.' I took some pains to look up authorities to show that such a construction was narrow and impracticable, as well as not contemplated by the law. I availed nothing, and at that time the names of none of those who took part in the capture of Geronimo were on the list. Concerning Dr. Leonard Wood, I can only repeat what I have before reported officially, and what I have said to you; that his services during that trying campaign were of the highest order. I speak particularly of services other than those devolving upon him as a medical officer; services as a combatant or line officer, voluntarily performed. He sought the most difficult and dangerous work, and by his determination and courage rendered a successful issue of the campaign possible. Voluntarily commanding the Infantry detachment, there being no other officer present available, he uncomplainingly endured great personal inconvenience and physical suffering, that his example might encourage those under his charge. While I hope every officer mentioned will receive some official recognition, and believe that it is impossible for any to deserve it more, there are none who should be considered before Dr. Leonard Wood.

"Very respectfully,

"H. W. LAWTON,

"Respectfully forwarded.

"The inclosed letter from Col. Lawton was duly received, but at the time there were objections to granting brevets to some officers that I had recommended, and I delayed sending these papers forward, hoping that I should be able to go to Washington and personally lay the matter before the authorities.

"I now most earnestly renew the recommendation, calling especial attention to the letter of Col. Lawton, which describes one of the most laborious, persistent, and heroic campaigns in which men were ever engaged, and the fact that Capt. Leonard Wood, assistant surgeon, volunteered to perform the extraordinary hazardous and dangerous service is creditable to him in the highest degree. For his gallantry on the 13th July in the surprise and capture of Geronimo's camp, I recommend that he be brevetted for his services on that date.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, April 15, 1898.

"To his excellency, ROGER WOLCOTT, "Governor Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

"SIR: Respectfully but earnestly I desire to call your attention to Capt. Leonard Wood, United States Army, a citizen of Massachusetts. Capt. Wood graduated at Harvard University and later from Harvard Medical College, entering the military service of the United States as an assistant surgeon soon after. It is not, however, of his services as a medical officer that I desire to speak. In his profession he has risen to the highest eminence, having the respect and confidence of the most distinguished personages of the country, including the President of the United States, being at the present time attending physician for himself and family. Almost immediately after joining the military service Capt. Wood was assigned to a command organized to pursue and capture or destroy the band of renegade Apaches commanded by the noted chief and warrior Geronimo, who had been terrorizing and devastating the southern portions of Arizona and New Mexico and northern Sonora, Mexico. I had the honor to command this expedition under the immediate direction of Gen. Miles. Capt. Wood, then acting assistant surgeon, developed during this tedious and dangerous campaign (pronounced by the general commanding 'the most remarkable in the history of the United States Army') the strongest elements of soldierly instincts. When through exposure and fatigue the Infantry battalion lost its last officer Capt. Wood volunteered to command it, in addition to his duties as a surgeon."

Listen to these words from one of the bravest of the brave:

"In this duty Capt. Wood distinguished himself most. His courage, endurance, and example made success possible. I served through the War of the Rebellion and in many battles but in no instance do I remember such devotion to duty or such an example of courage and perseverance. It was mainly due to Capt. Wood's loyalty and resolution that the expedition was successful. This acknowledgment was made by the commanding officer in his official report of the campaign, was approved by the general commanding, and Capt. Wood was awarded a medal of honor by Congress as a tribute to his services. Since then Capt. Wood has been conspicuous for gallant and intelligent, faithful services. Now that a war seems imminent, Capt. Wood has determined to leave for the time his professional duties and take service with the fighting line as a soldier proper, and it is in this connection that I desire to recommend him to you as a competent and valuable soldier with field experience. He will be a credit to his State in any capacity of soldierly duty; the higher the position to which he may be appointed the greater will be his value. His connection with the service has prevented him from associating himself with the organized militia of your State, but he is such a valuable man that his State can ill afford to lose his services.

"I make my statement from personal knowledge of the man, both as an inspector and for a time in the field his commanding officer.

"SIR: You are hereby notified that by direction of the President and under the provisions of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863, a congressional medal of honor has this day been presented to you for most distinguished gallantry, the following being a statement of the particular service, viz:

"'Throughout the campaign against the hostile Apaches in the summer of 1886, this officer, then assistant surgeon and serving as a medical officer with Capt. Lawton's expedition, rendered specially courageous and able services involving extreme peril and display of most conspicuous gallantry under conditions of great danger, hardship, and privation. He volunteered to carry dispatches through a region infested with hostile Indians, making a journey of 70 miles in one night, and then marching 30 miles on foot the next day. For several weeks, while in close pursuit of Geronimo's band and constantly expecting an encounter, Asst. Surg. Wood exercised the command of a detachment of Infantry to which he requested assignment and that was then without an officer.'

"The medal will be forwarded to you by registered mail as soon as it shall have been engraved.

[1] Annual Report of the Major General Commanding the Army, 1898, p. 163.
[2] Idem, p. 333.

The headquarters of the department will be established in the city of Santiago.

"'Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton, United States Volunteers, is hereby assigned to the command of the Department of Santiago.

"'Brig. Gens. Leonard Wood and Ezra P. Ewers, United States Volunteers, will report to Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton, United States Volunteers, for duty in the Department of Santiago.

"'The officers of the several staff departments now on duty with the general officers above named are temporarily assigned to like duties at their respective headquarters.'"

"You will arrange with Gen. Lawton for him to assume command at such time as you and he shall agree, it being understood that he will have control of only the troops sent to Santiago for garrison duty and the sick and convalescents of your command left there. It is expected that Gen. Wood will be left in command of the city.

"These charges, which were received by the Secretary of War on the 21st of March, 1903, will be filed, together with Brig. Gen. Leonard Wood's answer thereto of that date, and no further action will be taken thereon. No answer to the charges was required from Gen. Wood and none was necessary, for it was already known to the Secretary of War that the charges were in every respect without just foundation. The part taken by the military governor of Cuba in the prosecution of the so-called Post Office cases, in which Mr. Rathbone was one of the defendants, had at every step the approval of the War Department, and the military governor exercised no control over the proceedings except such as it was his duty to exercise; and that control in no case went beyond the control which prosecuting officers in the United States lawfully exercise over cases committed to their charge. The 'Jai Alai' Co., referred to in the charges, maintained a court in which a game is played, somewhat similar to our game of racket, and in which the Cuban people are interested, much as our people are interested in the game of baseball. The company included many of the best citizens of Habana, and the gift to Gen. Wood, which was made at the time of his departure from the island, had no relation whatever to any official action of his affecting the company, but was a part of the general expression of gratitude by the Cuban people toward the representative of the United States for the just and beneficent government through which the establishment of the Republic of Cuba had been accomplished, and the chief credit of which was due to Gen. Wood. To have refused this and other gifts made at the same time would have been discourteous, injurious, and unjustifiable. The treatment of the gift at the customhouse was strictly in accordance with law and official propriety.

"The charges have no justification.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, March 25, 1903.

"By direction of the President, Brig. Gen. Leonard Wood, United States Army, having filed the report which completes his service as military governor of Cuba and commander of the military forces stationed in that island from December, 1899, to the close of the American occupation, is relieved from further duty in connection with the affairs of the former military government of Cuba.

"The administration of Gen. Wood, both as military commander of the Division and Department of Cuba and as military governor, was highly creditable. The civil government was managed with an eye single to the benefits of the Cuban people. Under the supervision and control of the military governor the Cuban people themselves had an opportunity to carry on their own government to a constantly increasing degree, so that when Cuba assumed her independence she started with the best possible chance of success.

"Out of an utterly prostrate colony a free Republic was built up; the work being done with such signal ability, integrity, and success that the new nation started under more favorable conditions than has ever before been the case in any single instance among her fellow Spanish-American Republics. This record stands alone in history, and the benefit conferred thereby on the people of Cuba was no greater than the honor conferred upon the people of the United States.

"The War Department, by direction of the President, thanks Gen. Wood and the officials, civil and military, serving under him, upon the completion of a work so difficult, so important, and so well done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print a list furnished me at the War Department, compiled by Brig. Gen. Mills, showing some of the officers, many of them of great distinction, who would have been excluded under this provision of the conference report from being Chief of Staff; and also some statements of distinguished authorities as to the magnificent services rendered by Gen. Wood in Cuba after the close of the War with Spain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the papers referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"May 23, 1911.

"(Subject: List of prominent officers of Civil War who, in 1860, had served less than 10 years as commissioned officers of the line.)

"Herewith is a memorandum in connection with the amendment of the House and Senate conference committee on the Army appropriation bill prohibiting the detail, after March 5, 1913, of a Chief of Staff who has served less than 10 years as a commissioned officer of the line of the Army.

"Following is a partial list of general officers of the Union Army in the Civil War who would have been ineligible for Chief of Staff had such a provision been in force in 1860:

RANK ATTAINED (SERVICE TO INCLUDE 1860).

"Philip H. Sheridan, major general, second lieutenant Infantry, 1853; first lieutenant Infantry, 1861.

"James B. McPherson, major general, second lieutenant Engineers, 1853; first lieutenant Engineers, 1858; captain, 1861.

"John M. Schofield, major general, second lieutenant Artillery, 1853; first lieutenant Artillery, 1855; captain Artillery, 1861.

"Oliver O. Howard, major general, second lieutenant Ordnance, 1854; first lieutenant Ordnance, 1857; resigned, 1861.

"Daniel E. Sickles, major general, no service prior to 1860.

"John A. Logan, major general, second lieutenant Illinois Infantry, 1847–48; mustered out, 1848; no other service prior to 1860.

"Carl Schurz, major general, no service prior to 1860.

"James A. Garfield, major general, no service prior to 1860.

"Wesley Merritt, major general, commissioned second lieutenant Dragoons, 1860.

"'Resolved, That the thanks of this association be tendered the gentlemen who accomplished this brilliant result, and particularly to Drs. Walter Reed, James Carroll, A. Agramonte, W. O. Gorgas, and to Leonard Wood, who recognized the importance of the work and made it possible by his hearty encouragement and assistance.'

"Extract from the sketch of Maj. Reed's work in the discovery of the method of the transmission of yellow fever, by Col. Jefferson R. Kean, Medical Corps, United States Army:

"'It was evident to his mind that the solution of this question, which meant so much for the human race, could never be satisfactorily determined without experiments on human beings, and he went to Gen. Wood, the military governor of Cuba, to ask permission to conduct such experiments and for a sum of money to liberally reward volunteers who should submit themselves for experiment. Gen. Wood promptly granted both, with a ready appreciation of the importance of the matter and the force of Dr. Reed's arguments, which will entitle him to no small measure of the glory of this discovery.'

"Extract from a report on Maj. Reed's work on yellow fever, by Maj. W. D. McCaw, Medical Corps, United States Army:

* * * * * * *

"'Application was made to Gen. Leonard Wood, the military governor of Cuba, for permission to conduct experiments on nonimmune persons, and a liberal sum of money requested for the purpose of rewarding volunteers who would submit themselves to experiment.

"'It was indeed fortunate that the military governor of Cuba was a man who by his breadth of mind and special scientific training could readily appreciate the arguments of Maj. Reed as to the value of the proposed work.

"'Money and full authority to proceed were promptly granted, and to the everlasting glory of the American soldier, volunteers from the Army offered themselves for experiment in plenty and with the utmost fearlessness.'

"Extract from editorial, Journal of the American Medical Association, dated July 16, 1910:

"'After the capture of Santiago Gen. Wood was placed in command of that district, and in the space of a year his capacity for organization had so clearly demonstrated itself that he was transferred to Habana and made the military governor of Cuba with the rank of major general of Volunteers. In three years he brought Cuba from a naked and devastated land where famine and disease stalked hand in hand to salubrity and plenty. The death rate in Habana fell from 91 per 1,000 in 1898 to 20 in 1902. In the 30 years preceding his appointment as governor there were in the city of Habana 21,448 deaths from yellow fever and 12,722 from smallpox. In the decade since that date there have been 44 deaths from yellow fever and 4 from smallpox.

"'But the sanitary regeneration of Cuba and the support and assistance given to the Reed yellow fever board are only a small part of the creditable work of the military governor of Cuba. In every direction in which constructive statesmanship can influence the destinies of a nation the work of Leonard Wood has left an indelible impress on the government and lives of the Cuban people.'"

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss the clause which compels the Chief of Staff to have had 10 years' service in the line. I think we all admit that the President should be given just as large and broad a choice for Chief of Staff as possible, so that wherever the best man is he may be brought forward, and consequently the burden of proof is upon those who claim that there should be some limitation. Therefore the committee must prove that the 10 years' service with the line is necessary.

When the General Staff was established there was no proposition that 10 years in the line were necessary. Naturally it could not have suggested itself, experience was against it. Two instances suffice to prove that though there are many others, Gen. Lee and Gen. McClellan at the outbreak of the war would not either of them under this limitation have been eligible for Chief of Staff, and yet no one will deny that these two men were preeminently qualified for that position.

What has happened since, just in this year, to call the attention and convince the committee that 10 years are necessary? It could not have been that the choice has been made too much from the staff and not from the line, because of the five Chiefs of Staff four of them complied with this limitation. The present officer is the only one that does not, and therefore no need has yet been shown, for I am sure that no one will pretend that Gen. Wood's services as Chief of Staff have not compared favorably with others and have not been up to the standard as Chief of Staff. He has made a magnificent officer there.

Why is it, then, that suddenly this proposition is invented? I think it is very unfortunate that there should ever be any dissension between the staff and the line. Each in its place is imperatively necessary for the Army. Each is qualified to produce men for Chief of Staff, and while it may be that under the present conditions the natural tendency is for men with brilliant minds and ambition and enterprise to go to the staff, still both are amply qualified to prepare men for Chief of Staff.

But we know that recently before the Military Committee the Chief of Staff and another general of the Army, who by his position had an unusual opportunity to serve and ingratiate himself with Members of Congress, who seemed to have the sympathy of the Military Committee, and who retired from the Army rather than run the risk of a court-martial, that there was a difference between him and the Chief of Staff, and after that dissension, which seemed to involve members of the committee, a proposition was evolved which prevents the present Chief of Staff being reappointed.

I do not think it requires a very suspicious turn of mind for a Member to guess that there was some connection between them. This is not the first time legislation, apparently general in its scope, has been used to gratify personal resentment. Some years ago a Member of Congress had a grudge against a retired officer who was employed in a manufacturing establishment which had large dealings with the Government, and he introduced in a general bill a clause that no money should be expended in any institution which employed a retired officer; a general proposition, but aimed at one man. It was an attempt and a successful one to prostitute general legislation to personal malice. I have seen since then no occasion when it seemed to me that there were more earmarks of that same purpose than I see here.

Undoubtedly the extraordinary rapidity of Gen. Wood's advancement in the Army has occasioned much criticism and hostility, but I believe no candid Army official will deny his great ability or claim that he has not performed the duties of Chief of Staff with signal success, and I think it is as unwise as it is unfair to make him the victim of this personal legislation. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] said that neither Gen. Crozier or Col. Goethals, men whose abilities and achievements would naturally suggest them for Chief of Staff, would be eligible to-day even without this provision. That, of course, is correct because neither of them now possesses the requisite rank, but a President who wished their service could at any time remove that disqualification by promoting them, while this provision would disqualify them forever. I think the suggestion of their names is one of the best arguments against this provision, for they have both proved themselves possessed of qualities infinitely more important to a Chief of Staff than 10 years' service with troops, and are illustrations of the fact that what we need in that position is brains and executive ability far more than 10 years of any one special training.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I do not question the absolute good faith of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House in pushing this Army reorganization plan, and I do not at all attribute to a lack of good faith upon his part the singular fact that if the two mooted propositions in this conference report, the one in respect to the Army posts and the other in respect to the Chief of Staff, had been written by one of the conferees—and I think I can say, with all due respect to the other members, the principal conferee—the report could not have been more favorable to him and his interests than it now is. The gentleman from Virginia has not in his district a $5,000,000 brigade Army post, the finest in the United States, without a single, natural, artificial, or strategic advantage to justify its existence. The gentleman from Virginia has not a son-in-law whose fortunes on the road of promotion to Chief of Staff are to be advantaged and accelerated by legislation which will disqualify those who are now ahead of him. He has no son-in-law who, in being promoted from captain to brigadier general, was jumped over the heads of more than 700 captains, majors, and colonels.

Mr. BUTLER. Good gracious! Seven hundred?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Seven hundred. Gentlemen talk about Gen. Leonard Wood being promoted——

Mr. BUTLER. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, but my interest is excited. Who is this captain that the gentleman is speaking of?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. We are not mentioning names here at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. That would seem to be a pretty big jump.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will read a list of names of general Army officers, giving them in the order in which they appear in the Official Army Register for 1912, and the first nine names will suffice to show gentlemen the situation present and prospective with reference to the office of Chief of Staff, the officer filling which is the real head of the Army.

Name.	Year of birth.	Year of retirement.
Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood	1860	1924
Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell	1856	1920
Maj. Gen. Thos. H. Barry	1855	1919
Maj. Gen. Wm. H. Carter	1851	1915
Maj. Gen. Arthur Murray	1851	1915
Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston	1865	1929
Brig. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss	1853	1917
Brig. Gen. Albert L. Mills	1854	1916
BRIG. GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING	1860	1924

Two of these nine generals—Wood and Funston—are to be disqualified by this legislation for the office of Chief of Staff. If the remaining seven are to be advanced in the order of their seniority, Gen. Wood would be succeeded by Gen. Bell on March 5 next. When Gen. Bell returns to the line, in March, 1917, four of the six remaining officers, to wit, Gens. Carter, Murray, Bliss, and Mills, will have been retired under the age limit, leaving only Gen. Barry, who retires two years later, and Gen. Pershing in line of promotion.

Singularly enough, the proposition agreed upon by the conferees provides that—

The General Staff shall hereafter consist of two general officers, one of whom shall be Chief of Staff.

Therefore with Gen. Wood, who does not retire until 1924, and Gen. Funston, who does not retire until 1929, out of the way, the remaining two may be simultaneously advanced in the natural order and one of them designated as Chief of Staff. Which will it be? Unless fortune fails him, it should be Gen. Pershing, who, according to the Army Directory of 1906, was advanced from captain to brigadier general over the heads of 110 colonels, 131 lieutenant colonels, 264 majors, and 257 captains, a total of 862 ranking officers.

Gentlemen have talked about Gen. Leonard Wood as the child of fortune and the favorite of influence, but I know of nothing in his career in the way of advancement so utterly extraordinary as that to which I have alluded. I do not hold any brief for Gen. Leonard Wood. I have been rather opposed to him. He has recommended the wiping out of an Army post in my State. He wiped out the Department of the Colorado with headquarters in my State. But I want to say, after sitting across a committee table from Gen. Wood for two hours cross-examining him, that I came out of that committee meeting with the impression, which I still retain, that he is the ablest Army officer I ever met [applause on the Republican side]—the strongest and ablest—and we met in that same committee room some of the other general officers who are on the list with him, including the late lamented The Adjutant General.

I do not carry my feeling with reference to the Colorado Army post to the extent that I am willing to pass legislation to disqualify this man from office on account of his recommendation, and just as sure as you are sitting here, gentlemen, within the sound of my voice, Gen. Wood to-day is paying the penalty for the recommendations that he made to this House of Representatives with reference to Army posts; and I want to say to you gentlemen that if he had made a contrary recommendation in this matter, if he had recommended the retention of some, if he had recommended the retention of at least one of the Army posts whose abolition he recommended, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] and the whole House Committee on Military Affairs could have stood here until doomsday before they could ever have prevailed upon the Senate conferees to accept this proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I know what I am talking about. I am on a little bit of a committee that originated this fuss about abolishing Army posts. It was in response to a resolution of a member of that committee, Mr. BULKLEY, of Ohio, that these recommendations of Gen. Wood were made, and I have had occasion to look into this matter pretty closely.

The resolution of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], calling for the information furnished by the Secretary of War, upon which information the House Committee on Military Affairs based the provision withdrawing support from 25 Army posts, including Fort D. A. Russell, and providing against the expenditure of any part of the appropriation for permanent improvements at such posts, and for furnishing which information the Chief of Staff is now to be punished, with the consent of the House—this resolution, I say, called for the following information:

1. The names of all Army posts which have been located in their present situations for reasons which are now totally obsolete.

Answer. Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., established, 1867, to protect the Union Pacific Railroad in this vicinity and the lines of travel south to Denver and north to Fort Laramie and beyond from attacks by the Arapahoe Indians.

3. The names of all Army posts which were originally placed where they are with reference to possible Indian troubles, and the names of such of these as may be placed where such troubles now are no longer possible.

Answer. Fort D. A. Russell, among others.

5. The names of all posts which have been constructed during the 10 years ending June 30, 1911, upon a plan which involved maximum initial cost of construction and maximum cost of maintenance in money and men; the amounts expended on such posts, respectively, for construction purposes during the said period, and what military necessity, if any, suggested the construction of such posts.

Name of post, Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.

Cost of construction, $4,893,164.29.

9a. The names and cost of all Army posts which would have to be abandoned in order to put an end to the extravagance and inefficiency resulting from improper distribution of the mobile Army.

Names of posts, Fort Mackenzie, Wyo.; Fort Yellowstone, Wyo.

Total cost to date, $1,218,966 and $806,511.51.

9b. Posts not located with a view of securing economy of administration and supply or a full measure of military effectiveness. Their garrisons should not be increased and should ultimately be withdrawn to such concentration centers as Congress may authorize.

Name of post, Fort D. A. Russell.

Total cost to date, $4,925,486.15.

(This post is not located with a view to maximum economy or strategic effectiveness. Its position in a sparsely settled region involves an increased cost for transportation of manufactured supplies, and its distance from recruiting centers makes the recruitment of its garrison more costly. But there are sufficient quarters at the post for a detachment of all arms, with ample facilities for training. There is an abundant water supply at the post, and climate and sanitary conditions are excellent. There is a large maneuver ground within easy marching distance of the post.)

Fort Logan, Colo., located near the suburbs of Denver, is categoried in 9b, along with Fort Russell and 23 other posts, or 25 posts in all, which were recommended for ultimate abandonment.

That this recommendation materially influenced the conferees, and the conferee to whom I refer in particular, is clearly established by his statements regarding it. Speaking of the recommendation, the conferee said:

The Chief of Staff went before that committee and said they were going to propose the abandonment of a good number of the present posts and concentrate the troops in large posts at some uncertain points, and they were going to greatly reduce the expenses of the Army. * * * Subsequently the House, by resolution, requested information as to the posts it was proposed to abandon. The Secretary of War hastened to reply. He gave a list of 25 posts, including some of the largest and newest in the country and covering half of the United States in area, and proposed to remove every post and every place where the United States flag floats over a representative of the Army from a tract of country nearly 2,000 miles one way by about 1,500 miles the other way, including a large number of States entire. The House, taking the Secretary of War at his word, inserted in three different places in the appropriation bill an inhibition against expending a dollar at any one of those posts, although they are occupied by troops and must be so occupied until other arrangements are made. The House also provided that there should be no new posts created and none enlarged without legislation by Congress.

Again the conferee said:

There is no objection to the abandonment of useless posts, but to take one-half of the United States and with one fell swoop take the flag of the United States out of it entirely and leave the militia there with no troops with which to cooperate and with which to go into these great meetings raises a question into which I think the Senators and Members of the House have a right to examine and upon which to express their views.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes more.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Oh, I can not say anything in three minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well; I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, since I have been in Congress I have never seen such an abuse, such a gross abuse, I feel tempted to say such a prostitution of legislative power to base personal ends and revenge as that which is confronting this House this afternoon. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And I want to say now that if the House could get a crack at this proposition by means of a separate vote it would overwhelmingly reject it, as it would have been overwhelmingly rejected at the other end of this Capitol under similar conditions. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have been reading the debates which occurred at the other end of the Capitol upon this proposition, and while it is not proper to refer to things specifically, as legislative ethics forbid it, yet if gentlemen will read the debates that have occurred upon the Army post proposition and the question of the Chief of Staff and notice how often and how bitterly the reference to the recommendation of Gen. Wood bubbled up to the lips of certain gentlemen, and to one of the conferees—yes, the brains of the conferees—how often there bubbled to his lips words of resentment over the recommendation of Gen. Wood about the proposed abolition of this magnificent Army post, "leaving fifteen hundred to two thousand square miles of this country absolutely unprotected," they would see then what was sticking in the gentleman's craw. He tries to take the position that this proposition with regard to the Chief of Staff was forced upon him. Well, read what he had to say about it and see how zealously and how quickly he always flew to the defense whenever anything occurred in the debate in reference to it.

Speaking at one time this conferee said:

> We have had for some years as the two ranking major generals of the Army men who came from the Medical Corps—able men, both of them, but without extended service in the line.

By the way, these two major generals are Wood and Ainsworth, and the latter, while he may have had no experience in the line, seems to have had sufficient experience to point the way to the reorganization of the Army, including a method of disqualifying the other major general for an office which he himself coveted and hoped to obtain when section 6 of the House bill, consolidating his own office, that of The Adjutant General, with the offices of Inspector General and Chief of Staff, was framed. Both the ambition and the plan of consolidation have gone glimmering, but after hope is dead revenge not only lives but thrives upon the ashes of our dreams.

Section 6 of the House bill, abolishing two establishments in the War Department, was swept out, and in its stead appears a little conference scheme to disqualify the present Chief of Staff from again holding his office. This and nothing more.

The conferee said:

> We have had for some years as the two ranking major generals of the Army men who came from the Medical Corps—able men, both of them, but without extended service in the line. We might have a few months hence another man from the Medical Corps, or we might have a Paymaster General selected as Chief of Staff. When it was submitted on the part of the House side and argued it seemed to be that putting myself in the place, or putting any other man in the place, a civilian Secretary of War, who had to take up all these Army matters, would want to have as his adviser a man acquainted with the duties, performances, and responsibilities of the line of the Army, for it is the line of the Army that does the fighting.

It would appear to be useless to reiterate that the Army conferees did not find the advice of officers of the line necessary, and it is more than suspected that their advice came from a former distinguished officer of the staff who never smelled powder.

Again the conferee said:

> It did not seem to me to be an unreasonable restriction that hereafter in appointing new Chiefs of Staff they should have been of the line, so as to be able to give the Secretary of War the information of which he might be most in need. As I said before, the staff officers surround the Secretary of War—close at hand in the big building. It is an easy matter for him to get information from them, but take, for instance, the very able medical officer who now stands at the head of the Medical Department. If a new Chief of Staff was to be appointed, would it be, could it be, as good an appointment as it would be to take some able officer from the line? There are plenty of such line officers.

There are plenty of such line officers, says the conferee, and I have already pointed out who these able line officers are, including the one who was jumped 862 numbers and who is now apparently to be legislated the rest of the way up.

When it was objected by a most distinguished member of another body that—

> This provision excludes Gen. Funston, who was a distinguished volunteer officer of great gallantry in the War with Spain and also in the Philippines. He never served 10 years as a commissioned officer of the line under the rank of brigadier general—

The conferee replied:

> That is true; but that Senator and no other Senator can exceed me in admiration of Gen. Funston. Gen. Funston does not know the line of the Army, however, as do some other officers.

As the late lamented Bill Barlow, the sagebrush philosopher of Rawlins, Wyo., used to say:

> Just let this sorter sink into your soul.

In the same paragraph the conferee remarked:

> I should be very glad to introduce and very glad to follow up a resolution, if Gen. Funston was desired as Chief of Staff by the President, to make an exception in his case.

So, in the opinion of the conferee, Gen. Funston may merit an exception, even though he does not know the line of the Army as do some other officers, and this exception the conferee would be very glad to father, but no such expression can be found with reference to Gen. Wood, also, like Funston, a distinguished soldier in Cuba and the Philippines, and who would already have the benefit of four years' experience in the office itself.

It may be interjected here that all of the proponents of the provision in question lay great stress on the fact that this special qualification imposed upon the Chief of Staff applies only in time of peace, and that in time of war or threatened war the President is given a free hand in the selection of Chief of Staff, the logic of which proposition is that in time of peace, when the duties of the office are largely routine, the President can not be depended upon to make a proper selection, but in time of war, when the honor and preservation of the Nation may be at stake, the President is to be intrusted without limitation with this important function. I do not know but what such military logic as this cleanses its authors of all suspicion of guilt of having acted under military advice.

Another exceedingly distinguished Member of the other body said that the conferees of that body—> have made a loyal fight for the conference report, including this provision which they did not propose, but to which they have yielded—thereby bearing testimony to the good faith with which said conferees accepted this bitter dose in consideration, of course, be it always borne in mind, of the elimination of the paragraph in the House bill which provided that no part of the appropriation for Army posts should be expended for permanent improvements at any of the 25 Army posts named in the paragraph, including Fort D. A. Russell, and the insertion in lieu thereof of a commission consisting of three retired Army officers named in the substitute, upon whose recommendations Fort D. A. Russell and other of these posts were greatly improved, and a fourth commissioner, also a retired Army officer, who has been a pronounced partisan of Fort D. A. Russell and who is now the representative and lobbyist of the Du Pont powder interests.

I asked the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] some questions about this commission, the provisions of which the gentleman claims he wrote himself, as well as the other idea in reference to the Chief of Staff, and I think I commented upon how singular it was that one of the conferees should have been so completely advantaged in the selections made. The gentleman has admitted that he did not know at the time the conference report was agreed upon that the men named had all recommended this particular post. But they not only did that, they made specific recommendations with regard to the post, and this post is the senegambian in the woodpile over which this whole trouble about Gen. Wood arises, and I will prove it. This board upon November 11, 1901, was ordered to consider and report upon the location and distribution of the military posts, and so forth, and to make recommendations in detail as to which of the existing posts should be retained or abandoned, and of those retained which, if any, should be enlarged and to what extent. That is what the board had to do. Among those detailed to the board were Maj. Gen. Samuel B. M. Young, Maj. Gen. Arthur McArthur, and Brig. Gen. George M. Randall. I understand that two of those three men are now retired officers——

Mr. PRINCE. All three.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. All three. They are what we call in other lines of business "has-beens," who have been selected to determine upon the plan of reorganization and management of a live Army for live men. Now, after mature deliberation, the report says, they made certain recommendations. What were they? They recommended Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., as headquarters, with 12 companies of Infantry and 1 battery of Field Artillery. That to begin with. Read over on page 577, the next page, and you will find they made a supplemental recommendation that provision be made at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., for 2 batteries of Field Artillery in addition to the then Infantry garrison of 12 companies at that post. Read down below that about six lines and you will find the following:

NOTE.—Shall provision be made at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., for a third battery of Field Artillery?

Well, I should say yes. Now, it is the only complete brigade post in the United States, having one regiment of Field Artillery, one regiment of Infantry, one regiment of Cavalry, one company Signal Corps, one company Hospital Corps, one company Engineers. No other Army post in the United States boasts such a garrison or such equipment as a military plant or approaches in cost the Army post at Fort D. A. Russell.

When Gen. Wood appeared before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, of which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] is chairman, on June 26, 1911, he was asked the following question:

What advantages, in your judgment, does it (Fort D. A. Russell) possess for building up such a plant or institution as is there now, costing practically $5,000,000 up to this time?

To which Gen. Wood replied:

It has a good, healthy climate.

At the same hearing the attention of Gen. Wood was called to an article published in the Army and Navy Journal under date of March 25, 1911, commenting adversely upon the fact that 115 hours were required to entrain the troops at Fort D. A. Russell at the time of the mobilization of the Army on the Mexican frontier, in March, 1911, and in response to the request of the committee the War Department furnished the following:

It must not be understood that Gen. Wood came of his own motion before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department to volunteer information about this or any other Army post. He was called, as were other Army officers, to be examined by the committee with a view to reductions and economies generally in the War Department. He was specifically asked for information, practically all of which was matter of record, and which he was required to furnish to the committee, just as in the case of the table showing the time required to entrain at the various Army posts for the mobilization on the Mexican frontier.

It may be said, further, in view of the accusations that I have been trying to tear down Fort D. A. Russell, that these quotations from the testimony of Gen. Wood are given only for the purpose of showing the temerity of the Chief of Staff in furnishing any information or making any statement not of the most favorable character to the military post which is to be the monument of a long and powerful public career, and to throw further light upon the motive of this legislation.

Furthermore, the hearings before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department will show in several places that I had in mind no idea that Fort D. A. Russell should be abandoned. Indeed, I said to Gen. Wood at the hearing before the committee on June 26, 1911, and I quote, that—

The object of my questions is not to lead up to the proposition that a post that has been built up at great expense is to be reduced because some other place was torn down, but the committee, in endeavoring to determine what policy has governed the War Department in passing on these matters, has found it of interest to contrast the differing treatment of Fort Logan and Fort Russell.

Statements from me appear elsewhere in the hearings, which I have not now the time to look up, disclaiming in the strongest terms any idea on my part that Fort D. A. Russell was to be abandoned. I did, however, and do now, point out and emphasize the fact that while Fort D. A. Russell, with its lack of advantages, has been advanced to the finest and most complete Army post, and a brigade Army post at that, in the United States, the Army post at Fort Logan, near Denver, has been reduced from a regimental to a recruiting station, although it is the consensus of opinion in the Army, from the Chief of Staff down to the men in the ranks, that Fort Logan, more completely than any other post in the entire Rocky Mountain region, meets every requirement going properly to determine the location of a military post. It has been my conviction, and I have not hesitated to say, that Fort Logan, with its obviously superior advantages from every standpoint, was a standing menace to its near-by neighbor, D. A. Russell, scarcely more than a hundred miles distant across the Plains. I have yet to find the person in ths Army or out of it, in office or out of it, who has failed to draw the same conclusion as to the cause of the widely differing fortunes of these two neighboring Army posts.

I am in favor of fair play in the matter of Army posts and I am in favor of fair play in the matter of Army officers, and that is my principal interest in this controversy. There are substantial reasons, even if they are not particularly creditable, why Fort D. A. Russell should not be abandoned. One of these is that the Government has expended nearly a half million dollars to build up a water system there, and this expenditure, as well as the millions that have gone into buildings, will be a total loss in the event the Government withdraws. At Fort Logan the Government got a sufficient supply of water for $22,000, and it got this supply in the shape of adjudicated and decreed water rights, which may be sold at any time for what they cost, and which are constantly increasing in value.

It is entirely different with Fort D. A. Russell. In 1884, and long prior thereto, Fort D. A. Russell had drawn its water supply from Crow Creek. It had built a dam across Crow Creek, had run a ditch, and had a sufficient distributing system to supply the needs of the post such as they then were. That right, in its origin, in its perpetual continuance, in its development into a legal and valuable water right, was not dependent on the city of Cheyenne or anybody else. So far as the record discloses, up to this time the Government had done all that any owner or user of water in the irrigated regions is called upon to do in order to acquire title to water.

At this time—that is, on December 2, 1884—the Government, through the officials at Fort D. A. Russell, entered into an agreement with the town of Cheyenne, of which town the principal conferee was then an official, by which agreement the Government conveyed to the town of Cheyenne its rights in and to the waters of Crow Creek, including the right to build and maintain a dam or reservoir, to construct a ditch or pipe line leading from the point of diversion on Crow Creek at which the Government had been for many years diverting its water supply, and to run this ditch or pipe line across the Government reservation. The Government further granted lands to the city of Cheyenne for the dam and reservoir site. The water right conveyed, it is true, was not an adjudicated decree, but the Government had, by diversion and use, established a claim to the water which was indefeasible, and to which it could at any subsequent time, if its right was ever questioned, go into court and secure to itself forever by decree a title to the water, which would be at this time a very valuable property right. In so far as they could, the officers at Fort D. A. Russell who entered into this agreement with the city of Cheyenne surrendered and gave over to the city of Cheyenne the Government's water rights. I do not take the position that they could effectuate any such waiver or abandonment or alienation of the Government's rights, but what I mean to say is that in so far as they could, and apparently without any realization of what the result of their action was, they sought to do that which, if done by a private individual, would have resulted in the complete divestiture of the Government's water rights established in the way that water rights are established under the irrigation laws, to wit, by appropriation and beneficial use.

Now, notwithstanding the agreement of the city of Cheyenne, in consideration of the Government's conveyance to it of the rights mentioned, to furnish the Army post with a sufficient water supply, there was such failure to furnish sufficient water that in 1902 Gen. Frederick Funston, then brigadier general commanding the Department of the Colorado, with headquarters at Denver, wrote The Adjutant General United States Army, under date of August 25, 1902, that it was evident that the city of Cheyenne had "grossly and persistently violated the terms of the agreement made with the commanding officer of Fort D. A. Russell in 1884," and recommended the suspension of contemplated improvements. This was followed on October 4, 1902, by a recommendation to The Adjutant General from Gen. George B. Davis, Judge Advocate General, that unless the city of Cheyenne furnished the necessary water and entered into another contract specifically binding itself to furnish the United States the necessary water for irrigation purposes, in addition to other purposes, the agreement of 1884 be annulled on the ground of failure of the city to perform its agreement, and that the city's pipe line across the Government reservation be removed.

Through the influence of the conferee this threatening situation was eventually smoothed out, but one can not help speculating whether the action of the doughty commander of the Department of the Colorado has not something to do with the opinion of the conferee that said officer "does not know the line of the Army as do some other officers."

On November 30, 1908, the Government entered into another contract with the city of Cheyenne, whereby, in consideration of the sum of $400,000 appropriated by the Government to build reservoirs to impound a water supply for the city of Cheyenne and Fort D. A. Russell, the said city of Cheyenne agrees in substance to furnish the Army post with water, provided there is any. This is what the agreement legally amounts to, and no more. The Government may abandon Fort D. A. Russell, but it must leave its water investment behind. I can not see that the Government has acquired anything in its dealings with the city of Cheyenne in the way of tangible assets or alienable values, such as it has at Fort Logan. Apparently all that it has acquired is the right to stay in. The Government seems to be in the condition of the man who takes out assessment insurance—he will never get any paid-up values, and he is obliged to stay in the game always. That seems to be the situation of the Government at Fort D. A. Russell in its dealings with the city of Cheyenne.

The Government has paid in nearly half a million dollars there, and I have not yet been able to put my finger on anything that it could sell—certainly not anything it could dispose of in the way of a legal water right. It appears to me that if the Government were to pull out of Fort D. A. Russell tomorrow, under its agreement with the city of Cheyenne it would have to leave everything there that it has invested, and would not have anything it would have the right to require the city of Cheyenne to pay for or that it could sell to anybody else.

It must be admitted, however, that this is a more prudent arrangement than that made by the State of Colorado when it presented the Federal Government with an unconditional deed to a section of land, which is now very valuable, as a site for the Fort Logan Army post. However, I can not undertake to go further into the affairs of these two posts. I have gone into them only for the purpose of contrasting their treatment as compared with their deserts and of exhibiting the true structure, as I see it, of the product of the conference on the Army appropriation bill.

The conference report itself teems with these evidences. On page 45 of the House bill it was provided that no part of the appropriation should be expended for permanent improvements at any of the 25 named Army posts, including Fort D. A. Russell. In the Senate this proviso was stricken out. The conferees agreed to the action of the Senate with an amendment making an appropriation for the purchase of additional lands for Fort D. A. Russell. Such an astounding outcome of the conference not only stamps with utter failure the effort of the House conferees to get anything out of the conference, but goes a long ways toward fixing the authorship of the entire product of the conference upon the Senate conferees and upon the agency through which the Senate conferees worked. The House conferees started out to strike down 25 Army posts in the interest of economy, and they came back bringing with them an appropriation for one of these posts. They came back dangling the scalp lock of the Chief of Staff. They came back with a commission of eight members to pass upon the question of Army posts, a majority of whom are certain to make an influenced report.

Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I hope gentlemen will vote down the conference report and let it go back and knock these provisions out of it. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], a member of the committee.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, this conference report ought to be voted down. This is not a question of politics. The welfare of the Army should never degenerate into a political question. The proposition that no Chief of Staff should be appointed who has not served 10 years as a line officer, to my mind, is exceedingly vicious legislation. Great military heroes, great military leaders, great military geniuses are found during wars. It is battle that brings to the surface the ability of a military leader, and the wars of this country have always brought from the volunteer ranks of the Army men of splendid military ability. Under the provisions of this conference report, if it be enacted into law, these leaders could never be appointed Chief of Staff. Even if we developed a military genius under this legislation, we would deny him the honor of being appointed Chief of Staff in times of peace. In the history of military affairs the world over we find superior leaders developed in the course of one or two campaigns. Napoleon was discovered in the course of two or three years while serving in Italy. Hannibal—going back to ancient times—developed his wonderful leadership in the course of a very few years. Alexander the Great was only 31 years old at his death. In our own country, if this provision of law had been in effect, such leaders as Washington, Andrew Jackson, William Henry Harrison, Alexander McComb, Winfield Scott, John C. Frémont, Phil H. Sheridan, George B. McClellan, J. B. McPherson, G. K. Warren, George G. Meade, George A. Custer, Nelson A. Miles, O. O. Howard, and a host of others could never have been appointed Chief of Staff. Under this provision all officers of the Engineers, including Col. Goethals, would be barred—and the Engineers are the honor men of the Military Academy. Gen. Robert E. Lee was an Engineer officer. I apprehend that this House does not propose to forever bar the door to any man who is some future war may achieve military distinction and prevent him from holding the position of Chief of Staff. It is an important position. The Chief of Staff represents the fighting force of the Army—the line of the Army. We have other Staff Corps leaders, but they represent the administrative branches of the Army; they do not represent the fighting branch of the Army. The Chief of Staff represents the fighting force. He is also the adviser of the President and the Secretary of War. This legislation, if it be enacted, will forever preclude men like Wood and Funston, who won their spurs in action, from being appointed to that position. And, in my opinion, Gen. Wood has been a most efficient Chief of Staff. Gen. Funston is an exceedingly efficient officer. Among the leaders of the Confederate Army who could never have reached this appointment I may mention Gens. Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Beauregard, Forrest, and Joe Wheeler. None of them had the 10 years' experience in the line that this provision requires. Gen. U. S. Grant only had 11 years' line service, and Gen. W. T. Sherman only a little over 10. I believe this provision of the conference report to be vicious in principle, and that provision alone should be sufficient to defeat the report.

There is another provision in the report which is also indefensible. It is that item which provides for the appointment of a commission to pass upon the question of the continuation or abandonment of certain Army posts. The conference report names five officers who are to constitute a part of that commission, and among the five generals named in the report as members of this commission are Gens. Young, MacArthur, and Randall. I have nothing to say about their ability. I do not question their integrity. They are all men of splendid standing. They have all had long military experience, but, as a matter of fact, these generals had this question of Army posts before them about 10 years ago. They have passed upon this very matter. In 1901 they were appointed members of a board to look into the matter of the establishment of four great maneuvering camps. They went beyond their duties in that regard, and passed upon the question of Army posts generally. They presented a very voluminous report, of 856 pages, I believe, with numerous maps. On page 7 of their report they say: "After mature deliberation, taking into consideration the proper disposition of the different arms of the service, based upon strategic, sanitary, and economical considerations, the board recommends the following in regard to the permanent posts, not including the Seacoast Artillery." And then they designate the Army posts which they think ought to be permanently maintained, those that ought to be temporarily maintained, and recommend the establishment of seven new posts and four camp sites. In that list we find these posts that were named in the House bill, and most of which the War Department had recommended to be abolished: Fort Apache, Boise Barracks, Fort Brady, Fort Clark, Fort Wright, Fort Lincoln, Fort Logan H. Roots, Fort McIntosh, Fort McKenzie, Madison Barracks, Fort Meade, Fort Niagara, Fort Ontario, Fort Wayne, Fort Harrison, Fort Yellowstone, Fort Ethan Allen, Plattsburg Barracks, Fort Robinson, Fort Missoula, Fort Logan, Fort Douglas, and Fort D. A. Russell.

Practically every one of the military posts that were recommended for abolishment by the War Department are recommended in this report made by the board of officers of which Gens. S. B. M. Young, Arthur MacArthur, and George M. Randall were members, for either temporary or permanent occupation—most of them for permanent occupation.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman wants to be entirely accurate?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows, as to five posts named, there never has been any recommendation for abandonment?

Mr. KAHN. I did not say there was any recommendation for abandonment at the hands of the board of officers to which I have referred.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman said that a few minutes ago, as I understood him, and said it now.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman evidently misunderstood me. I say they recommended in this report those that should be permanently established and those that should be temporarily established, and therefore they are in the nature of jurymen who have already passed upon the case. [Applause.] That is the point I desire to emphasize.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman would leave the case to other jurymen who have already passed upon them otherwise, would he?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think it would be necessary. I think an entirely unprejudiced board could be appointed that would pass upon the merits of this question, a board that would have the confidence of the House and the country. These gentlemen, as I have said before, are very capable military leaders, but they have passed upon this question once, and if I were in their position I would decline to serve upon that board under the circumstances. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other provisions in this conference report that are also objectionable. They have been referred to, or will be referred to, by other Members. But the two provisions to which I have made special reference are, in my judgment, so vicious that they ought to insure the defeat of the entire report. I hope the House will send the bill back to the Senate for further conference.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is a disappointed man and bitter in his disappointment. At the beginning of this Congress he became obsessed with the idea that it was his duty in life to do what he could to injure and bring into ill repute the largest, the finest, and the best located Army post in the United States, Fort D. A. Russell, and he set about doing it systematically. The outcome was that when the military bill passed the House of Representatives it carried with it a provision that threatened the abandonment of practically all the military positions in the entire intermountain region in which the gentleman from Colorado lives, and especially and particularly Fort Logan, in the gentleman's own State. In other words, the gentleman has consumed a large portion of his time and energy—I regret he is not here—during this entire session of Congress, with the result of bringing about a feeling in the committee, and largely in the House, that the Army ought to be withdrawn from the interior of the country and concentrated on the coasts.

If the gentleman from Colorado, representing an intermountain State, can find anything in the recommendation for the abandonment of the splendid military posts in the West, including the one in his own State—that brings him satisfaction, that pleases him—he is entitled to whatever consolation he can get out of that condition of affairs, for he is, as he boasts, largely responsible for it.

The gentleman's ire is roused to the point of unjustifiable reflections on members of his own party and Members of the Senate because the provisions in the Army bill which prevented the use of the appropriation on Fort Logan in his own State and on most of the posts in adjacent mountain States has been stricken out, and the question of the retention or abandonment of Army posts which he was instrumental in raising has been referred to a fair and impartial board of qualified men. He seems to be so intent on injuring the posts in a neighboring State that he is willing and anxious to jeopardize the institutions of his own State if by so doing he can inflict injury elsewhere; and he fairly raves because of a provision which will probably result in saving the fine post near the capital city of his State from abandonment. As for Fort D. A. Russell, it is so thoroughly established and so favorably situated that it is safe from the attacks of jealousy and the flings of misrepresentation. Other posts in the same region are more in danger from the misguided activity of the gentleman from Colorado.

The gentleman is not complimentary to the House conferees of his own party. He would have you to believe that the House conferees on his side on the Army appropriation bill were led around by the nose by one of the confereees in the Senate, and that everything that was done was for the purpose of serving the interests of one conferee in another body, and that the House conferees so little understood the situation that they allowed themselves to be trapped by this astute gentleman, who, he insisted, was working only in his own interest and that of those he represents, without regard to the interests of the country at large. I shall not impose upon the House to reply in kind to the intemperate language or baseless insinuation of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] with reference to my colleague in the Senate. He needs no defense from me or anyone; his faithful and unselfish work for his State and the entire West, his potent and helpful labors and influence in legislation for the benefit of the entire country will be gratefully remembered long after his detractors are forgotten. Nor is it necessary for me to defend that gallant soldier who is now upholding the honor of the flag in the Philippines while the gentleman from Colorado stands here in defense of parade soldiers and carpet knights who never were within the range of a hostile bullet, and who, whatever their qualifications may be, owe their elevation not to tried and proven worth but almost entirely to the friendship and favor of men high in position and power to advance them.

It ill becomes anyone to cast slurs upon men who have been advanced because in the heat and fury of battle they have proved themselves to be good soldiers; to cast aspersions on a man who during his entire military career has been on the fighting line, and who never at any time has been a carpet knight, seeking the favors of those high in power and in influence.

Gentlemen are disturbed because there have been great military leaders in the past, and may be in the future, who, by a provision brought in by the conferees, would not become eligible as chiefs of staff; and by the same token few of them would ever seek the position. Great commanders lead armies in the field. Think of all the armies of Europe as far back as your memories run, and, with the exception of Von Moltke, there has not been a fighting general in the history of modern Europe who has been chief of staff.

The Chief of Staff of the American Army organization should be a man thoroughly familiar with the country; thoroughly conversant with active warfare; a soldier of the battle line; a man in whose mind's eye, reflected by his own experience, are the men in the trenches, the men on the firing line, the men on the march and in the bivouac, the men making the charge; those who are standing the hard usage of actual warfare.

A man of such experience stands beside the Secretary of War and the President, to consult and advise with them with regard to campaigns and as to the armies in the field: The men who have the genius to command armies are not necessarily Chiefs of Staff. They do not ordinarily seek such an appointment, and no better piece of legislation was ever offered or presented to the House than this one, which provides that the man who shall be Chief of Staff, planning campaigns, adviser of the Secretary of War, adviser of the President, shall be a man who, through experience, has learned what the soldier in the field encounters, and knows by his own experience how to plan and advise in the matters of active warfare. It is high time that it is understood that the road to the post of honor and responsibility is in the field among the men, on the firing line, and in active discharge of a soldier's hard duty, rather than in the line of soft snaps and easy stations under the eye and within reach of the ear of political power and influence.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am very sorry, but my time is very limited.

Now, in regard to these Army posts, there has been a good deal said here that is half true, and some things said that are not true at all, although gentlemen do not realize it, of course, with regard to the appointment of this board.

For years there has been more or less agitation of the question as to how we should house the Army, as to whether we should concentrate it in a few great centers, the slums of the great cities, or should keep our Army scattered throughout the country in posts of medium size, with here and there a brigade post. Sometimes the War Department has taken one view and sometimes another. At this very time it stands halting between two opinions. The very post that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is so disturbed about, because he has not been able to wipe it off the map, and on account of which he is willing to asperse the character of men in the Army and in legislative life, is commended most highly in a report from the Secretary of War, which, I assume, had the approval of Gen. Wood. The present agitation was, as I have stated, largely started by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] and a few others in the House. No one blames anyone in the Army for it, and, furthermore, no one in the Army has suggested, as some gentlemen seem to think, that these larger western posts should be abandoned forthwith. Many millions of dollars would have to be spent building new quarters before that could be done. Nevertheless, anyone, anywhere, who seriously suggests the abandonment of these posts at any time is sadly lacking in judgment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the Commissioner from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. QUEZON. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to interfere with matters which are chiefly the concern of the American people, as is this Army appropriation bill; but I feel it my duty to say a few words here in favor of those Army officers who will be affected by this bill, if it should become a law, and who are serving in the Philippine Constabulary and in the Bureau of Insular Affairs.

I have never believed that the Filipino people needed the assistance of any outsider to run their own affairs. On the contrary, I maintain that they are wholly capable of governing themselves. At the same time I hold that whenever an American official is detailed, though without the consent or advice of the Filipino people, to serve in the Philippine Government, or in the Federal Government in connection with the Philippines, if that official makes a record as a faithful, honest, industrious, and intelligent servant of my people, he is entitled to their applause and even their gratitude. I am standing here now to make a public declaration of my great pleasure at the services rendered to the Philippines by Col. McIntyre and Maj. Sheldon, of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and Gen. Bandholtz, and Cols. Harbord, Rivers, Hersey, and Bennet of the constabulary, every one of whom, I am sorry to say, will be relieved from their respective positions, if this bill should become law, at a great loss to the islands. In so far as they have been able to do so, consistently with the régime that they are under, these officers have done what they could in the interest of my people, and they have been, without any question, a credit to the American Government.

The Philippines are controlled by the War Department through the Bureau of Insular Affairs. Unfortunately your system of government is such that Secretaries of War, who are supposed to be the men responsible for the government of the Philippines, are appointed without proper regard to their qualifications to deal with the Philippine Islands and their people. A man may be appointed for that high office, having in his hands the well-being of 8,000,000 men, without knowing anything about them. There must be, therefore, in the Bureau of Insular Affairs some official who has devoted a great deal of his time to the study of Philippine questions and is thereby competent to advise the Secretary of War. Col. McIntyre has been detailed in the Bureau of Insular Affairs ever since this bureau was organized and, I dare say, he has been the directing mind of that bureau. Immediately after the passage of this bill he will have to go back to his regiment, and with him Maj. Sheldon, so that there will be left no man in said bureau who knows much about the islands. How, then, will the War Department handle Philippine matters after this bill shall become law?

With regard to the constabulary I have received this cablegram from the Governor General of the Philippines:

MANILA, P. I., June 1, 1912.

Bill now pending in Congress requiring return to their respective organizations officers detailed for the Philippine Government if passed would remove the five highest officers in the Philippine Constabulary; impossible to properly fill their places in even one year; their duties here are of character definitely requiring large experience in military lines and understanding knowledge of Filipino people and affairs not possible to acquire except through long contact and, unlike ordinary civil details here, is not loss of touch with Army practice or professional progress. They have essentially military command, and responsibilities are greater than present grades in the Army. Hard to conceive services of these officers as commanders companies or battalions could approximate in value to the United States Government services they are rendering. Military efficiency of the Philippines Constabulary is an essential factor to the continued reduction of the Federal expenses of the Army establishment here. Commissioners present earnestly agree with this view. Mr. Osmena joins in recommendation; leave no stone unturned to avoid what would be little less than a calamity by reason disorganization of a Government unit of prime importance which constabulary is by reason of its mobility and present popularity lending it to constructive and emergency work which has been and is of inestimable value. As far as known to me, no officer here affected by this has expressed any opinion or solicited opposition to the proposed legislation.

GILBERT,
Acting Governor General of the Philippine Islands.

In the five minutes allotted to me I can add very little to what this cablegram says, but I shall ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD so as to enable me to say something more about the Philippine constabulary and the Army officers at the head of this organization who will be affected by the provisions of this bill.

The constabulary is the insular organization responsible for the maintenance of public order throughout the archipelago, and in the performance of this duty it works in cooperation with the municipal and provincial officials, who are native Filipinos. A brilliant Army officer, fully equipped with the necessary qualities to keep the organization in good shape, as an armed body, may fail as a chief of the constabulary for lack of that personal knowledge that he has to have of the Filipino people to cooperate with them. It is absolutely necessary, for an Army officer to succeed in the constabulary, that he shall have been in contact for some years with the Filipino people and he must be, moreover, in sympathy with them.

The success of the Army officers who are now the chief and assistant chiefs of the constabulary is due to the fact that these men are not only very brilliant Army officers, but that they have had a lengthy experience in the Philippines. The chief of the constabulary, Gen. Bandholtz, is the only American who was ever elected by popular vote as a provincial governor in the islands. He was, before entering the constabulary, the governor of the Province of Tayabas, and his success as such had a great deal to do with his promotion in the constabulary. Col. Harbord has been in the islands for many years and his ability and very courteous manner in treating the Filipinos has made him friends all over the archipelago.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] five minutes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I am not unmindful of the difficulties of arriving at a conclusion on a conference report. These difficulties are especially enhanced when a supply bill is loaded down with legislation as this one is, legislation of the greatest importance. It is a vicious practice at best to incorporate legislation in appropriation bills, and this bill shows its extreme viciousness, because there is very much legislation in it that, if it were considered on its merits alone, would never be considered favorably by either House of Congress.

Another illustration will possibly illustrate this condition even better than in the cases just cited. The officers in the Army of the Potomac in active command at the close of the Civil War were the following, and I append their records:

George G. Meade (class of 1835): Seminole War, 1835 and 1836. Resigned October 26, 1836. Reappointed May 19, 1842. War with Mexico. Topographical engineers. Had not served with troops over two years before Civil War.

Governeur K. Warren (class of 1850): Topographical engineers. Chief Engineer of Army, 1863 to 1864. Commanded Fifth Corps March, 1864, to April, 1865.

Andrew A. Humphreys (class of 1831): Artillery, 1831 to 1836. Out of service, 1836 to 1838. Topographical engineers. Second Corps, November, 1864, to January, 1865.

John G. Parke (class of 1849): Topographical engineers until 1861. Commanded Ninth Army Corps from August, 1864, to April, 1865.

Horatio G. Wright (class of 1841): Topographical engineers and Engineer Corps until Civil War. Commanded Sixth Corps from May 9, 1864, until the end of the war.

Ranald S. Mackenzie (class of 1862): Engineer Corps until June 10, 1864. Commanded Cavalry division in campaign of 1865. Appointed colonel Forty-first Infantry in 1867 in permanent establishment. Said by Grant to have been most promising young officer in the service.

These men came to their positions after years of war, and served in the positions indicated immediately under the eye of Grant and with great credit to themselves, yet not one of them could have served as Chief of Staff if this proposed law had been on the statute books.

Von Moltke is the most conspicuous example of what a chief of staff should be. He served with the German general staff for 50 years before the French war and performed his entire service with it, covering a period of some 72 years; he, with the junior members of the staff, developed the plans on which the French war was successfully fought.

I do not agree with my military friend from Wyoming as to the duties of a general staff.

The Adjutant General is properly the military adviser of the President. Neither the General Staff nor the Chief of Staff should perform this duty. It is not in any way an administrative body. Its duty is to collect information, study such information, eliminating such as is worthless, and puting in useful form the part which is valuable. It should make and work out war plans for different localities and under different conditions. It should consider methods or organization and should coordinate the work of the different corps of the Army. In a word, it should do the planning and thinking for the Army under all conditions which may arise and at whatever time they may arise. The capacity of commanding bodies of troops in minor capacities may be of service, but a chief of staff should be an organizer—a broad-gauge, all-around man—the ablest man obtainable for such a position, without regard to his corps or his service. It does not follow because a man is a good handler of troops that he would in any degree be suitable for the position of Chief of Staff. The greatest thinker on naval affairs and the greatest living analyzer of naval actions and the results which have come from them is Admiral Mahan, of our Navy, and yet Admiral Mahan was not conspicuous for his success as a divisional officer or as a commander of a ship.

In fact, considering his great service in other ways, the results which he obtained in these positions were disappointing.

The work of a general staff can not be developed in a month or year, or perhaps not in a decade. It took 30 or 40 years to bring the work of the German general staff up to an efficiency which enabled it to work out its problems effectively. Other European countries are having exactly the same experience and difficulties. To require service with troops in a minor capacity should be treated as among the least of the qualifications required in a chief of staff. The President and, through him, the Secretary of War—and the same reasoning will apply to the Secretary of the Navy—should not be limited in the selection of officers required for special service. It is simply impossible for Congress to make general rules which will not embarrass and possibly cripple the service under such conditions, and while it is true that in some cases favoritism may result from this latitude, it is infinitely better to take this chance than to impose such restrictions as are provided in this legislation.

The Corps of Engineers of the Army are the first men in their classes and are, generally speaking, the most competent men for the kind of service which the General Staff requires. To indicate the injustice, not only to individuals but to the service, which might have arisen if such a provision had been in force in 1865 as is now proposed, it is only necessary to say that it would have disqualified Gens. Sheridan, McClellan, McPherson, and Schofield, of the Northern Army, and Gens. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Beauregard, D. H. Hill, Forrest, Joe Wheeler, Fitzhugh Lee, J. E. B. Stuart, and every one of the competent officers who graduated from the Military Academy after 1853 or who came into the service as civilians during the Civil War and attained the rank of brigadier general during that service. To bring the possibilities down to the present day, it disqualifies Gens. Wood, Funston, Crozier, Goethals, and many other officers not so prominently in the public eye but who have demonstrated their peculiar fitness for such service. To be sure, it will be said that Col. Goethals has not a rank which would entitle him to this preferment; but I assume that when the canal is completed Congress will take such action that there will be no difficulty about Col. Goethals being given sufficient rank to entitle him to any position of this character. Not only would it exclude these officers, but all other officers in the Ordnance Corps and in the Corps of Engineers. As a general proposition this legislation is extremely unwise, and yet there is a personal element connected with it which can not be overlooked. One can not possibly divorce from his mind the presumption that this legislation is aimed at one man, and that man the present extremely efficient Chief of Staff of the Army.

I have not the time or the inclination to indulge in the justified praise which might be accorded to Gen. Wood's service. The gentleman from Wisconsin has already gone into that in detail. It is sufficient to say that he has demonstrated that he can perform any kind of public service with distinction, and, while it is sometimes said in a slurring way that he is a doctor, it is equally true that he is a capable handler of men; that he was a great administrator in Cuba, and that he has held no position in the Army in which his work has not met the hearty approval of those who are competent to pass judgment on it. There is sometimes in the military service a prejudice felt between those who have graduated from the Military Academy and those who have come into the service through other channels, but if any Member of this House will take the trouble to investigate, by inquiring of graduates of the Military Academy, he will find a general opinion that Gen. Wood is the fittest man in the Army to occupy the position which he now holds, and not only from a technical standpoint is this true, but his service has been so great that the general public has a considerable knowledge of it, and those citizens who have become familiar with it are unstinted in their praise. I quote from an editorial in the New York Herald entitled "Send Wood to Cuba."

SEND WOOD TO CUBA.

Why would it not be a good idea for the Washington administration, instead of sending a brigade of the United States Army to Cuba to supplement the marines and cause actual intervention, to first try the expedient of sending Maj. Gen. Leonard E. Wood, Chief of Staff of the Army, as a peace emissary?

Gen. Wood, during the period of preparation for Cuban independence, was governor of the territory on the south side of the eastern end of the island in which the revolt of the negroes is now spreading. Later he was governor general of the entire island.

He has the confidence of the Cubans. He is a man of talent, quick perception, ready tact, and accurate and extensive knowledge of conditions and character, all of which will count for much. He is regarded as the only man who could accomplish a peaceful settlement without intervention and bloodshed.

The suggestion comes to the Herald from an American now in Cuba. We believe it is too valuable to be passed by, and pass it to President Taft.

I have myself received from citizens of Massachusetts, who have interests of one kind or another in Cuba, letters urging that Gen. Wood be given charge of whatever service our military forces may have to perform in Cuba during the present troubles, basing that request on the service which he performed there when he was governor of Santiago and of the island itself. Undoubtedly there must be some giving as well as taking in a conference, but it is bad enough in a military bill to be obliged to support a proposition which will cripple the Panama Canal service, the Division of Militia Affairs, the Insular Bureau, the Philippine Constabulary, the instructors' service in Army schools, including the War College, and foreign fieldwork and service without being compelled to cripple the General Staff, which has really just commenced the great work which there is for it to do and without embarrassing the Commander in Chief in the performance of his proper constitutional functions, to say nothing of enacting legislation of such a personal character that it throws a stigma around one of the most distinguished Army officers in active service. I hope the President, if this conference is approved by the House, will exercise his constitutional right and veto this bill. If he does, he will, in my judgment, be performing a great public service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that Congress ought to wreak personal animosity against a particular individual by general legislation, nor do I believe that in the trades which can affect personal or State interests in a conference we ought to bring out of conference and enact into legislation provisions affecting personal interests instead of the general good. I question the advisability of appointing on a commission to examine into Army posts any retired officer of the Army who is in the private pay and employ of a company engaged in selling supplies to the Army. [Applause.]

Gen. Humphrey was a man and is a man of high character, very popular while he was Quartermaster General in the Army, and very popular now. It is not his fault that he is named, but he ought not to have been named on a commission to determine in regard to Army posts while he is in the employ of the Du Pont Powder Co. [Applause.]

It is abhorrent to every sense of justice to place any officer or any man in such a position. Working for a company, selling supplies to the Army, whose vote might determine whether an Army post shall be retained in a conflict among Army officers—it seems to me wholly improper that he should be named, whoever suggested it. I regret that an occasion has arisen where the House even is called upon to vote whether we shall endeavor to cast odium upon the present Chief of Staff, Gen. Wood. Why, Mr. Speaker, his reputation is beyond and above our assaults. [Applause.] We cast odium upon ourselves by endeavoring to declare that we wreak personal and private envy and revenge upon this Army officer who has proved his worth both in the field and in his position as Chief of Staff. Enjoying the confidence as he has of two Presidents, enjoying the confidence as he does of the people of the United States, it ought to be beneath us to throw mud at him in this day. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman from Virginia use some of his time?

Mr. HAY. I do not want to use any more of my time until the gentleman gets through.

Mr. PRINCE. Has the gentleman only one more speech?

Mr. HAY. That is all.

Mr. PRINCE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five and a half minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, this bill clearly demonstrates to the country the inadvisability of legislation on an appropriation bill. It is filled with bargains; they are on the counter. It is logrolling. The Army is not considered. The question is how to obtain certain advantages here and there. If this bill in its present form should be approved by the President, we will be besieged within six months with requests for legislation to undo this ill-digested and unworthy thing which we are seeking to force through here by the reason of dividing out favors in one form or another. That is the way it is. See what we do. We affect the Philippine service, as the commissioner from the Philippine Islands has said; we affect the Signal Corps; we affect the Panama Canal; we affect the Ordnance Department—all are affected by joker legislation that is put in here to wipe out and fix up in some way something to placate different interests. It is personal legislation for certain Army officers and spiteful legislation against other Army officers. A board has been selected. When I practiced law I used to like to get jurors who were in my favor, but I rarely dared go into court and select a majority of the jury when I knew in advance how they were going to decide a case. Can this Congress stand before the American people as a Congress in favor of economy when they are keeping up these boards? There is no partisan politics in it. The Democratic side of the House put in a provision to abandon certain Army posts. You wanted to do it. The conferees have betrayed the House. I say it with knowledge. They have betrayed the wish of the House. They have thrown down the question of abandoning Army posts. They have consented to it, and distinguished men on the floor have stood and urged that a point of order, which in my judgment was well taken, should not be sustained, to save Fort D. A. Russell, one of the forts that you moved, practically unanimously, to abandon. Here is a great side whirling around, betraying its own action, reversing itself for what? Because of deals made in the bill to carry out certain propositions to do certain things that will eventually come back to plague the men who vote for such legislation as this.

I say it affects the Army. Here is a provision as to a Chief of Staff that he must serve with troops for 10 years. Everyone of us select young men to go to West Point. We say to these young men, be a star graduate, do the best you can, stand at the head of the Army, get distinction, get into the Engineer Corps, and then we turn around and in Congress say to those whom we have encouraged to be at the head of the Army, to be star graduates, "You shall never be Chief of Staff in the Army." What consistency in public men! The brightest, the brainiest, the best young men who are selected in the country go to West Point and stand at the head of their classes, the honor graduates, are to be denied the right to ever be Chief of Staff, because they can not serve in the line with troops for 10 years. Is that fair? What is the legislation for? Apparently to punish one man, as I have read in the newspapers. What has he done to merit it? He was nominated as brigadier general and confirmed by the Senate under the Constitution. He was named as major general and confirmed as major general by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Since then what has he done to make him ineligible? What act has he committed since he was made major general in the Army to make him ineligible? There has broken out a feud between the staff and the line, a most regrettable thing. We thought when we created the Chief of Staff that we had taken the Army out of politics, but it is now in politics to the regret of the Army. Think of the long line of distinguished soldiers who have been in the Army. Years ago I heard a distinguished gentleman, now an ex-Member, who sits here to-day, Gen. Black, recount that long list of distinguished names, beginning with Washington and going down through Jackson, Scott, Taylor, Grant, Lee, Sherman, and Sheridan, and as he said at that time it is an unbroken line of distinguished men. The great Army of the Republic with its history is to be thrown into politics and kicked back and forth as a shuttlecock to carry out personal spite to take up the cudgels of Army officers. [Applause on the Republican side.] I hope the House of Representatives will vote down this conference report, for it is an insult to the best interests of the Army, of the people, and of the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has stated that the conferees betrayed the House, a statement that is absolutely untrue and without foundation in fact. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and other gentlemen whose names I do not now recall, have stated that this legislation pertaining to the qualifications of the Chief of Staff is had because of personal spite. I deny the allegation. There was no personal spite about it. It was done because those who had charge of this legislation believed that it was right and proper that the man who is going to serve as Chief of Staff should have these qualifications. I do not want to be personal about this matter at all. I did not want to refer to Gen. Wood or his qualifications as Chief of Staff or as an officer of the Army or as a soldier who, it is alleged, has performed great deeds of valor.

The friends of Gen. Wood have dragged his name into this debate, but there are two sides to this question as to the capacity and fitness and ability of Gen. Wood. There are two sides to the question as to whether or not he is such a brave soldier in the face of the enemy, and upon that I have here before me a letter of an Army officer who served in the campaign about which the gentleman from Wisconsin talked in the Indian country which states that Gen. Wood never saw a hostile Indian nor was within 5 miles of a hostile bullet. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman himself believe that falsehood? Does not the gentleman know that Gen. Lawton praised Leonard Wood for his surpassing bravery and declared in a letter that in all the Civil War he never saw such an example of courage?

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that is the statement that is made.

Mr. COOPER. Did not your own Gen. Joe Wheeler praise him for his gallantry in battle?

Mr. HAY. Oh, the gentleman has already stated that. The statement I am referring to was made by Maj. H. C. Benson, Fifth Cavalry, in the Army and Navy Journal, on the 3d day of July, 1909. Now, I do not know where else Gen. Wood has been in the face of any danger, and as to his capacity and the great service which he has rendered to this country as the Chief of Staff or in any other capacity, it is not so very long ago when there was in the Senate of the United States a determined fight made against Gen. Wood for promotion to major general by one of the most distinguished Republicans that this country has ever produced, and evidence was shown in that investigation and affidavits were produced from men of the highest character that they would not believe Gen. Wood on oath. It was shown in that investigation that Gen. Wood had been guilty of many things while he was Governor General of Cuba which were not to his credit as a soldier or man; and I ask leave to extend my remarks now, so that I may place in the RECORD the reports made by Senators Hanna and Scott on that occasion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

The reports are as follows:

(Confidential. Jan. 18, 1907, made public.)

[Executive No. 2, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.]

NOMINATION OF LEONARD WOOD.

Mr. Scott, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following review of the evidence submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate in the hearing on the nomination of Brig. Gen. Leonard Wood, United States Army, to be a major general, and especially on two of the charges as a reason for his vote against the confirmation of said nomination:

As a member of the Military Committee of this body it has fallen to my lot to assist in the conduct of the investigation bearing upon the question of whether or not the nomination in this case should be confirmed or rejected. I think it can without doubt be said that your committee has spent much more time and labored more assiduously in endeavoring to arrive at what is proper to be done in the premises than is usual in a case of confirmation, certainly far more so than in any case that has come within my knowledge during my membership in this body. The case is universally recognized as one of more than passing interest. The appointment is that of a major general in the Army, a life position, and of a young man whom it is conceded must in a few years, if confirmed, succeed to the head of the Army of the United States; and by reason of his age, will in that capacity, in the natural course of events, occupy that important and exalted station for well-nigh a quarter of a century. That such confirmation should be made with due deliberation, and that the person to be confirmed should be highly qualified and in every way worthy and above suspicion goes without saying.

An error made at this time can not hereafter be remedied. The people of the United States await our action with the greatest interest, and in what we do the character, good name, and orderly discipline of the Army is involved. If the constitutional requirement that appointments of this character should be made only with the advice and consent of the Senate means anything, and if this body, at any time and under any circumstances, purposes to make effective this part of the organic law by giving or withholding its consent to a nomination of the Executive upon the real merits of the case, and thereby to assume its legitimate responsibility for the country's appointments, such power should be exercised in this case, to the end that the Senate may, in truth and in fact, exercise its prerogative and advise with the President as to the propriety of this appointment, and to give or withhold its assent only according to what is right and proper. To do this is no less a duty to the President than it is to the Army and to the people themselves.

The question of the confirmation of the appointment of an officer of this rank in the Army of the United States is always one of unusual delicacy, and one as to which the Army of the United States particularly has the right to rely upon this body to do more than exercise a mere perfunctory act. The President, the appointive power, is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and appointments in either of these services come from him to those under him with peculiar force and power, in that what he says to those under him is to them the law, and even complaint or criticism on their part are really acts of insubordination; hence to us alone this great body of Americans who make up the Army of the United States, loyal, true, and faithful as they have ever proven themselves to be, can look for justice and right should the Executive, their Commander in Chief, either innocently or capriciously make a mistake affecting their welfare. These officers and men, thus cut off from the right of complaint, have a peculiar claim to be heard here in the matter of appointments affecting them, and it becomes and behooves every Senator to exercise his very best judgment and do his utmost to throw every possible safeguard around this class of appointments, particularly when the act of confirmation has the far-reaching effect that this one will have.

This case is unique in that, first, it involves the very objectionable feature in Army appointments of unduly promoting one officer over another, and second, of having an appointee, whose fitness from a military standpoint, is challenged, and third, whose character and good name are attacked. All of these are very serious, the first two charges, if sustained, tending to do injustice to others and seriously affecting the efficiency of the Army, and the last, because it is almost unprecedented in the annals of the country. The question of efficiency and the lack of undue partiality should be made clear, and unless the other charges are disproved, beyond all suspicion even, confirmation should not be seriously considered. Upon consideration of these questions, your committee has spent days of labor; and a large number of witnesses, among them men of the highest character and standing from different parts of the country, have been examined, bearing upon the specific and general objections to this appointee, the evidence covering nearly 900 pages. And for one I wish to say that, however much I dislike to withhold my assent to an Executive appointment, I can not think of giving the same in this instance, and I am loath to believe that many Members of this body would do so if they could carefully review this great mass of evidence, which has been submitted for their consideration, and see and hear the witnesses, as I have done.

I shall not pretend in the limited review that I shall make to even refer to many of the objections brought against the confirmation in this case. I shall, however, refer specifically to one or two of the charges, touching, first, however, upon the propriety of this appointment, irrespective of the particular objections mentioned affecting the conduct and character of the appointee.

Ought Gen. Wood to be confirmed as a major general in justice to the other officers of the Army, and is there any reason existing in this case why this partiality and preferential mark of distinction should be conferred upon him, when it may lead, as it inevitably will, if he lives, to his reaching and holding for years the position of "General of the Army of the United States"? I concede that officers of the rank in question now are not necessarily subject to rotation in the matter of appointments, but they should be unless there is some good reason to the contrary. Civil-service rules even require this, however little respect I may have for that incubus that has engrafted itself upon the administration of our Government, the effect of which is that one set of men earn the honors and emoluments of office and another set receive them.

If the principles of civil service are to prevail anywhere they undoubtedly should in Army appointments. Distinguished services, of course, the exemplification of extraordinary capacity in the art of war, should serve to warrant a departure from the regular mode of making appointments. Had we a Grant, a Sherman, or a Sheridan, or a Lee, a Longstreet, or a Wheeler, men who upon many fields and who during a series of years had demonstrated, by results, their extraordinary skill and capacity as warriors, no voice would be heard to raise a question; but who is Gen. Wood, and what has he done to entitle him to this great preferment, seriously affecting the rights and legitimate ambitions of so many others who have spent their lives in the service of the country and fought its battles on many a bloody battlefield?

In the year of grace 1896 Gen. Wood had attained to the distinction of a surgeon in the Army, and while he doubtless showed capacity in his profession it was simply in that capacity, unless it be that his friends claim for him great services as an officer in the administration of civil affairs, that he can pretend to make any other claim, for surely thus far, however gallant and efficient he might be in battle, opportunity has not yet been afforded him to demonstrate his capacity in this respect. Until it has thus been shown, I earnestly insist that this body ought not to give its consent to the proposed favoritism that has been shown to him. It is true that he was, heretofore, appointed a brigadier general and confirmed as such, due, many believe, to the tender affection and kindness of heart of the beloved McKinley, whose life was so ruthlessly taken; appointed more especially because of the need of one who was supposed to possess qualities for civil government in a territory where the dangers arising from disease were greater than those likely to arise from war.

We are told that Augustus boasted that he found Rome of brick and left it of marble, and so, perchance, may Gen. Wood lay claim to the boast that he found Cuba a den of filth and disease and left it with a sewerage system. This, however, goes to his credit as a physician and as a sanitary officer, and does not, in any sense, show his fitness to command a body of troops. The evidence in this case quite clearly establishes the fact that he was appointed because of his supposed capacity as a civil governor, and there is much to throw doubt upon the question of whether even his appointment as brigadier general was not regretted by the President, and no one will believe that Mr. McKinley would ever have thought of promoting him to a major generalship, certainly not in the light of the present developments.

In support of my criticism of Gen. Wood's appointment to this position I shall refer to the evidence of a witness taken in this investigation, upon whom all will rely, because of his great distinction as a soldier and high character as a man: Maj. Gen. James H. Wilson, now a retired Army officer of the United States, made such by special act of Congress at the end of the trouble in China, having faithfully served his country in the Civil War, in the Spanish War, and in China. At page 523 of the record, relative to this appointment and its effect upon the Army, Gen. Wilson said:

"Q. How many major generals have we now? I have forgotten for the moment.

"Senator ALGER. Six, are there not?

"Senator TELLER. Under this present law.

"The CLERK OF THE COMMITTEE. Six major generals, one lieutenant general——

"Senator TELLER. And how many brigadier generals?

"The CLERK OF THE COMMITTEE. Fifteen brigadier generals.

"The CHAIRMAN. Six of the line.

"Senator TELLER. I do not know but what I would like to ask Gen. Wilson what he thinks of Congress making major generals. I have not much sympathy with that myself, except in extreme cases.

"By Senator TELLER:

"Q. What do you think will be the effect, General, if we have six major generals, if some man who has had neither military experience nor military education shall be put at the head of the six, where he may ultimately command the American Army?—A. According to all precedent, I should regard it as being very detrimental to the public service.

"Q. Are you able to state, General, as to what the feeling is in the Army about the promotion of Gen. Wood?—A. Yes; somewhat fully.

"Q. As to whether it is approved or disapproved.—A. I was on the active list at the time the promotion was made. I have heard the matter discussed in military circles since, both in this country and abroad, and I have never yet seen the man, either of the Medical Corps or of the noncombatant staff, or of the staff or the line of the Army who approved it.

"The CHAIRMAN. You refer to his promotion to the rank of brigadier general?

"The WITNESS. I refer to his promotion to the rank of a general officer—both brigadier and major general."

At page 531, as to why possibly President McKinley appointed Gen. Wood, this same witness says:

"By Senator HANNA:

"Q. When the selection of Gen. Wood was made and he was put over you, it was for civilian duty, and not military?—A. I suppose so.

"Q. There was nothing military in it?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Nothing requiring military genius or military operations?—A. No, sir.

"Q. He was simply in a civic position, and not military?—A. And I was the only major general of the United States Army who had ever commanded in a reconstructed, seceded State. But I never resented it that they had taken a fellow absolutely inexperienced and put him over my head, and it did not make a particle of difference in the performance of my duty, not a particle.

"Senator HANNA. No."

And at page 528 whether he did not probably live to regret the appointment.

"By Senator FORAKER:

"Q. It has always been the custom, has it not, that promotion up to the rank of colonel should go by seniority, and after that, in regard to general officers, the President was free to select whom he saw fit?—A. Certainly. I told the President of the United States when I was ordered up from Cuba for a conference with him and he had me here my views very fully as to the condition of affairs in Cuba, after which he then said to me: 'General, you have shown me how to solve these questions. We have had no policy heretofore. I am under great obligations to you.'

"Senator ALGER. What date was that?

"The WITNESS. That was in February or March of 1900; either February or March. I remarked after he said this to me that he had taken another man to do the job. He stepped over to the mantelpiece with all the deliberation that characterizes him, took his cigar out of his mouth most suavely and pleasantly, and puffed the smoke into the air and said, 'But, General, I did not expect that thrust from you just now.' I replied, 'There is no thrust in that. * * *'"

At page 530 of this same witness's evidence, after having explained that such a thing as this had never been done but twice before in the history of the country, and not at all except during the Civil War, in one of which instances it proved very disastrous, the witness gives a statement of Gen. Wood's fighting experience, as follows:

"By Senator FORAKER:

"Q. Have you given the President the benefit of your opinion?—A. No, sir; I have not. I have not had any conversation with the President on this. Shortly after the occupation of the island of Cuba I had a letter from Col. Roosevelt, as he was then, saying that he had been to the Secretary of War and had urged my appointment as the proper man to command in the island of Cuba. He said he had gone to the President and urged him to make the appointment. The President, for reasons which Col. Roosevelt regarded as being definitive, and which you, Senator Foraker, confirmed, declined to make the appointment. Later I had another interview with Mr. Roosevelt, after he had been elected Vice President of the United States, at his house at Sagamore Hill.

"The CHAIRMAN. After he became President?

"The WITNESS. After he became Vice President, but before he became President. He began then in rather extravagant terms of praise of Gen. Wood, whereupon I said to him, 'Gov. Roosevelt, I think you are perhaps mistaken about that. If I am correctly informed, Gen. Wood never was under fire in his life until the Spanish War began, either in the Geronimo campaign or at any other time. In the Spanish War he was never in but one battle, and that at Las Guasimas, where but for his rescue and support by the colored troops he would have been badly handled.' 'Oh, yes,' said Mr. Roosevelt, 'he was, at San Juan.' To which I replied, 'I beg your pardon, he was not. You know that he was in the rear looking for ammunition.' 'Yes,' said he, 'but do not tell anybody.'

"Now, why he did not want me to tell anybody I do not know. I did not pursue the subject any further, and that is the last word that has ever passed between us with reference to Gen. Wood."

This statement of Gen. Wilson shows clearly the natural resentment that will exist if this great wrong is perpetrated upon the Army of the United States by the confirmation of Gen. Wood, and its injurious effect must necessarily be very great, affecting as it does the ambitions of scores of young men, which must be nipped in the bud because of the youth of Gen. Wood and the long time that he may remain at the head of the Army.

The specific charges against Gen. Wood are six in number, though in the great mass of evidence taken there are many things which tend to reflect discredit upon him.

"I charge Gen. Wood with issuing orders and instructions to the courts in the postal cases, in violation of article 387 of the Penal Code of Cuba, and in a manner prejudicial to the rights and interests of those under trial.

"The CHAIRMAN. That is one charge, is it?

"Mr. RATHBONE. Yes. Then I charge him with authorizing the use of ex parte depositions in the postal cases, a proceeding which is contrary to the law and the principles of law, and in this case contrary to instructions given by the Secretary of War.

"Senator SCOTT. In other words, that would be disobedience of orders that you charge him with there?

"Mr. RATHBONE. That is what I charge him with. And I charge him with accepting gifts from an organization commonly known as Jai Alia, to which he had granted a 10 years' exclusive concession, the same being a violation of the so-called Foraker law, which prohibited the granting of franchises or concessions during the occupation of the island by the American authorities. The acceptance of these gifts constitutes a violation of article 397 of the Penal Code of Cuba.

"I also charge him with complicity with another Army officer in the preparation and publication of an article reflecting discreditably upon their ranking officer, in violation of an accepted canon of military service, and constituting an offense commonly known as 'conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.'

"I charge him with directing and causing the auditor of Cuba, by a military order, to violate the law in the treatment of accounts.

"I charge him with utilizing the services of an ex-convict, with whom he was in intimate personal association, in an effort to displace his superior officer, and by such means to secure to himself the vacancy thus created.

"Incidental to these there are many minor charges."

I shall not attempt to take up these charges seriatim or pretend to refer to all the unfavorable things said against him in this evidence, and it is only as to the third and fourth charges that I shall comment. I shall leave the remaining charges for others to review; further than in passing I wish to say, in respect to the first and second specifications bearing upon the trial of Maj. Estes G. Rathbone, that while I am not a lawyer and therefore as well prepared to express my views as others of this body, the so-called trial of Maj. Rathbone strikes a layman as a travesty on justice, and that a special military rule should have been directed by our Government to correct so grievous a wrong is but natural; and in justice to the accused, Maj. Rathbone, it should be said that although special provision was made whereby this wrong could be corrected, and the Cuban Government, before the rehearing thereunder was had, had passed a general act of amnesty relieving him from all liability, still as quick as he could come to this country he was found knocking at the door of this body asking that his every transaction brought in question at the so-called trial, while officially connected with the Government, should be fully investigated, to the end that full justice might be done.

This has not yet been accorded him, and until it is the finger of scorn of no American citizen should ever be pointed to him. He justly had the consideration of the committee shown him in fully hearing his every accusation against Gen. Wood, one of the parties claimed by him to be largely instrumental in bringing about the result of the so-called trial; and I desire also to say in this connection that the action of Gen. Wood, relative to this trial, also strikes me, a layman, as being such that it unfits him to deal with men either from a civilian or military standpoint. His conduct in fixing a bond in this case first at $25,000 and then at $100,000 looks like cruelty and it would be so considered in this country, whether it were the act of the Chief Justice of the United States or simply a country magistrate. Few American citizens would have found themselves so fortunately circumstanced as Maj. Rathbone, to have had a personal friend who happened to be a distinguished leader of this body, and able to reach the ear of the Secretary of War and the President, to check the outcome of such a performance, and the pecuniary ability to personally raise $25,000 or $100,000 in cash, as had been whimsically or maliciously demanded.

Referring to the conduct of Gen. Wood to his superior officer, Gen. Brooke, and his disloyalty to him, as covered by the fourth specification above referred to, I submit that no impartial person can review the evidence in this matter carefully without reaching the conclusion that that charge is fully established. Indeed, it is much more clearly proved than is ordinarily possible to establish any fact as to which there is a possibility of doubt. The evidence to support this accusation comes from witnesses of the highest repute, whose statements can not be whistled down the wind or made light of, I may say brushed aside, as is sought to be done here, without even an examination of Gen. Wood himself. Indeed, the circumstances so strongly support the charge and exclude the theory of innocence of Gen. Wood that if he were being tried by a jury of his countrymen for a crime upon like evidence and under like circumstances his conviction would result beyond question.

Gen. Brooke's evidence quite conclusively establishes the lack of loyalty and support of Gen. Wood while under his command, and the evidence tending to show the complicity of Gen. Wood in the attack upon Gen. Brooke's administration, as written by Maj. Runcie and published in the North American Review, is clear. To understand fully this accusation, the relation of the parties one to the other should be borne in mind. Maj. Gen. Brooke was the military governor of the island of Cuba. Gen. Wood was a subordinate officer commanding the district of Santiago. Maj. Runcie was a retired United States Army officer, a close and devoted friend of Gen. Wood, who was in Cuba at Gen. Wood's invitation in an unofficial, confidential capacity, for the purpose of giving him such advice as he was enabled to, lived with the general, and was a personal legal adviser to him.

While these relations existed a certain Mr. R. S. Baker, correspondent of a New York journal, came to Cuba with letters of commendation to Gen. Wood, the object of his visit being to write up a personal sketch of Gen. Wood, and he was introduced by Gen. Wood to his personal friend, Maj. Runcie, and the object of his visit explained. Whereupon he was invited to dine with the two, the general and the major. And it is admitted by all three that he was referred to Runcie as a person entirely familiar with affairs there and who could be relied on to give a correct statement of existing conditions, the point of difference between them being, so far as the article in controversy is concerned, that Runcie claims that it was understood that, as he was thoroughly familiar with Cuban matters, he should write an unvarnished account of affairs, the effect of which was to reflect discredit upon the Brooke administration, which article was to be furnished by him to Baker, to be by the latter published as his own communication, whereas Baker claims that Gen. Wood's knowledge was confined to the personal article which he came to Santiago to secure, and that the other article was one to be written by Runcie himself and to be sent to him for publication in New York, and of which Gen. Wood had no knowledge, so far as he knew.

During Baker's visit of several weeks in Santiago he and Runcie saw much of each other, as he also did of Gen. Wood, but not so frequently. And at the interview between the three it appears that the Cuban situation and status of things in Cuba was fully discussed and free criticism made of Gen. Brooke, though there is no claim that there was anything said at the time of a purpose to remove him. The witness, Baker, who was friendly to Gen. Wood and called in his behalf, at pages 427–428 of the record goes quite fully into the conversation that took place between them and shows at least that there was a free adverse criticism of the administration of Gen. Brooke made to him, a newspaper man.

"By Senator QUARLES:

"Q. I wish to ask just one question. The article that you had in mind to write was not one, as I understand it, that concerned Gen. Wood personally, but Gen. Wood as connected with the administration of Cuba. Is that right?—A. No, sir. I went down there to get an article about Gen. Wood personally, in his work.

"Q. His work where?—A. In Santiago.

"Q. Precisely.—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Then the information that you were after and the subject that was discussed was the relation of Gen. Wood and his administration to affairs in Cuba?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And in that discussion he frankly gave you his divergence of opinion from the administration?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. On certain points?—A. Yes, sir; he told me about those things.

"Q. Yes.—A. But I did not think—I went to Habana and met Gen. Brooke, and I talked over——

"Q. I am not impugning your motives.—A. Yes.

"Q. I am only trying to get at the scope of that discussion there.—A. We talked very fully about all these things.

"Q. Yes; and he did not hesitate to criticize the administration of affairs there where he thought they were wrong?—A. No, sir.

"Senator QUARLES. That is all.

"By Senator HANNA:

"Q. Did he personally criticize Gen. Brooke?—A. Do you mean criticize Gen. Brooke personally?

"Q. No, no; his administration.—A. Yes, sir; he said things were not going right there, he thought, in all respects. He was frank in his disagreement with——

"Q. Certain things? What things?—A. I can not mention——

"Q. I want to know whether he was criticizing the administration of Gen. Brooke, and specified his administration of affairs which he considered against the interests of the island.—A. He thought, I think, that Gen. Brooke did not understand conditions in Santiago, probably, thoroughly. Gen. Brooke had never been down there.

"Q. Was it simply Santiago he was confining his criticism to—the administration in Santiago?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Not in general terms the administration of Gen. Brooke in the island of Cuba?—A. No, sir.

"Q. That was not mentioned, but only Santiago?—A. That is my remembrance of it.

"Q. What was the nature of his criticism?—A. He thought Gen. Brooke had not been at Santiago and did not know the conditions—conditions were quite different at that end of the island—and that some of the appointments he had made there were not good appointments; that he had not taken the pains to make a thorough investigation before making his appointments.

"Q. How was Gen. Brooke to know the conditions there?—A. At Santiago?

"Q. Yes.—A. I do not know, unless he was to go down there.

"Q. He had a representative there, a subordinate officer in charge. If things were not as they should be at Santiago, was it not Gen. Wood's business to so notify the commanding general, the governor general?—A. I suppose it was.

"Q. Had he done so?—A. I do not know.

"Q. Did he say anything about it?—A. I do not recollect that he said anything about that.

By Senator QUARLES:

"Q. Let me recall to you another thing and see whether that was discussed, whether or not Gen. Brooke was criticized for an order he had made requiring the transfer of customs receipts from Santiago to Habana?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That was one of the points of criticism?—A. Yes, sir; Gen. Wood thought the money should be expended and was needed there at Santiago.

By Senator HANNA:

"Q. Had he said so to Gen. Brooke?—A. I do not remember; only I know that was one of the points.

"Q. Did he give any reasons why he thought Gen. Brooke's administration was faulty, because he would not let him spend the money instead of directing it himself?—A. I do not remember about that.

"Q. Now, you say that during this interview at the dinner Gen. Wood did suggest that Maj. Runcie should prepare an article?—A. No, sir.

"Q. He did not?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Did he at any time?—A. No, sir; not in my presence.

"Q. I thought you said he told you that Maj. Runcie was the one to consult on certain topics of the judiciary, and so forth.—A. To give me information for my article."

And a further examination of the same witness, at pages 432 and 433, shows at least that the purpose of the article on the part of Maj. Runcie was to attack Gen. Brooke and his administration, which he supposed would inure to the benefit of Gen. Wood, and that he, Baker, while specially careful not to hurt Gen. Wood, shared in this feeling, but that he, in his own article, wrote nothing of the kind.

"By Senator TELLER:

"Q. Mr. Baker, you said that you had a number of conversations with Maj. Runcie. How long were you there?—A. I was there from about October 22 to November 5.

"Q. How often did you see the Major?—A. See Maj. Runcie?

"Q. Yes.—A. I can not tell you. It must have been quite a number of times.

"Q. Every day?—A. I could not say every day; no, sir.

"Q. What were you discussing? You say 'the various discussions you had.' Was it always about this article?—A. Oh, no, sir.

"Q. What was it about?—A. I was getting information about conditions there in Cuba, and about Gen. Wood personally, and Maj. Runcie had been there a long time and he knew affairs very thoroughly and he could tell me a great deal.

"Q. What was Maj. Runcie's attitude toward the then administration?—A. He opposed it.

"Q. He was a friend of Gen. Wood's particularly?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was his purpose in writing the article? What did you gather, now, from what he said to you as to what was his purpose?—A. I gathered that he wanted to relieve his mind.

"Q. That was it?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He could have done that by addressing you, could he not?—A. He wanted to have the article published.

"Q. Is it not a fact—you are a newspaper man—that he wanted the public to understand what the situation was in Cuba from his standpoint?—A. From Maj. Runcie's standpoint?

"Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And you knew that was the article to be sent?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You were in sympathy with that, were you not?—A. Yes, sir; I was, more or less.

"Q. Did you discuss with him what would be the effect of it on the public, what might be the result in Cuba?—A. No, sir.

"Q. You think not?—A. No, sir; I do not recall discussing that subject at all.

"Q. You do not recall any conversation as to what its influence might be on Gen. Wood's future?—A. No, sir. If we had discussed it, surely I should not have printed it.

"Q. Should not have what?—A. I should not have had anything to do with printing it.

"Q. Why?—A. Because I did not want to injure Gen. Wood in any way.

"Q. I am not speaking of that. Was it not the idea that it would help Gen. Wood to have it understood that Gen. Brooke was inefficient?—A. I suppose that was the object of Maj. Runcie's article; but I wrote nothing of the kind.

"Q. You did not write it; but you knew that he was going to write it, you say?—A. Yes, sir; what——

"Q. I want to call your attention to this letter.—A. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Let him finish his answer.

"The WITNESS. That was all I wanted to say."

Upon Baker's return to New York, in the early part of November, he printed a lengthy and most fulsome account of Gen. Wood and an account of his administration of affairs in Santiago, painted in glowing colors. In the latter part of that month the Runcie article, attacking the administration of Gen. Brooke, above referred to, was duly forwarded to Baker, and by him, after some delay, caused to be published in the North American Review for the month of February, 1900, over the signature of Maj. Runcie, bitterly attacking Gen. Brooke and his administration. Some months before, however, Gen. Brooke had been actually removed or relieved from the position of military governor of Cuba and Gen. Wood put in his place. Baker and Runcie are at utter variance with each other as to the manner in which this article was to be published, but the significant and important feature is the emphasis placed by Runcie on the 26th of November, when he wrote Baker of the importance of having the letter then printed where it would be read, and concluding—

"Things here have recently been even worse than when you were here, but there seems to be a dawning light around Washington, and it may be the beginning of a better day for Wood, as well as Cuba."

This letter was written by Runcie, the boon companion of Wood, living with him at the time, and in the light of all the circumstances, with Gen. Wood's well-known attitude with reference to the Brooke administration and his relation to these two parties, the conclusion is irresistible that he knew what was being done and of its purpose and intent. Runcie swears positively that he did; Baker, though favorable to Wood, says he has no knowledge on the subject, and Gen. Wood, though formally denying, has not favored us with his evidence.

Moreover, the circumstances all tend to support the Runcie statement rather than that of Baker in reference to this publication. The article to have come from Runcie would have been directly traceable to Wood, and exceedingly detrimental to him rather than beneficial, which neither Runcie nor Baker would have thought of doing at the time, and had Runcie dreamed that such an article would have been published in his name it can not be conceived that he would have been guilty of such folly as not to have hurriedly withdrawn and recalled such communication after its purpose and effect had been anticipated by the displacing of Gen. Brooke and the appointment of Gen. Wood to the coveted position. And the conduct of Gen. Wood, upon receipt of the letter showing that the War Department had taken notice of the article in question and communicated to him on the subject, as testified to by Horatio S. Reubens, an attorney and a friend of Gen. Wood at the time, and by him for a while placed in charge of the prosecution of Maj. Rathbone, shows his complicity in this transaction.

"Q. That is, you lived in the same house?—A. With Maj. Runcie?

"Q. Yes.—A. And the relations of Gen. Wood and Maj. Runcie and myself were all at that time very cordial. That was at the beginning of his governorship in Habana. Therefore I do not know anything personally about the circumstances at the time of the writing. I do know this, that some time in February of that year, I think it was 1900, Maj. Runcie returned to the house with the magazine article printed in the North American Review, and remarked to me that the fat was in the fire; that this had been published, and——

"By the CHAIRMAN:

"Q. Will you complete your answer?—A. That this had been published, and undoubtedly there would be considerable difficulty arise because of its publication. I heard nothing more about the matter until one Sunday morning I was in my room when one of my Spanish servants came in and announced Gen. Wood, and I sent word that I was still in pajamas, and he came right in. Gen. Wood showed me a communication from the Secretary of War inclosing a copy of a communication of Maj. Gen. Brooke, in which Gen. Brooke complained of the publication of the article, and, as I remember it, asked that the War Department take cognizance of the matter, and action. Gen. Wood seemed disturbed about it, and after I had read it through he said, 'Well, I want to see Runcie about this matter.' He said, 'This places me in a very awkward position.' I thereupon left him in my room and went to wake up Maj. Runcie.

"By Senator QUARLES:

"Q. Is that all that the General said at that time?—A. Yes, sir; at that time. But before I left Gen. Wood I said, 'I am sure Maj. Runcie will not take any position which will be embarrassing to you.' I went to see Runcie and woke him up and told him this communication had arrived, and the gist of it; and I also told him that I had told Gen. Wood that I did not believe that he, Runcie, would place Gen. Wood in any awkward position in the matter, because Wood had a position to lose and Runcie did not, and I thought Wood did not want to take any action in the matter which would hurt him, Runcie; and I therefore suggested that he, Runcie, had better see the best way out of the difficulty. Runcie accompanied me into my room, and the three, Gen. Wood, Maj. Runcie, and I, discussed the matter.

"Q. Was anyone else present?—A. No one was present then. Maj. Runcie said: 'Wood, I have never occupied an official position here, although I have had an official title. You know that I have never received one cent for my services and never intended to receive one cent for my services, so that it is not a question of putting me out, and I want it understood between us here that if any question arises as to my connection with you or the military government, you can say that from this on all official connection has ceased. I would not announce it, if I were you, but you are absolutely free to make this statement if occasion should arise to make it seem useful to you.'

"In other words, Maj. Runcie took the position that it would make trouble in Cuba because he criticized Cuba in this article, and thinking that it would be useful to Gen. Wood to be able to say that he had no longer any connection with the military government, he relieved Gen. Wood from the embarrassment of making the suggestion. That was my idea of it in making the suggestion to Runcie. He had no position to lose, and Gen. Wood had. They discussed the question.

"Q. State what was said, if you can, Mr. Rubens.—A. I took very little part in the rest of the conference except that I heard Gen. Wood say that it was very unfortunate that this thing had been published, particularly after there was no necessity for it, and that it would look as though he (Runcie) was trying to criticize Gen. Brooke even after he had left, and that it was very unfortunate that it had been published at such a time. The remark was made, too, by Gen. Wood, that undoubtedly Gen. Brooke was very much offended, and he would have to see what answer could be made to the War Department. Then, as Gen. Wood's relations with Mr. Runcie were very much more intimate than with me, they discussed the matter in a low tone, and I withdrew to my newspaper."

During this whole time—that is, during the period that it is claimed this attack upon the Brooke administration was being inspired—it must be borne in mind that Gen. Wood was considered by his superior officer, Gen. Brooke, if not engaged in conduct of insubordination, at least was not performing his duty as a loyal soldier should to his superior commanding officer. A careful review of the evidence of Gen. Brooke, whom the partisans of Gen. Wood will concede to be the latter's equal, found in this record from pages 191 to 206, will show that this was the estimate in which this appointee was held by Gen. Brooke at this time. Surely this is not an inviting picture of one who, during the period of six years, has been elevated from the position of surgeon in the Army of the United States to that of major general, and who at no distant day will be placed at its head if this confirmation is made. Condone this conduct and the character and morale of the Army will be gone; a premium placed upon intrigue and a discount placed upon the first and highest duty of a soldier—that of loyal support and unquestioning obedience to the orders of his superior officer.

Coming to the specific charge against Gen. Wood, in reference to his conduct in the matter of concessions to the organization known as Jai Alai (which was at least in part a gambling association on a large scale) and his acceptance from its officers of a valuable present, I desire to say at least a word. The charge is that Gen. Wood gave to this association the exclusive right to maintain an establishment of its kind in the city of Habana for 10 years, and that subsequently he also authorized or approved certain rules and regulations relative to betting. Champions of Gen. Wood's cause insist that all he did, relative to the first permit, was simply to give his approval to a lease under the direction of the War Department, and, as to the latter, he only recognized a preexisting rule theretofore made by the civil governor of the Province of Habana.

Neither of these positions are well taken nor are they in accordance with the real facts. The truth is a request was made to the military governor to approve a certain lease, dated the 27th of January, 1900, granting to this organization the right of occupation of certain lands, belonging to the municipality of Habana, for the term of 10 years, the recorder of deeds having refused to admit such lease to record, as required by the law, because of its lack of approval by the military governor. The question of the legality of the proposed lease was referred by Gen. Wood to the judge advocate general, Col. W. S. Dudley, who was in charge of the civil legal division of the military government, and who had held the same place during the administration of Gen. Brooke. This officer returned the request with his disapproval, on the ground that the same was contrary to the Foraker Act, prohibiting the military government from making concessions of the character indicated. This was about February 25, 1901.

This recommendation, not suiting Gen. Wood, on February 28, 1901, it was again referred to this officer, who again returned it with a similar opinion and without giving his approval to the same. And it was referred to the same officer for the third time with the suggestion that there were certain circumstances connected with the lease which relieved it from the inhibitions of the Foraker law, and that, therefore, the objections made against it were not well taken; but the judge advocate general again refused to recommend it, adhering to his former rejections of the same, of the 25th and 28th of February, 1901. This will all be found in full on pages 498 and 499 of the record.

Then it seems (see p. 500 of the record) that Gen. Wood, not willing to act on the advice of his own judge advocate general, caused the question to be referred to the Secretary of War for his opinion. In that department it appears to have been referred to a Mr. Magoon, a law officer, who differed with the judge advocate general, and upon his advice, at the direction of the War Department, this 10-year privilege was sanctioned. This strenuous conduct on the part of Gen. Wood, it is submitted, showed an unusual interest in this institution, which, at the least, was one of doubtful propriety; in fact, it is claimed to have been only permitted at all because of the desire on the part of our representatives not to appear too strait-laced, but to afford to those benighted people, whose tastes had led them to enjoy such amusements as bull and cock fights, and performances of like description, some recreation and enjoyment.

Gen. Wood's participation in the games which this institution carried on and his subsequent action in reference to the organization will make his conduct appear even more unusual. The effort to relieve him of the effect of his approval of the betting feature of the games is also without merit, the attempt being to show that he did not give the extension, but merely acquiesced in the same. This will not do. The purpose was to secure an exclusive privilege in the island of Cuba, and the military governor was the chief source of all authority there. While it is true that Gov. Wood did not originally grant the permit, he did what was and is believed to be quite as necessary, and all that was needed of him—that is, he sanctioned the act of his subordinate officer in what he had done. In other words, he adjudged and determined that there was no doubt of the right of this gambling institution to do what it desired.

His conduct in this regard has been referred to as diplomatic, which it may have been, but it none the less relieves him of the effect and force of what he did in the premises, namely, his decision in behalf of this favored institution, and his action was final. Note the language of his communication giving the extension, found on page 773 of the record. It will be observed that he determined and decided that this company already had the rights that it was asking for. Now, remember he had the right to give or withhold the privilege; he had the right to permit if it had not existed; he also had the right to determine what was the effect of the existing conditions, and to modify or qualify the same according to his own caprice or judgment, and he, as the supreme source of authority in the island, adjudged favorably to the organization in question. In other words, no affirmative action was necessary to be had on his part further than to judicially sanction what it had already received from a subordinate, and this he did.

What more was necessary? Who could question his act? The uncertainty theretofore existing, and which made necessary the reference to him, no longer existed, and this institution, confessedly a gambling institution of large proportions, though it is called by several polite names—sometimes even the game of racket—was launched forth under its exclusive privilege of 10 years, and is to this day in full blast in that community, to the degradation and demoralization of its citizens whom the people of the United States thought they were Christianizing, and were performing other philanthropic and humanitarian offices for. This is not all. Gen. Wood otherwise showed unusual interest in this institution. It is not disputed that he was a frequent attendant at the games of the same, and perhaps in this connection it will not be amiss to copy from the evidence a brief description of the game as given by the witness, Alexis Everett Frye, a distinguished educator and superintendent of the schools of the island, who was sent to Cuba by the Secretary of War upon the commendation of President Eliot, of Harvard, and others, and was holding this position in Cuba purely from the standpoint of patriotism, and without compensation.

"By Senator HANNA:

"Q. Did you ever hear anything about the Jai Alai when you were in Habana?—A. I arrived this morning. On December 10 I visited the Jai Alai for the first time. I visited it for the purpose of seeing it.

"Q. What is your impression or your knowledge of it from that visit?—A. In entering the Jai Alai one enters into an immense barroom. On the left there is a regular banking establishment for selling the gambling tickets. You can take your chances upon any of the players. Those quiniela tickets are $1 apiece. The partidos tickets are $2 apiece. Then passing in there are men wearing the red caps, the corredores, who call out on behalf of the bank bets made in gold centenos. There are three methods of betting. The announcement of the bets was made where everybody could read it. In addition to that, there were these red-cap bets made, and I saw one man take 30 of those gold pieces, almost $150, and a number of others were standing in line waiting to receive their money. In the quiniela and partidos bets nearly $9,000 passed openly in the bets by the association, and in addition to that there were the gold bets. What they amounted to I do not know. To my mind it is the most horrible gambling institution I ever heard anything about."

J. O. La Fontisee, a newspaper editor, thus describes Gen. Wood's connection with and conduct in regard to the game:

"Q. Was Gen. Wood a patron of the game?—A. Yes, sir. He used to go there nearly every Sunday, and he used to go there and play the game. I have been out there with him.

"Q. He played the game?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. With experts?—A. He used to train with them.

"Q. They trained him?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did you know about the features of the game as to gambling?—A. It was very much a gambling game; very heavy gambling.

"Q. When you say "heavy" what do you mean?—A. They would go up as high as 100,000 centenos on a play. They would sell tickets. I never had much experience with race courses here, but they did not seem to sell tickets in the way that they do on horse races in this country. You would give them the money and they would give you a check for it, and you would call at the door after the game was over.

"Q. Did you ever hear what amounts of money would change hands at one of these games of that character?—A. Yes, sir; I have heard. The current reports were that as much as $50,000 would change hands on a single game on Sunday. That was the heavy day.

"Q. On Sunday?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was Gen. Wood there on Sunday?—A. Yes, sir; he was there. He had a box there, and he was nearly always there on Sunday.

"Q. The general impression was that Gen. Wood, being a patron of the game and very much interested in it, had something to do with the establishment of it, was it not?—A. Yes, sir. What caused us to think that was that when anything was going on and they wanted a big crowd they would have Gen. Wood as a patron for it.

"Q. He would draw the crowd?—A. Yes, sir.

"Senator HANNA. That is all I want of this witness."

Gov. Wood was an habitual attendant of this game. He especially spent his Sundays there, on which days the betting would reach as high as $50,000. Again, without stopping to criticize the propriety of the establishment of such an institution or the conduct of the head of the government who would so far forget himself as to select such a place for amusement in lieu of his Sabbath-day exercises, I wish to comment upon his conduct in accepting, under the circumstances herein recited, and shortly after the granting of the favors above referred to, a gift of a $5,000 silver service, which is admitted to have been the case. Can there be any question of the fact that Gen. Wood ought not to have been mixed up with these people at all? His conduct, to say the least, was subject to the gravest criticism. I appreciate that it is a delicate matter, but it is none the less serious, and it shows that Gen. Wood is not a man whose sense of propriety is such that he should have been placed in such a position as that of governor of the island of Cuba, much less at the head of the Army of the United States.

A $5,000 gift from persons whose very existence as an organization depended upon his will and pleasure, and who sought and received favors from him while occupying the exalted and important post of military governor of Cuba! However unpleasant it may be to reject this nomination, this body can not afford and ought not to seriously consider the question of giving its approval to any such transaction. Let it be done and it will serve as a precedent and will be an invitation for all kinds of disgraceful conduct on the part of officers of the United States who have no more sense of propriety than Gov. Wood, and it will ever lie hereafter in the mouth of this body to question the acts of impropriety and indecency on the part of any Government employee or official.

I wish to say just another word. At the conclusion of the evidence of Gen. Wilson the junior Senator from Ohio, Mr. Hanna, asked that Gen. Wood be brought before the committee of this body having this investigation in charge, to the end that he might answer the allegations and accusations made against him and relieve himself from the unjust (as his friends claim to be the case) imputations and criticisms made against his character. And quite a colloquy ensued, it being claimed by some of his champions that there was no reason for him to be heard; that nothing had been proved against him; that there was nothing for him to answer; in a word, that he was self-vindicated.

This, I submit, was to me, and must be to everyone, perfectly monstrous. When did it come about that this individual, a doctor in civil life and a bloodless soldier in battle, if he ever saw a battle, has reached the exalted position that he is unlike other people and is not to be accountable to anyone, not even to the Senate of the United States, and will not even honor it with his presence? Now, for my part, I want to say that it is due to Gen. Wood, it is due to the President of the United States, that he should not only explain, but disprove many of the statements made in the evidence now here for consideration before confirmation should be thought of. The fact that he is willing to let this investigation go on without personally meeting it like a man is in itself strong evidence, to my mind, that he is not made of material that goes to make up soldiers such as we need for our major generals and Chief of Staff.

The talk about the difficulty of his coming here is silly. It is simply evading the question. The truth is a brave and courageous man would rather resign a dozen commissions as brigadier general than allow his character to be besmirched, his conduct assailed, his motives impugned, and his integrity and veracity sought to be impeached, if by giving up the same he could come in person and disprove the accusations made against him. And it is not necessary for him to resign in order to come. Nothing said or proved against Gen. Wood indeed! Six positive and direct specifications, involving the integrity and honesty of his administration as civil governor, some of them against his character as a man and an officer, are made against him. Much evidence is introduced to sustain each of them; many witnesses, men of the highest character, great prominence, and high order of intelligence have been examined, and, at least as to some of the charges, it can not be said that they have not been sustained.

I have particularized the evidence relative to two of the charges which reflect upon his character, the specific charge in this respect being sustained, I submit, by the evidence of no less a person than Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, of the United States Army, retired. No one can read the evidence of that distinguished soldier without being impressed with the fact that he knew that when his administration was being wickedly assailed by the papers of Santiago, his subordinate, the appointee here, in command of that province, was not engaged, as he should have been, in endeavoring to stop the false clamor, but that, on the other hand, he and those in his confidence were quietly cooperating with and giving aid and comfort to his assailants.

Aside from these specific objections against Gen. Wood, much evidence has been introduced tending to reflect directly upon his character as a man by impeaching his integrity and veracity and showing his general unreliability in the matter of business transactions and in making promises in reference thereto. Two witnesses at least—each a man of prominence, one a newspaper editor and the other the prominent educator hereinbefore referred to, and neither of whom are men other than of the highest character—testify unreservedly that they would not believe Gen. Wood on oath. It is also shown that while governor of the island, as above stated, he so far forgot himself as to spend his Sundays at the gambling institution hereinbefore alluded to.

We also have it in the evidence that there was a newspaper man associated with Gen. Wood who certainly, it was clearly proven, was an ex-convict, and the evidence would go to show that he exploited everything that Gen. Wood did to the general's advantage and preferment, and that after being sent to the Philippine Islands he really tried to displace Gov. Taft and have his friend, Gen. Wood, made governor general of the Philippine Islands. Witnesses testified that they broke with Gen. Wood because of his unreliability, and they were men who had been associated with him, giving as their reason unreliability and unfair treatment. From the testimony of that gallant soldier, Gen. Brooke, it would seem that it was clearly and conclusively proven that Gen. Wood was intriguing constantly against his superior officer.

To my mind a most grievous injustice has been done in the preferment of Gen. Wood over a hundred or more old Army officers—officers who won distinction on many a bloody battlefield—battlefields where more lives were lost and more prisoners taken in one day than during the entire Spanish-American War.

To whom should these old veterans look but to the United States Senate for protection; and I ask my fellow Senators to give thought to the effect that the promotion of a surgeon in the Army to be a major general, and ultimately a lieutenant general, of the Army for many years, will have upon these brave old veterans, who have been looking forward anxiously for the time when they themselves may receive proper recognition for services faithfully and well done.

[Executive No. 3, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.]

NOMINATION OF LEONARD WOOD.

Argument of M. A. Hanna, Senator from Ohio, in opposition to the promotion of Gen. Leonard Wood, presented by Mr. Scott, together with several affidavits bearing on the nomination.

The testimony given before the committee has developed points to which no answer is attempted by Gen. Wood in the various communications submitted by him prior to his departure for the Philippines; nor can those communications be accepted as a refutation of testimony given by witnesses under the solemnity of an oath. To accept them as a controversion of sworn testimony would brand those giving such testimony as unworthy of credence. Among those who would be thus branded are men in the military and naval service of the United States. It is impossible to accept the mere statement of Gen. Wood, made prior to his departure for the Philippines, and covering only a part of the matters at issue, in preference to this sworn evidence. Some of the testimony given by these witnesses has cast serious reflection upon the veracity of Gen. Wood, and it would appear that neither he nor the Senate, which is asked to confirm his appointment, should rest content until he has been given opportunity to disprove, specifically and under oath, the damaging statements made on oath concerning his conduct.

The facts to which attention will be called would seem to make this necessary, and the honor of the Army would seem to demand it.

THE CASE OF E. G. RATHBONE.

In the matter of the complaint of E. G. Rathbone, that he was not afforded a fair and impartial trial for the offenses charged against him in Cuba, by reason of the action and interference of the military governor in the judicial processes in Cuba, a vast amount of evidence has been submitted. As parts of the record there appeared a complaint of Rathbone and the answer of Gen. Wood thereto. In many instances Gen. Wood makes no answer, except to rule that the charge is irrelevant. Setting aside these questions, there are several points of prominence and importance which present themselves.

Rathbone charges, in effect, that the direct interference of Gen. Wood, and his active participation in the processes and the course of the prosecution, bearing in mind that the military governor had executive, legislative, and judicial powers, and that he had the power of removal and appointment of all judiciary officers of Cuba, resulted in an unfair trial and to the prejudice of Rathbone.

Rathbone further charges that the most important witness against him was one Reeves, whose testimony on the trial was given without an oath, although it flatly contradicted evidence which he had previously given under oath (p. 231).

The testimony shows (p. 611) that Reeves was promised immunity by Gen. Wood, and was considered by Gen. Wood as a State's witness (p. 356), but was not declared as such to the court by Gen. Wood. As one of the accused he was permitted to give unsworn evidence on the trial. If Reeves was considered by Gen. Wood as a witness for the State, he should have been declared as such and compelled to testify under oath, as was done by Gen. Wood in the case of Corydon M. Rich (p. 760). It appears from the testimony of Fiscal Hevia that he could have been so declared without imperiling the prosecution on the theory of conspiracy (p. 365).

Gen. Wood (p. 357) cites Fiscal Hevia's opinion, which is that "Reeves was not proposed as a witness, nor was it possible (that he could be), being one of the accused." This states the cause of Rathbone's complaint precisely. Reeves was a witness for the State (p. 356), but he was not so declared by Gen. Wood to the court, which, therefore, had to consider him as one of the accused, and not as a witness, thus permitting Reeves to testify against Rathbone without the solemnity of an oath.

Gen. Wood states (p. 357): "Reeves was never promised anything." And yet he admits that he was a witness of the State, and Witness Fisher (p. 611) swears that Gen. Wood promised Reeves immunity before Rathbone's trial. Secretary ROOT, on page 856, flatly contradicts the statement of Gen. Wood on page 357—that "Reeves was never promised anything." The Secretary says (p. 856): "I approved of Gen. Wood giving Reeves immunity if he could get testimony against the principal offenders, the other offenders."

This shows clearly that the promise given, alluded to by Secretary ROOT, was given before the trial, from the fact that it was given for the purpose of getting the testimony of Reeves at the trial. It was an inducement offered before the fact. There is no question that Gen. Wood had communication with Reeves before the trial; that he did consider Reeves a witness for the State, and that he pardoned him as a witness for the State. It therefore seems imperative that we ascertain what actually passed between Gen. Wood and Reeves in order to ascertain whether Gen. Wood, who was bound by the act of Congress of June 6, 1900, to see that Rathbone had a "fair and impartial" trial, failed in such duty, to the direct injury of Rathbone.

Another point of great importance lies in the admission of ex parte evidence, under an order issued by Gen. Wood, by which he failed to carry out the explicit directions of the War Department.

The Cuban attorney, Desvernine, called specific attention to the fact that the depositions taken were for use solely by the court of inquiry, or court of first instance, and that they were used on the actual trial of the case. The Secretary of War had interdicted their use on the trial, saying (p. 314) "such depositions can not be used at the trial," but when Gen. Wood explained to him (pp. 349 and 350) that it ought to be left to the court, the Secretary issued the order of December 6, 1901, which modified his original order in that the question was to be left to the court. Instead of carrying out this order of December 6, the court instructed (p. 315) "that the said letter of the 14th of November, 1901, and the instructions therein contained are by this letter repealed, and that the use of the results of the interrogatory letters are allowed in the trials of the postal cases."

How such directions were considered by the judicial authorities in Cuba is shown by Fiscal Hevia's statement (p. 369) that the request by Gen. Wood for a 10-day extension of time in the case was the act of the military governor "availing himself of the legislative powers vested in him." There can be no doubt that the letter of December 6, which "repealed" that of November 14, by which the use of ex parte depositions in the trial was expressly prohibited, was construed by the court as a legislative act, and, in the absence of the saving clause that the court might receive them or not, that it was considered by the court as an absolute order to receive them. Secretary ROOT admits (p. 766) that this might fairly be inferred by the courts. Fiscal Hevia in referring to this (p. 370) speaks of the order of December 6 as "annulling" the order of November 14.

Gen. Wood, in his answer to the Rathbone charges, states (p. 350) that an "official copy of the above" (referring to the letter of the Secretary of War, December 6, 1901, by which the matter was left to the discretion of the court) "was furnished to the secretary of justice and by him submitted to the court." The record, as shown on page 315, disputes and disproves this statement of Gen. Wood.

We have already called attention to the opinions of the Secretary of War and of Fiscal Hevia, the former that Gen. Wood's direction might be taken as legislative acts and the latter that they were so taken. This should be kept in mind in construing the directions of Gen. Wood to the court, which are cited by Rathbone. There seems to be no question that Gen. Wood knew that he had such powers, and that he exercised them. The fact that in the cases of the extension of time by the courts (pp. 348–349) and of the acceptance of the bond of the surety company (p. 356) as bail, Gen. Wood claims that his action was in favor of the defendant (p. 341), would appear to be beside the point, which is that Gen. Wood's power of interference was recognized by the court.

Gen. Wood claims that in fixing the amount of bail originally at $25,000 he merely made a suggestion (p. 341). In complying with the wishes of the Secretary of War (p. 355) to have the surety company accepted as bail he also made a suggestion, but in both cases they were as effective as orders to the court.

On May 9, 1902, I submitted to the President an application for a new trial for Mr. Rathbone, stating the grounds upon which the application was based. As a result of this the Secretary of War instructed Gen. Wood to amend the laws of Cuba in conformity with the draft sent with the instructions. By this order, which was given full force only upon the day preceding the American withdrawal from the island, the supreme court of Cuba was authorized to act as a trial court in the rehearing of cases of such nature as the postal cases. It is presumable that this order was issued from a conviction that wrong had been done to an American citizen. One of the first acts of the Cuban Congress was the passage of the amnesty bill by which Rathbone and all Americans accused of crime were released.

Gen. Wood's comment upon Rathbone's action to the effect that he should have declined a pardon and should have taken his case on appeal to the newly authorized supreme court shows, at least, a complete ignorance of the conditions obtaining in Cuba. Rathbone declined a pardon and was not pardoned. He declined pardon on the ground that an acceptance of pardon was equivalent to an admission to guilt. Any attempt of Rathbone after the passage of the amnesty act to insist upon a new trial by the supreme court would have been utterly ignored, and he was so informed. No recourse was left him except the application which he has made to the authorities of his own country for an investigation of his acts as an official in Cuba.

As for the judges who constituted the court which tried Rathbone the list on page 777 shows that the only members thereof who were not appointed by Gen. Wood as magistrates, whether from civil life or from subordinate judicial positions, were Aguirre and Demestre.

Ortiz was appointed as president of the Habana audiencia by Gen. Wood.

Demestre was promoted as president of the criminal branch at Habana by Gen. Wood on November 5, 1901. Azcarate was promoted by Gen. Wood to the magistracy and transferred to the Habana audiencia by Gen. Wood and assigned to the criminal branch by Gen. Wood on November 5, 1901.

De la Torre was appointed by Gen. Wood and assigned to the criminal branch at Habana by Gen. Wood on November 5, 1901.

On the same day Gen. Wood revoked order No. 422, series of 1900, which permitted the president of audiencia to assign judges to either the civil or criminal business, and took this power into his own hands, providing (by order 238, series of 1901) that "hereafter, on making the appointments of justices of audiencia of Habana the government will determine the chambers thereof to which they will be assigned."

He then assigned the judges of his selection to the criminal branch. This was only a few weeks before the trial of the postal cases.

Gen. Wood provided further for this trial by order No. 245, series of 1901, November 15, 1901, which states that "presidents of audiencia may form chambers of justice consisting of five judges in such cases as, although not provided for by law, may, in their opinion, having special importance."

Doubtless the postal cases were so considered. By this order (No. 245) of Gen. Wood, Ortiz was permitted to preside in person at the trial, and to select out of those who were in the criminal branch the four judges alluded to for his associates.

That Ortiz (the president of audiencia) took an unusually active interest in the postal cases is shown, when, prior to the oral trial (as the trial before the audiencia is called, in contradistinction to the investigation by the judge of first instance), he asked for a translation (p. 493) of Assistant Postmaster General BRISTOW's report, which gave the latter's opinion as to the guilt of the accused. It is to be further remarked that this opinion of Mr. BRISTOW was received in evidence on the trial, being attached to a deposition taken for use on the preliminary hearing.

It may also be remarked that Mr. Desvernine swears that the defense never consented to the use of the depositions, but only asked that certain documents, which appeared only as attached to depositions, be admitted as evidence.

In order to obtain the modification by the Secretary of War of his order prohibiting the use of ex parte depositions, representations were made by Gen. Wood to the effect that these depositions had been taken in accordance with the provisions of the laws of Cuba. It appears, however, that Fiscal Hevia (p. 369) claims that such use was permissible under Article X of Gen. Wood's military order 181, series of 1900. It was therefore under Gen. Wood's own law that such a practice was admissible. Fiscal Hevia points out that this order makes specific provisions therefor. It is inconceivable that this order 181 would have been issued had the laws in force covered the point.

As part of his statement regarding the conduct of the postal trials, Gen. Wood uses letters which he received from the presiding judge, the secretary of justice, and the prosecuting fiscal. One of these is dated March 11 and the other two March 12, thus showing that they were inspired by a curious unanimity in volunteering their statements in behalf of Gen. Wood. These statements were evidently requested. It could not be expected that they would reply in any other than a manner favorable to Gen. Wood, particularly as a contrary course would be an admission reflecting seriously upon themselves.

It is curious to note that Fiscal Hevia, who goes into a very long and warm defense of Gen. Wood in his relation to the postal cases, even going so far as to vouch for the conduct of the military governor in connection with the judges, should have forgotten to mention so important a matter as that set forth by Gen. Wood (p. 357), where he says:

"My instructions to the prosecuting officer was to always give these men the benefit of the doubt. Especially was this true in regard to Rathbone."

At any rate, in view of the fact that Spanish law under which Rathbone was tried assumes guilt until innocence is proved, thus giving the benefit of a doubt by instructions of the military governor, would have been of no effect.

Why Rathbone was thus particularly mentioned to the fiscal does not appear, but if he had been thus especially recommended to Fiscal Hevia it is curious that the latter makes no mention of it in Gen. Wood's defense.

To show the trustworthiness of the statements adduced by Gen. Wood we have (p. 368) the assurance of Secretary of Justice Varela Jado—

"that I never received any special order from Gen. Wood in reference to the case, and consequently I never issued any order to the audiencia of Habana in the matter."

As a matter of fact, the record shows (p. 315) that the same secretary of justice not only issued the order of November 14, 1901, but also the order of December 6 to the audiencia of Habana.

The real defense maintained for Gen. Wood's actions in connection with the prosecution of the postal cases is that besides being the prosecuting officer he was also the legislative power in the island, and so could do as he pleased. But the point at issue is that he abused his power to the detriment of Rathbone. Regarding the effect of such action upon the interests of the accused, Gen. Wood's own words may be quoted from his report dated October 5, 1899, which is published by the War Department. He there says:

"The present arrangement and distribution of judicial power tends to discourage the investigation of crimes and the punishment of the guilty, and in some cases makes a false accusation of crime an effective means of persecuting the innocent."

Although Gen. Wood, who then commanded the Province of Santiago, inveighed against the system and demanded its reform, it is to be noted that he never did reform it when he had the power to do so as military governor of the island. With the exception of one instance, in 1900, he removed no judges from office. As he himself states (p. 343), "The removals during the entire four years were comparatively few." That the judiciary was unsatisfactory is shown by Secretary Root in his report covering the year 1901 (p. 38), where he laments that—

"the courts are still far from what they should be. One of the greatest dangers which confronts the new Government is the difficulty in obtaining an absolutely sound judiciary."

But Gen. Wood made no changes in the personnel of the judiciary thereafter, and Rathbone was tried under the system criticized by Gen. Wood and under judges considered by Secretary Root as far from satisfactory.

Keeping in mind that the judicial system was the same when Rathbone was tried as it was when Gen. Wood criticized it in 1899, and that few changes had been made by Gen. Wood in the personnel of the courts, let us compare Gen. Wood's assertion that Rathbone received a fair trial (pp. 340, 346, 362) with Gen. Wood's opinion as expressed in his report of October 5, 1899, where he says (see said report, p. 23):

"Under the existing conditions of things in Cuba no means are provided for the trial of officers and soldiers of the Army and civilian employees of the military establishment for offenses not cognizable under the Articles of War except the Cuban courts above described. I do not believe that it is wise or prudent or in any way desirable to subject American citizens who are in the service of their own Government to the jurisdiction and capricious decisions of tribunals composed of persons alien in race and sentiment, administering a system of law with which Americans are entirely unfamiliar, and which would not be tolerated in any American community. * * * Nor do I believe that it is the intention of the United States to subject not only its citizens but its soldiers to such treatment as they may expect in some cases under the law and in the courts as they are now established in Cuba."

Add to the statement of Gen. Wood the fact that in the active prosecution of the post-office cases and in the exercise of his legislative and executive powers he did give directions to the court (pp. 13, 14, 15), which are admitted, and it will be hard for any fair-minded man to say that Rathbone is not justified in his claim that he was not given a fair trial and that Gen. Wood violated the obligation placed upon him by our own act of Congress of June 6, 1900.

QUESTION OF VERACITY.

Several witnesses whose sworn statements are not to be lightly impeached have, in their testimony, reflected directly upon the credibility and veracity of Gen. Wood. Statements made by him in various communications are flatly disputed by witnesses testifying under oath, and documentary evidence submitted by others disputes statements made over his signature. Illustration of this appears in the following extracts from the testimony, reference by pages being made to the printed report of the committee:

Gen. Tasker H. Bliss (pp. 112–113) testified that to him and in his presence Maj. Runcie impugned the veracity of Gen. Wood, and that he made report of the same to Gen. Wood.

Commander Lucien Young (p. 467), referring to an interview given by him to a newspaper correspondent, testified to having met Gen. Wood in Washington:

"He informed me that the authorities were very mad about this conversation, and suggested that I deny it. I told him that I could not do so, and would not do so if I was ordered to the coast of Africa; that I had stated it and would not retract it."

Witness C. E. Fisher, on pages 610, 611, 612, swears that Gen. Wood broke faith with him in a matter of importance, and that he "would not believe him on oath."

Witness Alexis E. Frye, on pages 705, 715, 716, 719, testifies to instances of broken faith and duplicity on the part of Gen. Wood. On page 716:

"Q. Then, as I understand it, you testify to three facts—that you do not believe in his honesty, or his truthfulness, or his ability as an officer.—A. Yes, sir."

Witness Runcie, on pages 126 and 127, flatly disputes statements read to him from letters written by Gen. Wood.

Pages 661 to 675 of the report present a series of communications and extracts from newspapers, all having reference to an interview given by Gen. Wood in October, 1900, in reference to yellow-fever conditions in Habana. Statements said to have been made by Gen. Wood reflected upon the administration of Gen. William Ludlow, a most efficient, honorable, and conscientious officer, now deceased. Gen. Ludlow pronounced the alleged statements to be "wholly false and pernicious," and it does not appear from the matter published in connection with the question that Gen. Wood succeeded in relieving himself of Gen. Ludlow's charge of having perverted the facts and thereby deceived the public. (First paragraph, p. 672.)

On page 357 Gen. Wood states, "Reeves was never promised anything." Witness Fisher (pp. 610 and 611) swears that Reeves was promised immunity from conviction in return for his testimony in the postal cases.

In connection with Gen. Wood's denial of assurance of immunity to Reeves, special attention is called to the testimony of Secretary Root, page 856:

"I approved of Gen. Wood's orders giving Reeves immunity if he could get testimony against the principal offenders, the other offenders."

On page 156 Witness Runcie testifies that Gen. Wood pledged himself to a certain act concerning one Corydon M. Rich upon two specific occasions, and that this pledge was violated.

In his testimony (pp. 474 to 478) Commander Young swears that, to his personal knowledge, Gen. Wood set detectives to spy upon his actions, and also upon various officers of the Army stationed in Habana. Young testifies (p. 477) that when he found that this was being done he intimated to Gen. Wood his suspicions that he (Wood) was the instigator of the surveillance, and that Gen. Wood denied it emphatically.

Regarding the various allegations of Witness Frye (p. 702 et seq.), there is no answer or explanation by Gen. Wood, the only matter which appears being an argument which supposes what were the mental processes of Gen. Wood, as applied to the facts established by documents and the sworn testimony of Mr. Frye. It is important to note that Mr. Frye, under oath, swears that his experience with Gen. Wood proved him (Wood) to be untrustworthy. The main question raised, regarding the order reducing the salaries of the Cuban teachers, is not whether Gen. Wood subsequently rescinded his original order. Frye swears that Gen. Wood told him that the salaries would be reduced, and that he (Frye) repeated this information to President Eliot, of Harvard College. He asserts that when protests were made Gen. Wood prevaricated by stating that he had no such intention, and that the order complained of had been published through an error.

Gen. Ludlow charged Gen. Wood with deliberate dissemination of misinformation (p. 675). He also charged that Gen. Wood (p. 671) "had exceeded both his rights as an individual and his obligation to the military service in seeking to defend himself by impugning the administration of others and furnishing material for misrepresentation."

He also charged (p. 670) that Gen. Wood wrote an evasive and misleading letter. He further charges (p. 669) that Gen. Wood "had gone out of his way to misinform the authorities and the public." Gen. Wood appears never to have made any answer to these charges, nor to have asked for a court of inquiry.

In connection with these written statements of Gen. Ludlow it may be said that a request was submitted to the committee that Mr. Francis E. Leupp be summoned to testify regarding the accuracy of the original interview, for which Gen. Wood sought to evade responsibility by alleging misrepresentation by the newspaper correspondents.

RUNCIE MATTER.

An issue appears between Gen. Wood and Maj. J. E. Runcie regarding the participation of Gen. Wood in the preparation and publication of an article which was published in the North American Review for February, 1900, in which severe criticism was made upon the administration of Gen. John R. Brooke, then military governor of Cuba.

Runcie is a retired officer of the United States Army and is, therefore, amenable to Army discipline. He states positively, under oath, facts and details which make it incumbent upon Gen. Wood to do more than to write mere letters of explanation not under oath. We have no right to assume that Lieut. Runcie, a graduate of West Point, is guilty of gross perjury. As the matter stands, the sworn statement of Maj. Runcie is not controverted by either the unsworn statements of Gen. Wood or by the testimony of the witness, Baker.

It appears from the sworn testimony that the article in question was the outcome of a discussion, at a certain dinner, between Gen. Wood, Maj. Runcie, and Mr. Baker. It appears clearly from the testimony of both Baker and Runcie that during Baker's stay in Santiago there was much of frank and open criticism of Gen. Brooke's administration, and that Gen. Wood participated in the criticism. Runcie swears (p. 688)—

"It was at this dinner that the arrangement first contemplated—that I should furnish the information to Mr. Baker—was abandoned, and the other course adopted as being easier for all concerned; that I should write the article and turn it over to Mr. Baker as his own."

Runcie explains that "by all concerned" was meant Gen. Wood, Baker, and himself. He further testified (p. 689) that the information as to facts and conditions in Cuba was to cover "all Cuba."

Evidence in support of this appears in Gen. Wood's letter to Baker, dated July 29, 1903 (see Appendix A), where Gen. Wood says:

"I hope you will tell him (the President) the purpose of your visit to Cuba in 1899, and why it was that you wanted as much information as you could get on Cuba."

On page 135 Runcie testifies that Gen. Wood knew that such an article was to be written and published. On page 698 he swears that Gen. Wood understood that the article would be a criticism of Gen. Brooke's administration in the island, and that "he could not avoid so understanding it."

Mr. Baker's testimony is less direct, being rather a denial of recollection or knowledge of facts testified to by Runcie than a categorical denial of the points at issue. On page 435 he admits that "Gen. Wood was very frank in his expression of disagreement to certain things that the administration (Gen. Brooke's) was doing," and again, page 429, that as a general result of his visit to Cuba he found that Gen. Wood was "antagonistic" to the administration of Gen. Brooke.

This is confirmed by Gen. Wood's own statement in Gen. Wood's letter to Baker, of July 29, 1903, quoted above as follows:

"I never professed, as you know, to agree with the policy at that time in force in Cuba, but a frank disagreement is a very different proposition from a covert attack."

The testimony of Witness Baker appears to have been given with reluctance and with an apparent desire to escape, as far as possible, any implication of participation in the attack on Gen. Brooke.

That Gen. Wood was interested in the publication of the article in question is declared by Runcie, as shown on pages 136 and 697. Referring to the conversation between Gen. Wood, Baker, and himself, Runcie swears (p. 697) "It was inevitable, as the result of the conversation, that the scope and purpose of that article must indicate a severe criticism of the acts of Gen. Brooke at Habana."

On page 120 Runcie swears that the article written by him correctly reflected the discussion between Gen. Wood, Baker, and himself, and in various parts of his testimony asserts Gen. Wood's knowledge of the preparation and disposition of the manuscript. In a letter dated July 24, 1903 (p. 148), Gen. Wood states:

"I suppose Baker had been given a frank statement of the facts, which he would use as a partial basis for such comment as he might make in writing on Cuban affairs."

From the testimony of Baker himself regarding Gen. Wood's comment upon the administration of Gen. Brooke, it would seem that any "frank statement of facts" would involve very much the sort of criticism expressed in the Runcie article, whether an article were written by Runcie or by Baker himself on information supplied by Runcie and Gen. Wood.

Runcie further swears (p. 125), "I told him (Gen. Wood) that I would defend myself before any court-martial that might be summoned, and what was meant there was that if such a defense became necessary it might bring out facts that would be extremely embarrassing to Gen. Wood," and explained that the "facts" alluded to were "the facts of Gen. Wood's knowledge that the article was to be written."

After an apparent effort to evade a direct admission of the fact, Baker, on page 433, states that he knew that Runcie was to send him an article and that he knew what the tenor of the article would be. He states (idem) that he supposes that the object of the Runcie article was that "it would help Gen. Wood to have it understood that Gen. Brooke was inefficient," and this understanding appears to be reenforced by Runcie's letter transmitting the article to Mr. Baker. That letter closes with the paragraph, "It may be the beginning of a better day for Wood as well as Cuba."

When the article, after its publication, was shown to Gen. Wood, he expressed neither surprise nor indignation. It appears (p. 685) that "he read some of the passages of the article and laughed over them."

Gen. Wood's comments on the contents of the article have been almost wholly confined to the question of the authorization of its publication. It is of no importance whether Maj. Runcie authorized the publication of the article over his signature. The real questions arising out of the testimony, and the only ones which Gen. Wood should be called upon to answer, under oath, would include the following:

Did Gen. Wood criticize Gen. Brooke's administration to Baker in Runcie's presence?

Did Gen. Wood suggest that an article criticizing his superior officer should be published?

Did he understand that Runcie was to prepare such an article and give it to Baker?

Was he in any way accessory to the preparation or publication of such an article?

Did he subsequently ask Runcie whether the article suggested had been written and sent to Baker?

Why did he not have Runcie court-martialed for the contents of the article when he became satisfied that Runcie had authorized Baker to use his name?

Why did he not ask for the punishment of Runcie, who, as a retired officer of the Army, is amenable to discipline under the orders of the War Department, when he was informed by Gen. Bliss (p. 112) that Runcie had asserted his (Wood's) knowledge of the article in question and had charged Gen. Wood with falsehood if he denied such knowledge?

On March 21, 1900 (p. 155), Runcie wrote to Gen. Wood as follows:

"I am perfectly willing to assume my own defense in the matter, though I shall do so with reluctance, if it shall be necessary to do so. I mean that I hope that it will be unnecessary to make public any further details of the case. I am unwilling to embarrass you more than I have done already as to the result of a well-meant effort which has gone woefully astray."

Runcie here alluded to a defense before a court-martial which had been demanded by Gen. Brooke. This is well indicated by the letter written by Gen. Wood to Secretary Root on February 25 (p. 150), saying, "he (Runcie) realizes fully his liability as an officer and the position it places him in."

Runcie's letter, written to Gen. Wood in a friendly spirit, evidently alluded to the fact that in making his defense he would involve Gen. Wood, and the Secretary of War was evidently impressed, as he wrote (p. 155), "I don't like the last paragraph of Runcie's letter to you."

The true point in this whole incident is not whether Gen. Wood authorized or saw this specific article, word for word, or saw it before its publication, but whether he did have previous knowledge of, or give assent to, the preparation and publication of an article criticizing the administration of his superior officer, Gen. Brooke.

The general denial written by Gen. Wood may be taken as an answer to the charges, which he knew would be formulated, but it can not be accepted as the refutation of the testimony of witnesses subsequently given under the solemnity of an oath.

JAI ALAI MATTER.

In the matter of the establishment in Habana of the game known as the jai alai it would appear from the record that there was a suppression of certain important and material facts which were known to Gen. Wood, but which he refrained from communicating to the Secretary of War. The testimony of the Secretary of War clearly demonstrates this. Undoubtedly the Secretary based his evidence on the facts as submitted to him by Gen. Wood orally and in writing.

An attempt has been made to show, in this connection, that Gen. Wood did nothing more than give his technical consent to the leasing of a plat of ground by the municipality of Habana for the purpose of erecting thereon the building in which this game was to be played. It is stated that the betting on the games is merely an incident, like the betting on a horse race, and, in the statement which was submitted to Judge Magoon, of the War Department (p. 507), it was declared to the War Department that the object of the Jai Alai Co. was the erection of a building on said plat of ground, "to be used as a fronton, or handball court, wherein the public are to be permitted to play handball upon payment of a fee."

The rules and regulations (p. 871) clearly show this to be a misstatement, inasmuch as it is there shown to be a game played by professionals as a public spectacle.

It would also appear from the statement of the president of the Jai Alai Co. (p. 510), whom we may presume to be an expert on the subject, that such is not the case, and that he so informed Gen. Wood. Referring to the communication of said president to Gen. Wood (p. 510), dated April 26, 1902, it is made wholly apparent that the only feature of importance to the company was the gambling feature, without which they would not have made the lease, and that the company regarded the betting, or gambling, as an integral part of the game. The president of the Jai Alai Co. cites to Gen. Wood the following reasons why he should ratify the betting rules (p. 510):

"The wagers offered being part of the spectacle of the said game of ball, it is obvious that without them it could have no reason to be.

"That without the complete game, or, say, including the betting feature, it could never have occurred to anyone to enter into a contract with the ayuntamiento (city council) whereunder the cession of an edifice valued at $100,000 to the latter is involved.

"That by virtue of rights and privileges explicitly acknowledged by public instruments of writing which received your approval, the corporation of the Jai Alai fronton properly acquired the concession made unto Tomas Mazzantini by the ayuntamiento of Habana.

"That under the approval of the Secretary of War of the United States you gave your sanction to the aforementioned public instruments of writing, which naturally carried along with it your approval of the regulations which had previously been approved by the civil government on January 31, 1900."

It is also made apparent that the rights and privileges claimed by the Jai Alai Co. consisted of three things, all of which it was necessary to obtain in order to complete the grant:

(1) The agreement that the company was to have a monopoly for 10 years.

(2) The approval of the betting features.

(3) The grant of the municipal plat of land on which the building was to be erected.

It can not be claimed that the whole did not constitute a complete concession.

A certain act, say the approval of the lease, remained to be performed by the military governor, and in granting his approval he completed what had been incomplete. As Judge Advocate General Dudley said (p. 506):

"The concession was never completed by the ratification of the Spanish governor general, as herein asked of the military governor."

For cases of this nature reference may be made to the opinions of the Attorney General (vol. 22, p. 528), where there appears the following:

"Any inchoate rights or grants made by a municipal body in Cuba while under Spanish sovereignty, which for their completion required the assent or approval of the Crown or of the Crown officers, would, in the absence of such assent or approval made prior to the treaty of cession (of Cuba), be ineffective and incomplete."

There is no question whatever that the Jai Alai concession was clearly included in the groups thus characterized as "ineffective and incomplete." That being its status, further reference may be made to the same authority (Opinions of the Attorney General, vol. 22, p. 554), as follows:

"Being incomplete and inchoate, lacking certain public action, * * * it is not a complete and vested franchise or concession, * * * and the War Department is without power to exercise the prerogatives of the Government to grant or complete such concessions."

Upon such authority as the foregoing it is impossible to avoid a conclusion that Gen. Wood did grant a concession or franchise, in the nature of a monopoly and in violation of the Foraker law, to the Jai Alai Co.

It is claimed that the publication of the rules and regulations in the Official Gazette of May 9, 1902, which was in response to the application of the company, made on April 26, 1902, did not operate as the approval of these rules by the military governor. Yet they were published in the official paper, which is issued only in connection with official acts.

The record discloses that the notarial documents of April 27, 1900, and October 16, 1900, were submitted to Gen. Wood, "it being necessary to do so considering the privilege thereby conferred" (p. 510), and that they were approved by Gen. Wood "in all of their parts."

Keeping in mind that on April 26, 1902, the president of the Jai Alai Co. thus writes to Gen. Wood, it will appear to be a mistake to say that the monopoly privilege had been withdrawn. During the consideration of the matter a suggestion was made for the elimination of the monopoly feature (see testimony of Col. Dudley, p. 499), but the mayor of Habana asked (p. 506) on March 26, 1901, that the contract remain unmodified and that it be approved without any limitation. There is no record that Gen. Wood modified the 10-year monopoly feature, but on the contrary the president of the Jai Alai Co. states (p. 510) the documents of April 27, 1900, and October 16, 1900, which granted this monopoly, were ratified by Gen. Wood. He said that these documents "were submitted to your (Gen. Wood's) approval, it being necessary to do so, considering the privilege thereby conferred, and after consulting the Secretary of War of the United States they were expressly approved by you (Gen. Wood) in all their parts (p. 510)."

It is thus made apparent that after the submission of the question to the Secretary of War concerning the right of the municipality to lease its land (that is, after April 16, 1901; see Magoon's opinion, p. 507), and after the question of the monopoly had been called to his attention (February, 1901, p. 499), Gen. Wood approved the documents in their entirety, thus granting the monopoly. There is thus established the fact that he knew of and ultimately approved of the monopoly feature of the concession.

As to his powers in the premises, he knew that he had the power to refuse to give his approval to the monopoly, because at one time he proposed the modification of the concession in this respect.

This suggestion of modification (p. 499) evidently originated with the military governor, but was not carried out by him. At all events, it came from his office. The suggestion proves conclusively his authority over the acts of the municipality and the civil governor. This point finds abundant support in the opinions of the Attorney General (vol. 22, pp. 528–529), where it is stated, in reference to the scope of the powers of the military authorities over municipalities, that "they (the municipalities) may, at the will of the military commander, be restrained, * * * although inchoate or even completed contracts therefor have previously been entered into."

Further light is thrown on this subject by Judge Magoon (p. 507), who states that while a monopoly feature "appears to have been eliminated, it is understood as being included in the request for a report."

Magoon also states:

"The attention of the Secretary is called to the fact that a copy of said proposed agreement is not included in the papers submitted."

In other words, the documents which contained the monopoly provision were not submitted by Gen. Wood to the War Department.

Notwithstanding the opinion of Judge Magoon (p. 509) on the question of the monopoly that "it is probable the Foraker amendment requires the major general in command of the United States forces in Cuba to prevent the municipalities in the island from exercising the police powers in the State in such a way as to grant property franchises or concessions."

Gen. Wood did approve the documents of April 27, 1900, and October 16, 1900, in all their parts, although said documents were grants made after the passage of the Foraker law interdicting them.

The publication was made in the Official Gazette of May 9, 1902 (p. 869), of the rules and regulations of the Jai Alai, which permit the betting, and show the difference between such as is carried on by bookmakers at horse races and the system in operation at the Jai Alai, where the proprietors retain a percentage—in some cases 5 per cent and in some cases 10 per cent—of all bets made.

When action by Gen. Wood on these rules was asked by the president of the Jai Alai Co. he distinctly called attention to the fact that the company had the military governor's approval of the 10-year monopoly of the game, and that the bets were a part of the game.

It is claimed that the communication of May 7, 1902 (p. 511), and signed "by order of the military governor, H. L. Scott, adjutant general," and published in the Official Gazette of May 9, 1902, is a mere letter written by Scott. An examination of the official reports shows that during the entire period of our military government at Cuba all orders, laws, and decrees issued by Gen. Brooke, as well as by Gen. Wood, were in the same form as the one in question, signed by Adjt. Gens. Richards, Chaffee, Hickey, and Scott. There seems to be no question, taking the fact of the actual publication of all the rules and regulations in the Official Gazette in connection with the order of Gen. Wood through his adjutant general, and in the light of the letter of the president of the Jai Alai of April 26, 1902, that these rules and regulations, with full knowledge of what was claimed for them by the company, did receive the official sanction and approval of Gen. Wood.

In this connection the following appears in the testimony of the Secretary of War (p. 800):

"There was a serious difficulty about the acts of the military governor, arising from the fact that he had legislative, judicial, and executive powers, and an attempt by him to regulate the exercise of a franchise or concession might well be deemed to confer a franchise or concession; that is, while he was trying to act as a street commissioner, to regulate a gas company in the exercise of a franchise, the permit that he gave might be construed as a legislative act which conferred the franchise."

Therefore, directions were given to Gen. Wood in the letter from the Secretary of War on June 21, 1901 (p. 534), to the effect that no definite decision was to be made in such matters, but that the indorsement should be either that the United States did not object, or that it did object, leaving the question as to whether it was good under the Spanish laws to the courts (pp. 800–801). Instead of obeying this letter of the Secretary of War, the language used in connection with the publication of the rules and regulations of the Jai Alai Co. in the Official Gazette was that they were "found to have been duly and properly authorized," and "the rights acquired by your company are protected by the laws in force" (p. 511).

This clearly shows Gen. Wood's authority over the municipality and the civil governor, and that the approval of the military governor was necessary to give validity to the concession. It also shows the order of May 7, 1902, as constituting a judicial decision by the military governor and taking from the courts the very point, namely, that of legality, which, under the order of June 21, 1901, was to be left exclusively to the courts. It therefore appears wholly impossible to accept the contention that the order of May 7 was nothing more than a "mere letter" by which a simply "technical" but unnecessary approval was given by the military governor to the act of a subordinate authority.

Viewed in the light of the undoubtedly correct opinion of the Secretary of War, above referred to, this was a decision under the judicial powers of the military governor or a legislative act of approval. It was an act by which validity was given to that which would otherwise have remained invalid and completed that which was otherwise incomplete. It was therefore not only a violation of the instructions of the Secretary of War but also a violation of the Foraker amendment.

Taking into consideration the facts above set forth, the number of times this matter was referred to Judge Advocate Gen. Dudley by Gen. Wood after Col. Dudley had expressed his opinion, the apparent withholding of important facts in the submission of the case to the War Department in connection with the valuable present given to Gen. Wood by the Jai Alai Co., as admitted (p. 794), which was passed through the Cuban customhouse free of duty, at the request of some one, on the claim that it was the property of Gen. Wood, when in fact it was the property of either Tiffany & Co. or of the Jai Alai Co., it would certainly appear that, in the absence of any explanation whatever by Gen. Wood as to his official acts in the premises, we would not be justified in confirming this appointment.

In connection with the present of silverware it is important to note (a) that this appears to have been the only gift made to Gen. Wood himself, although other presents were made to members of his household; (b) that the donor was the Jai Alai Co., whose directors were Spaniards who were not interested in the establishment of an independent government in Cuba, and not, as asserted, a group of grateful Cubans; and (c) that the approval and promulgation of the rules and regulations permitting gambling "as an integral part" of the game of jai alai, as published in the Official Gazette of May 9, was followed on May 10 or May 12 by a cabled order to Tiffany for a $5,000 silver service. (See testimony of Witness Clearman, p. 134.)

It further appears that Gen. Wood knew that charges in connection with this matter would be made, in fact, that they actually had been made, and that he left no word of either defense or explanation.

BELLAIRS MATTER.

In the matter of the Bellairs incident it appears clearly, from the evidence of Witness Fisher, that upon two different occasions, one prior to Bellairs's departure from the island and the other soon after that dpearture, that he told Gen. Wood of the charges made against the character of Bellairs, and that Gen. Wood asked him to suppress the publication of the charges, at the same time refusing to investigate them when Fisher offered to produce the boys (p. 609) who were willing to swear that improper overtures had been made to them by Bellairs.

Witness La Fontisse swears (pp. 628–629) that he also told Gen. Wood of the stories of Bellairs's criminal record before Bellairs left Cuba. He fixes this time indisputably by showing that Gen. Wood had authorized him to offer transportation to the United States to the man Johnson, who had first recognized Bellairs as a former fellow convict in the Florida prison. La Fontisse adds that Johnson refused to accept Gen. Wood's offer on the ground that he was receiving hush money from Bellairs.

The testimony of Mr. Diehl shows that at times he was dissatisfied with Bellairs's excessive zeal in behalf of Gen. Wood. He, as well as Mr. Stone, shows that Gen. Wood, while admitting that he had heard of the charges against Bellairs, stated that he disbelieved them, and that, on Gen. Wood's recommendation, Bellairs was for a time retained in the service of the Associated Press (p. 480).

If there had been mere rumors concerning Bellairs without the offer of evidence to support them, and if there had not been the affirmative action sworn to by La Fontisse of Gen. Wood's offer to furnish transportation from the island to the man who identified Bellairs as a former convict, we might pass this incident as a mere exhibition of the confidence of a man in his friend. But the proffer of the evidence to prove the charges must be taken in connection with the fact that Gen. Wood had an adequate detective force at his disposal. If, as sworn to by Commander Young (pp. 476 and 478), this detective force was used to shadow and report upon the conduct of reputable Army and Navy officers it is somewhat remarkable that similar steps were not taken in connection with the serious charges and the offered evidence against a man who must necessarily have been in daily contact with the military government and who is shown by the evidence to have been on terms of personal intimacy with the military governor. It is not easy to understand Gen. Wood's indifference to the ugly charges against Bellairs in view of his attitude toward another representative of the Associated Press, the man Costello (p. 603), whose removal he requested upon no other ground than that Costello had business relations with the Catholic Church (p. 410).

CHARGES BY GEN. BROOKE.

Gen. Brooke charges Gen. Wood with acts which were subversive of military discipline. The real point brought in issue by Gen. Wood was not the physical withdrawal of the funds from Santiago, but the objection was made to what is called the centralization at Habana; that is, the authority of the general in supreme command of the island of Cuba to control and supervise the character and the amount of the expenditures by Gen. Wood in Santiago. What Gen. Wood desired was that all of the revenues of that Province should be spent by him in the Province. There is no record that either the President or the Secretary of War granted this request to Gen. Wood.

Gen. Brooke cites the instance of the erection of barracks at Santiago without his knowledge, and although ex-Secretary of War Alger states that his conversation with Gen. Wood might have been construed by the latter as an order, it does not appear that Gen. Wood made any report of the matter to his superior officer, Gen. Brooke, as a justification of his actions.

Gen. Brooke further charges Gen. Wood with insubordination (p. 201) in that he interfered with the civil courts of Manzanillo, where he took from that court a prisoner charged with the crime of homicide and set him aboard a ship and sent him out of the country. This was when Gen. Brooke was in command of the island and Gen. Wood in subcommand in Santiago Province and when he had no such power as he saw fit to exercise in the interference with judicial processes.

THE MATTER OF ACCOUNTS.

Considering the question of accounts, it appears (see Rathbone's Exhibits 32 and 33, pp. 318 and 319) that a waffle iron, two punch bowls, and dozens of wine glasses and knives, which "have been used and expended in the palace of the governor general, will not be taken up and accounted for, and the auditor of the island is authorized to pass this voucher as submitted. [This is done] by order of the military governor."

This is a clear violation of the order of the President, which established the rules for audit in the island, and which Gen. Wood had therefore no power to amend or to ignore, and no right to disobey. The passage of these vouchers distinctly stating that the property was already expended, because it was at the palace, and that it would not be accounted for, and therefore presumably be considered as the personal property of the military governor or anyone else who saw fit to take it, and which therefore was exempt from the necessity of being turned over to the Cuban Government; all this constitutes a distinct violation of all rules and all orderly conduct of affairs. These items have been taken as examples which go to prove that the objections to Gen. Wood's accounts are not that they could not be made to balance, but that they were made to balance on insufficient or illegal vouchers, and, in the case of the Santiago 1898 accounts, in the face of the total absence of vouchers in many instances.

Request was made that the committee summon certain witnesses in this matter who would swear to the latter fact, but the committee did not comply with the request.

THE CASTENADA CASE.

That Gen. Wood's actions in the matter of the concession to Castenada were a violation of the Foraker law, of the President's order of December 22, 1898, and of the letter of the Secretary of War dated June 21, 1901, is evident from the cable of Secretary ROOT to Gen. Wood (p. 587), which says:

"This permit would appear to be a concession for 99 years, and to contravene the policy expressed in the Foraker amendment; and the General Order, No. 188, Adjutant General's Office, December 24, 1898, and the letter of the Secretary of War to you, dated June 21, 1901."

Perhaps nowhere in the evidence presented in this case has there been shown more conclusively the habit of insubordination on the part of Gen. Wood than in this instance. Instead of obeying the order of his superior, whose opinions on such a matter would be taken to be final by every civilian, Gen. Wood declines prompt obedience to the military order and disputes the legal knowledge of his superior by his reply of May 12 (p. 587). But when on May 14 (p. 587) Secretary ROOT reiterates his order, it would appear that any officer recognizing discipline and the necessity of obedience to orders in the Army would have yielded ready and cheerful obedience, we find that Gen. Wood does not do so. He chooses to argue, and sends a long cable of explanation and protest, and also sends by cable the opinion of his Cuban secretary of justice to convince his superior that he is in error in his legal opinion. It became necessary for the Secretary of War to send a third command by cable, on the 16th (p. 589), before his orders were carried out by Gen. Wood.

AFFIDAVITS.

AFFIDAVIT OF GEORGE EUGENE BRYSON.

I, George Eugene Bryson, being duly sworn, do depose and say that my name is George Eugene Bryson; that I am a native of North Carolina and a citizen of the United States; that my present place of business is No. 118 Prado, Habana, Cuba; that I am a commissioner for the State of New York and commissioner of deeds for the States of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana in the Republic of Cuba; that in December, 1900, I was the Habana reporter for the New York World; that on or about the 19th day of December, in the year 1900, I was called to the office of Brig. Gen. Leonard Wood, military governor of Cuba, said office being in the palace in Habana, where a conversation, in substance as follows, took place:

Gen. Wood reminded me that I had refused the overtures made to me through Mr. Bellairs prior to his (Wood's) arrival in Habana, and a second time after his arrival. I told Gen. Wood that I could not join in the plan of Bellairs, because I believed in the administration of Gen. Brooke and Gen. Ludlow. Gen. Wood added that if I had been willing to join Bellairs it would have won for me his (Wood's) friendship; but that he wished to wipe off the slate and give me a new opportunity to show my loyalty to American institutions in Cuba; that he wanted me to send a cablegram that day to the New York World. Gen. Wood told me that Mr. Frye (meaning the American head of the schools) had made a bad break; that he had just issued a proclamation ridiculing the Anglo-Saxon race and calling upon the Cubans to rise and drive out the Americans. "Make the cable as strong as you can," added Gen. Wood, "and we will make it too hot for Frye to stay here any longer."

I asked Gen. Wood if Frye had really been so unwise as to call upon the Cubans to drive out the Americans. Gen. Wood assured me that the proclamation had been printed; then he told me to hurry and send the cable or somebody would get ahead of me. "By the way, Bryson," added Gen. Wood, "I am going to have you appointed as Associated Press reporter for Cuba."

And I, George Eugene Bryson, do further depose and say that, accepting Gen. Wood's word as true and relying on the honor and good faith of the American military governor in Cuba, I sent the above message to the New York World, and that it was duly published and copied throughout the press of the United States; that later I found that I had been basely deceived by Gen. Wood, as the original document issued by said Frye did not make the slightest reference to the Anglo-Saxon race or to any uprising of the Cubans, but simply recommended to the Cuban people to drop from their national hymn the words referring to the Spaniards as cowards, in order that the song might be used in the public schools without causing quarrels between the Cuban and Spanish children who studied side by side.

And I further depose and say that the incident caused me great regret; that Mr. Frye promptly called the attention of the New York World to the statement sent by me at Gen. Wood's request, with the result that the World published a corrected statement; that Mr. Frye soon after resigned his position as superintendent of schools of Cuba; that I went to Mr. Frye of my own accord and related the entire incident to him; that I now make affidavit to the same effect, with no other motive than to right the wrong I did to said Frye; and that I do this voluntarily, without reward or promise of reward of any kind from any person, but as a simple act of duty.

GEO. EUGENE BRYSON.

CITY OF HABANA, Island of Cuba, ss:

On the 31st day of December, 1903, before me, José Ramirez de Arellano, a notary public in and for the city of Habana, island of Cuba, personally appeared George Eugene Bryson, to me known to be the party who executed the foregoing document and who acknowledged to me that he did execute the same.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 31st day of December, 1903.

CONSULATE GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Habana, Cuba, ——— —, ——.

I, the undersigned, F. Steinhart, consul general of the United States of America at Habana, Republic of Cuba, do hereby certify that the signature to the foregoing document, to which is also affixed the seal of the notary subscribing, is the true and genuine signature of José Ramirez de Arellano.

And that he is a duly authorized and commissioned notary public of this city and residing therein, to all of whose official acts as such full faith and credit are due and given as well in court as thereout.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of this consulate general at Habana this 31st day of December, 1903.

AFFIDAVIT OF ALEXIS E. FRYE.

CITY OF HABANA, Island of Cuba, ss:

Alexis E. Frye, being duly sworn, deposes and says that during the entire period of his service as superintendent of schools of Cuba the school laws of the island gave him no power to appoint or dismiss teachers; that he never did appoint, employ, or nominate any man or woman whatsoever for any position in the public schools of Cuba; that never, while in office or afterwards, until the press, on January 5, 1904, published an abstract of the report of the Senate committee in the Wood case, was a single act of immorality on the part of any woman teacher in Cuba brought to his notice; that never a word, written or spoken, passed between Gen. Wood and himself or between any other person and himself (Frye) concerning the immorality of any woman connected with the Cuban school system.

And the said Frye further deposes that the following articles, copied from the school laws of Cuba, were in force during the entire time of his service as superintendent of schools of Cuba.

Order 226, published December 6, 1899, was in force from that date to June 30, 1900. Article 7 of this law (a copy being printed in the report of the Senate committee on the Wood case) reads as follows:

"Boards of education shall make all necessary arrangements for opening the elementary (primary and grammar) schools by December 11, 1899, or as soon thereafter as possible, and to that end will rent rooms or buildings, supply suitable equipment, and employ teachers."

Article 22 of the same law says:

"Boards of education may employ, for a period not exceeding the last day of August, 1900, any man or woman possessing the requisite scholarship and other elements of character to teach in the public schools."

Orders 279, of June 30, 1900, and 368, of August 1, 1900 (a copy of these orders being printed in the same Senate committee report), cover the period from June 30, 1900, to the time of the American evacuation of Cuba.

Article 9 of these orders (both orders being in this particular the same) says:

"The board of education, in cities of the first class, will consist of a school council and school director.

"ART. 18. The council shall appoint and fix the salary of a superintendent (meaning a city superintendent). * * * The superintendent (referring to the city) of instruction shall have the sole power to appoint and discharge, with the approval of the council, all assistants and teachers authorized by the council to be employed.

"ART. 76. Each board of education shall have the management and control of the public schools of the district, except as otherwise provided for boards of education in city districts, with full power to appoint principals, teachers, janitors, and other employees."

And the said Frye further deposes that at no time was he a member of any city or rural district board of education or superintendent of schools of any city, but that during his entire term of service in Cuba he was general superintendent of the schools of the entire island, and that therefore, under the law, he received no power to nominate, appoint, or employ any teachers in any schools, public or private. He further deposes that any statement, by whomsoever made, to the effect that he employed incompetent and immoral teachers is wholly false, and that the same is shown to be false by the published laws of Cuba.

And he further deposes that any statement to the effect that the employment of incompetent or immoral teachers by him in the schools of Cuba was a cause of trouble between Gen. Wood and himself is absolutely false, and that this also is shown to be false by the published laws of Cuba.

ALEXIS E. FRYE,
Former Superintendent Schools of Cuba.

AFFIDAVIT OF GEORGE RENO.

REPUBLIC OF CUBA,
City and Province of Habana:

George Reno, being duly sworn, deposes and says: My name is George Reno. During the late Spanish-American War, and for two years previous, I was special envoy on various occasions between the Provisional Government of Cuba and the administration at Washington, as may be shown by the files in the War Department in Washington. I have resided in the island of Cuba for nine years. After said war I was the first chief of the revenué service in Cuba and organized the same under the present Government. I am now the general land and immigration agent in Cuba for the Southern Pacific Railroad and Steamship System, with my office at 21 Obispo Street in the city of Habana.

In the year 1900 I was correspondent of the Indianapolis News, the McClure Magazine Co., and the Review of Reviews, of New York. In the line of duty, while seeking admission to social functions under the patronage of the government of intervention, I was invariably referred by Gen. Wood to Capt. Bellairs, reporter of the Associated Press, who had been designated by said Wood to pass upon the social standing of all the guests to such functions. On February 22, 1900, a group of American correspondents, including myself, were denied the courtesy of invitations to the Washington's Birthday ball of same date, given under the patronage of the military governor. Among the correspondents was the first and only American lady correspondent who penetrated the Spanish blockade of Cuba, and who carried with her the American flag taken from the house of Senator Foraker in Washington, together with a letter of encouragement from said Senator to Bartolomé Masó, president of the Provisional Government of Cuba. By chance Gen. Ludlow, governor of the city of Habana, learned of this act of Bellairs, and of his own volition personally informed these correspondents that within 30 minutes the invitations would be at their hotels, and it is needless to say that the invitations were there. I refer to this circumstance merely to show the social sway which this man Bellairs exercised through the authority of Gen. Wood over social functions under the patronage of the Government.

On or about the 14th day of March, 1900—the day when the Secretary of War, Mr. ROOT, visited the Cabanas fortress, and when Gen. Wood sent all the ladies of the party under the care of said Bellairs—Gen. William Ludlow, Maj. E. G. Rathbone, Col Tasker H. Bliss, Capt. Bellairs, and others, including the deponent, took lunch around the same table in the public restaurant called the Paris Habana. At the close of the lunch said Bellairs arose and made the following statement, significant of the assurance he felt as to his past and future influence over the destiny of his chief:

"I make the following prophecy: In the year 1908, Leonard A. Wood will be elected President of the United States, and I will put him there. You know what I have done for him in the past; mark my words and watch the future."

The deponent further says: On February 23, 1900, while commenting upon the exclusion of the correspondents referred to above, Mr. Frank Cairns, chief of the bureau of secret service of Cuba, told me (the deponent) that he had received information, not only from the secret service in Washington, but also from soldiers of the American Army in Cuba, which led him to believe that said Bellairs was an ex-convict and degenerate of the worst type, and that he had been guilty of the filthiest and vilest of acts with these men and others. Mr. Cairns asked me to assist him in securing a photograph of Bellairs to send to Judge Mitchell, of Tampa, Fla., as a means of identification. I obtained a photograph of Bellairs, and it was sent to said Judge Mitchell, and was by him identified as that of a criminal he had sentenced some years before to the State penitentiary in Florida, as said Judge Mitchell has since certified through the press. All these facts were known to the chief of secret service in Cuba, whose immedite superior was Col. Tasker H. Bliss, while said Bellairs was still in Cuba and enjoying the protection of Gen. Leonard Wood.

And the deponent further says: On or about the 7th day of August, 1900, a man giving the name of Johnson came to me for work and told me frankly that he had served time as a convict; that through the influence of said Bellairs he (Johnson) had been holding a position as watchman in the arsenal in Habana, but that he had been dismissed as soon as Bellairs left Cuba. I finally drew from him the fact that not only he (Johnson) but also two other men then in Habana, whose names and addresses he gave me, had served a term of years with said Bellairs in the State penitentiary of Florida.

Upon learning the full story of said Johnson, I (the deponent) induced him to go to the office of said Cairns, chief of the secret service, and relate the facts to that officer. At about 11 o'clock in the evening of the same day said Cairns called upon me at the Hotel Trotcha and stated to me that Johnson had told him the whole story; that he (Cairns) had repeated it to Col. Tasker H. Bliss, his superior officer, and that Col. Bliss, realizing the importance of the matter, had informed Gen. Wood of the facts; that Gen. Wood had sent at once for him (Cairns), and in a very excited and agitated manner had asked him (Cairns) who knew the facts besides himself and Col. Bliss; that Mr. Cairns had told Gen. Wood that I (George Reno) knew them; that Gen. Wood appeared greatly disturbed, and told him (Cairns) that as a Government official he (Cairns) must keep quiet, but that I, a newspaper man, might not; that Gen. Wood then told him (Cairns) that this Bellairs matter must be dropped right where it was; that Gen. Wood then ordered him (Cairns) to find me at once, and, if necessary, "bulldoze" me into silence; that he (Cairns) had told Gen. Wood that that would not work; that said Wood then told him (Cairns) to "buy me off"; that he (Cairns) replied that that also would fail; that Wood then said there must be some way to reach me, and he (Cairns) replied that he would appeal to me as an American, would explain to me that the reputations of many excellent people were at stake, owing to their social and political connection with Bellairs; that said Wood ordered him (Cairns) to lose not a moment, but to find me and appeal to me to be silent. And the deponent further says that the above is a true and faithful account of the conversation with said Cairns, and that he (Cairns) is now in the employ of the Government in Manila; also that when said Cairns appealed to him (the deponent) as a friend to drop the matter, he (the deponent) informed Cairns that an account of the facts had been mailed to the States that day and would leave by the next mail boat; that Mr. Cairns replied that Gen. Wood would see to it that the article would not see light in the press, and that the deponent has reason to believe that Gen. Wood did so, as he (the deponent) never heard from the article afterwards.

And the deponent further says that while he was willing at that time to let the matter rest for the sake of many American residents in Cuba who had social and political relations with Bellairs, that now he feels that the truth should come to light as a protection of society against said Bellairs, inasmuch as Gen. Wood has seen fit to suppress the facts and deny knowledge of them.

AFFIDAVIT OF EDWIN WARREN GUYOL.

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK,
Borough of Manhattan, ss:

I, Edwin Warren Guyol, being duly sworn, say: That I am a native-born American citizen; that during a part of the administration of Gen. Wood in Cuba I resided in Habana and was the editor of the English page of the newspaper then published in Habana called La Lucha; that at various times I criticized Col. William M. Black, United States Army, the chief engineer of the Department of Cuba, in the columns of La Lucha, and much of the information on which I based my criticisms of Col. Black's official acts was furnished me by Gen. Wood.

As a result of some of these criticisms, Col. Black, through the fiscal, requested the judge of first instance of Habana to prosecute me. On learning this fact I immediately sought Gen. Wood.

I found him driving in his carriage, which I stopped at the corner of Cuba and O'Reilly Streets.

I told him that Col. Black had requested the judge of first instance to have me arrested and that prompt action was necessary to prevent my arrest.

In answer to my request he wrote a memorandum in pencil on one of his cards, asking that the judge of the cathedral district be asked to come to the palace to await his return.

He asked me to deliver this card to Col. Richards, his adjutant general, and requested me to wait at the palace until he would return from his drive.

I carried out his directions.

Gen. Wood and the judge arrived almost simultaneously at the palace.

The judge went with Gen. Wood into the latter's private office, and as a result of that conference I was not molested.

I also criticized Gen. William Ludlow's official acts in the columns of La Lucha, some of the material for which criticisms Gen. Wood gave to me for the purpose of having it used in criticism of Gen. Ludlow's administration in Habana.

EDWIN WARREN GUYOL.

Sworn to and subscribed to before me this 7th day of January, 1904.

[SEAL.] CHARLES ALVIN ROGERS,
Notary Public.

The article referred to is as follows:

While it is never necessary to tell a lie it is not always wise to tell all the truth, consequently many facts connected with this campaign will probably never be known; but this much is certain: First, that Lawton and Wood were not the only men who endured the whole campaign; second, water was not scarce nor did the command ever travel where there was no shade nor grass visible; third, that the command was never without supplies; fourth, that no company of soldiers ever became exhausted and were ordered back to barracks for this reason; fifth, that no portion of Capt. Lawton's command, except Troop B of the Fourth Cavalry, ever had a fight with the Indians during the entire campaign, and at this fight Dr. Wood was not present; sixth, that Dr. Wood never saw a hostile Indian from the time he started until Geronimo came into Capt. Lawton's camp to talk surrender, and that he never heard a shot fired at any hostile Indians; seventh, that the nominal command of a few soldiers of Infantry—traveling over a country for a few weeks in the wake of a detachment of Indian scouts commanded by an officer who had, while in command of a troop of Cavalry not connected with the Lawton command, run onto the hostiles, and who, with his detachment, discovered the camp of the hostiles on the Yaqui River when he was 10 miles in advance of Capt. Lawton, Dr. Wood, and the Infantry, and who captured all the property therein an hour before the arrival of Capt. Lawton, Dr. Wood, and the Infantry detachment (the hostiles had abandoned the camp unseen by even the Indian scouts, so that not a shot was fired even by the scouts at any hostiles), and though no fight was had during these few weeks by this Infantry detachment nor a shot fired by them—secured for the person in nominal command a reputation—entirely outside the Army—for command and for capacity in Indian fighting, and also a medal of honor.

H. C. BENSON, Major, Fifth Cavalry.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he really believes those statements regarding Gen. Wood are true.

Mr. HAY. That is not a fair question as to what I believe. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am simply stating what was stated by men who filed these affidavits, and which were incorporated in the report made by Senator Mark Hanna to the Senate in this case. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WEEKS. I think the gentleman from Virginia ought not to repeat such assertions about an officer of the Army unless he himself really believes they are true.

Mr. HAY. I certainly do think I should do so, when my motives have been impugned by every gentleman on that side of the House.

Mr. WEEKS. They have not been by me.

Mr. HAY. Well, by almost every gentleman who has spoken on that side—that I have been actuated by some personal spite against this Army officer.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Virginia will certainly acquit me of having made any statement of that kind.

Mr. HAY. I will not impugn anybody who did not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER and Mr. GILLETT rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman if the gentleman thinks his remarks now tend to destroy that impression of personal spite?

Mr. HAY. Well, that is just as the gentleman chooses to take them. I was going on to show that Gen. Wood, since he has been Chief of Staff, has not been an efficient Chief of Staff; that he has charged in magazine articles and in newspaper articles and has stated before committees of this House matters concerning the Army of a most detrimental character; that he has stated that there is no Army; that the Army was nothing but a collection of fellows who cleaned out front yards, and things of that sort. If that were true, if these abuses of which he complained were true, why is it that during the two or three years he has been Chief of Staff he has not put a stop to these abuses and brought about some reforms? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. I had no desire to have anything personal injected in this debate about Gen. Wood. In my opening statement I said nothing about him, but gentlemen, by their remarks, have forced me into a discussion of the whole matter. I have nothing against Gen. Wood; I have no feeling against Gen. Wood. He has not done anything to me. He has not suggested that any Army post in my district or in my State should be abandoned——

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY. What does the gentleman desire to say?

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will ask simply a question, I will try to answer it.

Mr. COOPER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that Maj. Rathbone, who was convicted of embezzlement and sent to the penitentiary for 10 years in Cuba while Gen. Wood was at the head of affairs in that island, was the man charged—I do not know whether truly or not—with having handled the funds by which Mark Hanna was alleged to have been elected Senator from Ohio the first time?

Mr. HAY. I do not know that that has anything to do with this question. The gentleman ought to know more about it than I do. I am not familiar with Republican activities. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. I am only speaking of possible motives behind the charges against Gen. Wood, and the gentleman knows, does he not?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Wisconsin is making a speech. He is not asking a question.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman answer one more question?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will ask the question briefly, I will yield.

Mr. COOPER. Does not the gentleman know that after the investigation of the charges filed against Gen. Wood he was exonerated, and that ELIHU ROOT, the Secretary of War, wrote a letter saying that other charges against Gen. Wood were absolutely groundless?

Mr. HAY. I know he was confirmed by the Senate. As I said a moment ago, when the gentleman interrupted me, I did not want to get into any personal controversy with Gen. Wood, but his friends have undertaken, through the newspapers and in other ways, to cast aspersions on the conferees of the House and Senate on their honesty and their good faith.

There are two sides to it; and people who live in a glass house ought not to throw stones at other people, and they can not throw stones at me with impunity.

Now, about this commission. Much has been said by our genial friend from California about our having selected a jury to pass upon this case which have already decided what they would do. As I stated when I was up before, I did not know at the time that these officers were selected that any of them had served on a commission having regard to Army posts.

But these three gentlemen to whom allusion has been made are honest, upright, capable men. They are not bound by any decision which they have given heretofore. Their report was merely an incidental one and was not called for under the law under which they acted. Therefore I do not think that we need apprehend they will do otherwise than give an honest, fair decision as to what they believe to be right with regard to these posts.

As to the appointment of Gen. Humphrey, about whom the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes so much, I have only to say that when I suggested his name on that commission I did not then recall the fact that he was in the employ of any powder company. But, as I said before, that has nothing to do with his qualification to pass on the location of Army posts. He is an honest, square, capable, upright man, and because a man is employed by a powder company it does not disqualify him from discharging, with efficiency and honesty, the duties which this act will devolve upon him. Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I want to ask the gentlemen on this side of the House to sustain this conference report. It is the labor and the work of over a year, and it carries in it provisions which will ultimately save in the military establishment $10,000,000 a year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And to develop an attack of this sort simply because one man chooses to make a fight upon it in order that his individual career or place may be taken care is a very small way, in my opinion, to approach this subject. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in order to put in one or two clippings from newspapers. I will not abuse the privilege.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this conference report may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks that all gentlemen who have spoken on this conference report may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

Mr. MANN. On the matter involved?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PRINCE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the adoption of the conference report will vote "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 92, answered "present" 10, not voting, 169, as follows:

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that I am announced as being paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. TILSON. As he did not vote and I am paired with him, I withdraw my vote and desire to be recorded as "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The announcement of the result was greeted with applause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMS). A quorum is present, and the doors will be opened.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil bill, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the committee rose last night it was dividing on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to line 8, on page 77. I ask that that amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 77, line 8, strike out the figures "125,000" and insert in lieu thereof "150,000."

The question being taken on the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 60, noes 85.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, an amendment was offered yesterday by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] to strike out the item for the traveling expenses of the President of the United States. I ask that that amendment be reported. It was passed over, to be taken up the first thing today in the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 68, strike out lines 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the language proposed to be stricken out be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following: "For traveling expenses of the President of the United States, to be expended in his discretion and accounted for on his certificate solely, $25,000."

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment to the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations, as a member of that committee and as a member of the subcommittee having in charge the preparation of the bill, I wish to say for the information of the Committee of the Whole that both in the subcommittee and in the full Committee on Appropriations I reserved my right upon the floor of this House to move to eliminate this appropriation from the bill.

I have no desire and it is not my purpose to enter into any long discussion of the question that may be involved in this item of appropriation. When this language was written into the appropriation bill some five or six years ago I opposed it, and I have at every opportunity since that time voted against it.

My purpose primarily in this instance is not one of economy. The mere matter of the $25,000 does not influence me in the position I have taken relative to this appropriation. But I do not believe that there is a man upon this floor who will question the statement that the dignity and esteem in which the great office has been held through a century has gone backward in the estimation of the people of the country during the years that this appropriation has been carried more than in all the history of this Government. [Applause.]

In fact, if this paragraph had a caption it should be "To enable gatherings in various places in the United States, including county fairs, to make Exhibit A the President of the United States," and thus to cheapen the great office for which we all have great reverence, no matter who may occupy it.

I do not think there is anyone here who will question the fact, whether he will admit it or not, that the privilege extended through this appropriation has been greatly abused, and I believe it is in the interest of the office itself, as well as of the man who may occupy the office, to say nothing of the esteem in which it is held by the great mass of the people in the country, that this appropriation should be stricken from the bill. [Applause.]

It has been said, and it will be said again, perhaps, during the discussion this afternoon, that this enables the President to accept invitations from various cities and organizations scattered over the country, to visit those cities, and to make speeches to this organization and the other.

I make the statement here to-day that there is not a city or organization in the United States that really desires the presence of the President of the United States and the occasion for his presence is a fitting one that will not willingly and gladly pay the expense to have him visit the city.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it would be compatible with the office of the President of the United States to let somebody else pay his traveling expenses?

Mr. PAGE. To answer the gentleman frankly, I think it would be much more compatible with the dignity of the office than some things that have occurred under this appropriation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is not my intention to criticize the present President of the United States, or any other, and I am making this effort to eliminate this appropriation in face of the fact that I believe and you believe that a Democrat will occupy the White House during the next four years. I make that statement because I want the dignity of the office maintained when he is placed in that high position.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the sense of the country is about this matter and I do not care. There are times and there are matters that come before this House in which we are to exercise our judgment as Representatives, not of a particular constituency but as Representatives of the country as a whole, and to do what we can what in our judgment we believe will maintain the dignity of the Chief Magistracy of this great Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I regret that this controversy has arisen in the House. I have a very high estimate of the importance and dignity of the office of President of the United States. It is always unfortunate whenever his conduct is such that it requires a statement of fact which in itself is a severe criticism of his conduct.

Prior to 1906 the President, when traveling, was the guest of various railroads in the United States. About that time the trip of one President of the United States, following the unbroken custom of the country, involved an expenditure by the railroads of this country in excess of $200,000.

Then legislation was enacted which prohibited the granting of free transportation to the President and other public officials. That resulted in an act, approved June 23, 1906, authorizing the appropriation of $25,000 to pay the traveling expenses of the President, which money was to be expended and accounted for upon his certificate solely. The Congress authorized this expenditure and reposed that complete confidence in the President which should be placed in him, and did not require the submission of detailed vouchers.

I supported the legislation at that time because I was one of those who were convinced that the President of the United States necessarily incurs certain expenses in travel that should not be made a personal charge. The limit of $25,000 was fixed because at that time Mr. Roosevelt, as President, sent information to the Committee on Appropriations to the effect that when the President of the United States traveled he could not travel as an ordinary individual; that he could not take a seat in an ordinary Pullman coach, but required certain assistants to travel with him, and very frequently found it necessary to extend invitations to prominent persons or officials or to distinguished citizens to be his guests in traveling from place to place; that what ordinarily would seem to be a very large sum, in view of the circumstances surrounding the President, $25,000 would not be excessive. And since 1906 $25,000 a year has been appropriated. For 1910 the present Chief Executive set a very bad example and a very unjustifiable example of expending in excess of the amount limited by law. It necessitated action by Congress to permit him to expend out of the appropriation made for 1911 a certain portion during the fiscal year of 1910.

I criticized his action at that time because, as I then said, nothing was more important than that the President of the United States should set an example to everybody else in the Government of obeying the law and keeping within the limit fixed by the law. At that time, however, the abuses which have since been disclosed had not taken place; and although grave abuses have since taken place, and although it is to be deplored that a President of the United States should be a party to what has transpired since that time, I have that respect for and confidence in this great office that because of the dereliction of a single individual I am unable to vote to penalize whoever may hereafter be elected to that great and exalted place.

For the current year $25,000 was appropriated. During the present fiscal year I believe that the country has been shocked at the manner in which the Chief Executive of the country has absented himself from this Capital City, traveling about here and there, seeking delegates and votes and denouncing his fellow citizens, members of a different political party or of factions of his own political party not in accord with himself, at the expense of the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

[Mr. FITZGERALD asked for and obtained unanimous consent for five minutes more.]

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman think these political journeys he speaks of had been paid for out of this $25,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have reason to believe that some of these speeches were delivered——

Mr. GILLETT. Then I can tell the gentleman—and I am authorized to do so—that he is mistaken. They were not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us see about that. Last fall the President made a very extended trip through the western part of this country, and it was during that trip that he frequently denounced the so-called progressives or insurgents in the Republican Party. What was done in order to enable him to make that trip? The cost of a special train to be utilized by the President in that trip was figured out in advance. The persons who were to accompany him on the trip were counted.

The pro rata cost of each person was figured out, and every newspaper man who was on the train was requested to pay $1,500 to the man in charge of it in order to pay for expenses. Out of the fund for the suppression of counterfeiting and the protection of the President of the United States $4,500 was taken to defray the expenses upon the train of three employees of the Secret Service, against the protest of the Acting Chief of the Secret Service that to do so would create a deficiency in that appropriation.

I have not been able to ascertain, but from the investigation I have made I am inclined to believe that those Army officers who accompanied the President upon that trip as members of the party contributed their $1,500 each, and if they did so it was because they received 7 cents a mile for their transportation out of the appropriation for the transportation of the Army.

I think it is deplorable that it is necessary to state these facts to the House and to the country, and I do not believe the President's action can be justified in what has been done in this respect. I can overlook the President's statements and denunciations of members of the political party of which I am a member and of his opponents in his own party, because, judging by results, it would pay the Democratic Party to keep him traveling all the year round. [Laughter.] But that does not justify the President of the United States in making a partisan of himself on these trips about the country, indulging, as the Chief Executive, in denunciation of any part of the citizens of the country simply because they are not in accord with him politically.

But, Mr. Chairman, in spite of these abuses, in spite of these conditions, so deplorable, I favor the appropriation of the money necessary to pay the expense of the President in traveling about the country when necessary. I am one of those who believe that, as a result of the occurrences of the present year, hereafter, the President of the United States will not be considered merely as an attraction to make successful every county fair, every charitable entertainment, every banquet, and every other money-making enterprise at which it is necessary to have some superior attraction to bring the people there.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. I want information, and that is the reason I ask the question. My recollection is that when the matter of raising the President's salary from $50,000 per year to $75,000 per year first came before the House, the understanding then was that the traveling expenses which had been allowed before that, the $25,000 per annum, would not be asked, if the salary were raised as requested.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the understanding of the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think yes; but I am not criticizing on that account.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just one moment. I think that was the understanding of a great many Members, but at the same time I do not believe that a compensation of $75,000 a year, with $25,000 additional for traveling expenses, is an exorbitant or an extravagant amount.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from New York whether he thinks he could afford to be for an appropriation of $25,000 for traveling expenses of the President of the United States, in view of the attitude which he assumed against the proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the best proof that I can afford to be in favor of it is that I am, and I am saying so.

Mr. MADDEN. If I felt the same as the gentleman from New York does about the proposition, I would vote against it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman cares to he can vote against it. I propose to vote for it; but still, Mr. Chairman, I would not favor the appropriation and support it and at the same time conceal from the House these facts which have come into my possession in the discharge of my official duties as the head of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman is trying to make a political speech on the floor of the House in connection with a great appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman desire further time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I might occupy a minute or two more.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the time of the gentleman from New York will be extended for five minutes. [After a pause,] No objection is heard.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. Is it not a fact prior to the time that the salary of the President of the United States was increased to $75,000 that there was not any appropriation for traveling expenses at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was an appropriation made in 1906 for traveling expenses, and the increase of the President's salary was made just prior to the beginning of President Taft's present term. The former occupant of the White House could not have enjoyed the increase of compensation during his term of office.

Mr. CANDLER. This increase of the traveling expenses was made, I understood the gentleman to say, just prior to the time President Taft was elected in 1907. Then is it not a fact that at the time the President's salary was increased there was an attempt to increase it to $100,000 from $50,000 and that there was an agreement arrived at fixing it at $75,000 with the understanding that that would be the only compensation which the President would receive?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have already stated many Members believe that was the understanding. Since that time Congress has appropriated the $75,000 salary and has appropriated the $25,000 for traveling expenses and I do not believe in view of what has happened in that respect that whatever our understanding might have been has much effect.

I stated, Mr. Chairman, that in my opinion neither the compensation nor the allowance for the traveling expenses of the President is either extravagant or excessive, and I believe it desirable that the President be in a position whenever those great occasions arise that it was desirable that he should leave the Capital, or to leave the Capital for any reason, that he should have the means with which to travel. I think it is to be deplored that the course that has been pursued has been followed by the present Chief Executive. I am not indulging in a cheap political speech. I could much more severely criticize the President for his action in this respect than I have done. I regret it not as a partisan, but I regret it as a citizen of the United States that such statements can be made regarding the conduct of any man who happens to be President of the United States, and yet, regardless of what has happened, having that high esteem for this office, respecting every man whom I have had the pleasure or advantage of being personally acquainted with who occupied that position, I believe it would be much better that the President himself should most scrupulously observe the law and not by any indirect or roundabout manner attempt to evade it, particularly in a matter which many believe would result to his pecuniary advantage.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a question upon which men will divide upon partisan lines. It is a question that we must determine regardless of politics. I should prefer to have the President of the United States held in that high esteem that there would never be possible any criticism of his conduct of the office; that whatever differences there might be might be differences regarding matters of policy, matters of administration apart from the individual. It is unfortunate and it tends to the tearing down of the respect that is universally had for important officials of this country and which is so important a need of our system of government that men occupying these very high offices should permit themselves so far to ignore either the letter or the spirit of the law as to make necessary statements about their conduct that all good citizens must deplore. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the salary fixed at the adoption of the Constitution for the President was $25,000 a year. Then we had about 4,000,000 of people in the United States, there was not a mile of railroad, our vessels were small sailing ships, our forebears were awfully proud of what they had achieved in establishing a Republic, weak but hopeful, a bankrupt Treasury, with troubles on the borders with the Indians and troubles at home, war threatened in the great countries in Europe, especially between France and Great Britain, and almost ready to break out, the laughing stock of the rest of the world from their standpoint. The salary remained $25,000 a year until the time of President Grant, when it was increased to $50,000 a year. It remained that until it increased under Roosevelt to $75,000, to take effect under Taft. The practice grew up after the railroads came and population increased until there are now nearly 96,000,000 of people stretching across 3,000 miles from one ocean to the other—the greatest Nation on earth in population, save one, which is Russia, and we are really greater in population than Russia proper. We are the wealthiest Nation on earth. We have half of the railroads on earth. We are a happy and a prosperous people. While we have our disagreements and party peanut politics here and there, and we say the end of the Republic is to come because this thing is to happen and that thing is to happen, some of us grow pessimistic, taking counsel from our fears and others for political effect. Yet we know, in fact, that much of this talk is leather and prunella.

A few years ago by law we prohibited, so far as we had power, under the power of regulating commerce among the States, the granting of free transportation by common carriers. Prior to that time all the Presidents, certainly since 1868, had the courtesy of free special trains and provisions—a great sum. After all, we were glad they could pass about the country, especially if they were poor and not able to pay. But I was glad to vote to prohibit free transportation. A little later on we made an allowance of $25,000 a year to pay the expenses of travel of the President of the United States. Some gentlemen then criticized; some gentlemen now criticize. After all, I am here to say that $75,000 a year and $25,000 for traveling expenses now, all things considered, is not one-half as much as was $25,000 when the Constitution was adopted and Washington was elected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like a few minutes longer; say, about 10 minutes.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I voted for an increase of salary to the President, and I voted for the travel pay. I am glad of it. He is our President, and whoever may be elected next November will be our President. This is a great Republic. Some gentlemen say, "Oh, I do not like the President to run around." Let me say to you that with this ninety and odd millions of people the great bulk of them will never see a President unless he passes through the country; and I am glad that the Presidents, from time to time, Cleveland, Harrison, Arthur, Grant, McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft—Lincoln did not travel much; he could not, you know, under all the conditions very well, but was compelled to stay at the Capital—I am glad that they traveled. And I want to look the gentlemen from south of the Mason and Dixon's line in the eye. You have welcomed the President, whether Democrat or Republican, quite as joyously as we north of the Mason and Dixon's line. I believe it is right and proper and sound policy that they should travel, and should travel at the expense of the Government. Think of it! Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy—a coordinate branch of the Government! It is true he has a house to live in. But I am satisfied, without knowing it, the expenses of entertainment alone come pretty near eating up a large part of the salary.

I know something about it in an humble way. I had the honor to be Speaker for eight years. I have no expensive habits. I fancy I do not put on any style; but even in that position, by the time I had answered the legitimate demands that were made upon me in entertaining, from the public standpoint, people who would come to Washington from the various States and sometimes those who would cross the ocean, I expended in being halfway decent more money than I care to tell. I paid that expense. I am not a rich man, but

I happened to have enough income, with my salary, to do it, and I was glad to do it.

Now, a man in a position like that of the President ought not to be required to have a private income that would enable him to pay from that income the great expenses that the President ought to bear; and if he did not bear them we would be mortified and humiliated all the while.

My constituents occasionally come down here—not often, but once in a lifetime, some of them—farmers and shopkeepers and others. They call on me; they pass to and fro about the city. I visited with one who had never seen Washington before, and I took him over to the Library of Congress here. I had a little leisure. It was an off day. We passed through the Capitol. I wrote him a note, so that he could go through the departments and receive prompt attention; but the day I took him to the Capitol I said, "I want to take you over to the Library of Congress." He had never been in Washington before. He was not worth to exceed $10,000, but he had made it by honest labor on a farm, and he had raised a family respectably, and given his children an ordinary education, and he was one of the most valuable citizens of my acquaintance; and, knowing that he had worked for every dollar that he ever received, I took him over to the Library. We passed through that magnificent building, and he looked at it, and looked at the books and at the works of art, the paintings and frescoes upon the wall.

When we went in, I said, "Mr. Johnson, they say it costs $1.75 every time a book is lifted off these shelves." Said he, "You don't tell?" "Yes," I said; "that is what they say, and I guess that is pretty nearly correct." He said, "I own a little bit of this library, and a little bit of all this public property, as a citizen, and I want to tell you that no matter what it costs, no man can go through the Capitol and go through the Library of Congress who will not step higher and feel grander than before." [Applause.]

Oh, gentlemen, do not mistake public sentiment. Do not mistake and misjudge the man on the farm or the man in the shop or the man in the factory. Do not imagine that they regret the expenditures. Compared with the expenditures elsewhere in the world, they are a mere bagatelle. Where we pay a dollar, substantially all the other great governments of the world—and I do not justify it—pay hundreds of dollars.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. PAGE. I quite agree with what the gentleman from Illinois has said of the value of having people come to Washington from other sections of the United States, and I think it helps very greatly to inspire them with patriotism and love of country. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not think that, instead of making this appropriation of $25,000 to allow the President to make an exhibit of himself in various parts of the country, we should make an appropriation sufficient to bring the people here, and exhibit not only the President, but all the glories of Washington.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let us see about that, and see how much good faith there is in that suggestion. There are ninety-four or ninety-five millions of people in the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Ninety millions.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, somebody has even said 96,000,000. I suspect there are 96,000,000 men, women, and children. On the average, the earning capacity of these people, I suppose, counting the children, is about a dollar a day; maybe not more than three-fourths of that.

The gentleman well knows it is impossible for great numbers of them to come here, and the gentleman could not have been speaking in good faith when he said he thought we had better appropriate money to bring them all here.

Mr. PAGE. I did not say I thought we had better do it. I asked the gentleman from Illinois to express himself on the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. I have great respect for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], who is my colleague on the Appropriations Committee and in this House; but I want to say that I can not indorse his motion or his criticisms touching this appropriation. As to my other colleague, Mr. FITZGERALD, I will not say, "Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts," but his advocacy of this appropriation was a Parthian shot.

I want to say that in many things, from the standpoint of policy as a Republican, the President of the United States has not at all times seen things as I have seen them. He has advocated some policies that I do not advocate. But after all, he is my President and our President, and in justice to him I want to say that I think when history comes to write up his part in it it will be said that if he sinned at all it was in not paying proper attention to organization; but nevertheless it will be said that he was an able, an efficient, and a great President. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I should like a few minutes more. I have just got in the way of speaking, and I should like a little time in which to close.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. He is the only President who in making his nominations for the Federal judiciary has crossed over and found some of his nominees among those who held a different political faith. Some Republicans say he might have found Republicans just as good. Yes, but after all I do not believe any man will arise in his place here and criticize his nominations in the filling of vacancies in that great court of last resort, which is, I think, perhaps as great as it has been in my time, with a Chief Justice quite as strong, in my opinion, as any Chief Justice since the days of Marshall. [Applause.]

The gentleman says that the President exhausted the $25,000 so that the next $25,000 had to be made available a short time before the fiscal year expired. I did not know that, but I suppose he did. It was made available before the fiscal year expired. That very frequently happens. Why, to-day the revenue cutters are on their way with rations galore to the volcano-stricken country in the far Northwest. When the lives of men, women, and children were imperiled and property was endangered by the floods in the Mississippi Valley, there was no money for the purposes of relief, yet the President violated the law with the assent of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and with my assent in sending rations to those stricken people, as he is violating the law now with our approval in sending the revenue cutters as fast as they can be propelled up to the scene of the volcanic devastation, having behind him the assurance that that violation of the law will be made good. After all, while I believe in the observance of law, I do not believe in what seems to me to be unfair criticism in the matter. So far as I am concerned, while I am a Member of this House, whoever is President, although I may not be upon speaking terms with him, he will be my President, and he stands for me as he stands for all the people in one of the coordinate branches of the Government; and while I am a Member of this House I will continue to vote for $25,000 a year for his traveling expenses. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment close at 6 o'clock. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that unless some one else desires to be recognized the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] be given five minutes in support of his amendment, and then I will ask for five minutes in reply.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment shall proceed for not more than 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. I should like five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who else?

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the gentleman say not later than 6 o'clock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment close not later than 6 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that debate upon this amendment close not later than 6 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, a speaker in the House of Commons once had supported a measure so half-heartedly and dejectedly that the opponent who followed him suggested that he ought to have used the words of Marc Antony, "I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him." [Laughter.] I think that is very appropriate to the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. While I agree with his conclusion I entirely differ from the logical or rather the illogical process by which he reached it. After his powerful and enthusiastic support of this proposition it is perhaps superfluous to further defend it, but I wish to comment a little on the reasons he set forth for criticizing the President.

His first criticism was for using this money for a political trip. I set him right before he had gone far on that, for it is a fact that the President's trips to Ohio and Massachusetts and New Jersey were not paid for out of this fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that those trips had been paid for out of this fund, but I said, in the President's trips paid for by this fund he had indulged in denunciation of the other party.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the gentleman had these trips in mind from his description of them. The next criticism that he made was that the President was an attraction at county fairs, and so forth. If I wished to be as partisan as he I might respond that if the Democratic Party should elect their President, he probably would not be an attraction at any fair. But I do not wish to be so unfair and fallacious as the gentleman from New York. I think the President of the United States is, and I hope he always will be, an attraction at any and every meeting. I think it is well for the people and for the President himself, and that is the reason I have always supported this travel fund, to traverse the country and become acquainted with the people in the different sections. It is well for the people of the country, it promotes unity and patriotism and nationalism for them to see the President. But it is not seemly I think that the President's expenses should be paid by the cities that he visits. He could not afford to pay them himself, and the cities would doubtless be glad to, but I think it would inaugurate a bad system. I presume every Member of this Congress feels that when he visits towns in his district and attends celebrations he does not want them to pay his expenses. He wishes to be independent and not to have them feel or feel himself that he is under obligations, and the President is in exactly the same condition. If the President is to travel at all, as I think he ought to, it is the Nation that should pay the expenses.

The next criticism was that the expenses of the Secret Service men were paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say, Mr. Chairman, that the Secret Service men were paid out of this appropriation. I said that the Secret Service fund was depleted to pay the expenses of the trip.

Mr. GILLETT. And it ought to be. It may not be technically correct that the Secret Service men, who are nominally employed to prevent counterfeiting, should protect the life of the President; but he must be protected in some way, and for years it has been acquiesced in by this House and by the Appropriation Committee that the fund of the Secret Service should be employed for the protection of the President, although appropriated for a different purpose, and when this trip was made to the far West, if the President had tried to pay the expenses of all the newspaper and Secret Service men out of his appropriation, that one trip would have more than exhausted the whole appropriation. I see nothing improper in arranging that the newspaper men should pay their share of the expenses. The Secret Service men, in going on that trip, should also have their expenses paid out of the Secret Service fund, for it is well understood that guarding the President is one of the purposes of that fund. So it seems to me that all the criticism that the gentleman from New York has made of the President is unjustified and unfair.

It is well for the President of the United States to travel through the country and that he should have a sufficient appropriation by Congress to provide for it. I approve heartily of the payments in this administration, and I trust that the same system will be preserved, no matter who is to be President. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Massachusetts have one minute more to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does the gentleman think it is fair that the Democrats of the United States and all who are not Republicans should be taxed to pay the expenses of the President's trip during which he made the Winona speech and other speeches absolutely and entirely in the interest of his party?

Mr. GILLETT. We can not expect the President to go on a trip without occasionally making a speech in which he uses political expressions. I do not think a political trip ought to be paid for from this fund.

Mr. GRAHAM. Was not this a political trip?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not remember whether it was or whether it was not, or whether it was paid from this fund.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. Does the gentleman deny that the Winona speech was in the interest of the Democratic Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAHAM. It was not designed to be in the interest of that party.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the provision providing $25,000 for the President's traveling expenses was passed through this House in 1906 under a suspension of the rules, thereby requiring a two-thirds vote to carry. I was one of the Democrats who voted in favor of that provision, and the reasons that I stated then for my action appeal to me as strongly to-day as they did at that time, notwithstanding what has been said touching the use that has been made of this fund by the President of the United States. The whole proposition comes down to the question not whether you consider an individual President has properly used this fund, because you should not predicate a policy upon the action of one man, even a President of the United States, but whether you desire the President of the United States to travel about the country during his term of office. I can understand how some gentlemen like the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. PAGE, may believe that it is more in keeping with the dignity of the Presidency and more in accord with a complete fulfillment of his duties that he should stay at the seat of government. I have no quarrel with that view, though I do not share it. I have always believed that it was of value to the President of the United States and of value to the people of America that he should travel among them during his term of office and should thereby come more in contact with them. I have believed that it would be a good thing if the membership of this House knew by personal contact a little more of the sections other than those they live in. I believe men on that side of the aisle would frequently have a better understanding of our problems in the South if they came there among us, and I am sure that we of the South might have a better appreciation of the viewpoint of the men of the North on some questions if we went among them.

I believe that the American people thoroughly desire the opportunity of seeing their President among them, in their own midst. It may be that invitations have been extended and have been accepted by the President in the past that you and I think ought not to have been extended or accepted, but I repeat that this question should not be determined upon your opinion as to whether the present Executive has wisely or otherwise used this fund.

In all human probability the man who shall occupy the White House in the next four years will not be the present Executive, but whether it be him or some one else I am not willing to force the occupant to either stay in Washington or to travel at somebody's expense. I do not believe that it is in keeping with the dignity of the office that the President should travel at the expense of any person or persons other than the entire people of this country. [Applause.] Only the American people as a whole have the right to pay for the traveling expenses of the President of the United States. [Applause.] If he is not to have this money, then I for one say that he ought not to travel at all.

Something has been said as to the extent of his salary. I have never believed in extravagant government. I believe there is a value in having the official representatives of the people live simply and set an example of simplicity in their lives, but no man knowing the necessary expense connected with the Presidency can allege that we have done aught to bring extravagance or undue expenditure in connection with that high office, and I do not believe that we at this time can afford to adopt the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE]. [Applause.]

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to prolong this discussion, and unless I am more successful in obtaining votes than I have been in obtaining the voices of my colleagues in support of my amendment, the votes will indeed be few.

I believe that there are a great many men who think as I do about this question. I disclaim here and now, as I did before, that any political motive has prompted me in offering this amendment. I did not intend to utter one word of criticism even of the abuse in the expenditure of this money that is admitted by other gentlemen, and I should never have done so except for a question by the gentleman from Illinois.

But in conclusion I shall be entirely satisfied when this proposition has been submitted to a vote of the House, and a determination of the House will be final, so far as I am concerned, now that I have expressed my opinion and belief.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 55, noes 63.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. PAGE and Mr. CANNON) reported that there were—ayes 55, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25069, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 23799. An act to amend "An act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge, or bridges, or viaducts across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands";

H. R. 13041. An act to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 21230. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 23063. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. VARE, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOWELL, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Friday, June 14, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 14, 1912.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, thanks sincere we render unto Thee that Thou hast brought us to this time when with grateful hearts we commemorate the day that gave to our blessed land the symbol of our Union. We pray, O God, that our flag may ever be unstained and unconquered. May they prosper who put their trust in its benign shadow. May it bring peace to them that are afar and to them that are near. Bless, we pray Thee, its defenders on land and on sea. To our fellow citizens dwelling in city and in country and toiling in the field and in the mine grant, we beseech Thee, that this sacred emblem may be the symbol and the pledge of liberty, of justice, and of union. As we stand in Thy presence, we pray Thee to consecrate us anew to the service and devotion of our country.

And unto Thee, our Father, who rulest over the kingdoms of men and whose dominion endureth throughout all generations, will we offer the grateful praise of adoring hearts now and for evermore. Amen.

Mr. BACON took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. WARREN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

H. R. 13041. An act to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 20585. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 21230. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 21597. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 22261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 23063. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 23799. An act to amend "An act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge, or bridges, or viaducts across the waters between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution adopted by the Woman's Society of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, of Rochester, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation prohibiting the practice of polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Association Boards of Pharmacy, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the reciprocal interchange of certificates of the boards of pharmacy of the United States and Cuba, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. POMERENE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against an appropriation to be used for the purpose of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of peace with England, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRIGGS presented a memorial of James Robnowitz Lodge, No. 169, Independent Order B'rith Abraham, of Woodbine, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Morristown, Jersey City, Upper Montclair, Trenton, Elizabeth, and Camden, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the proposed reduction of the appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Trade Relations, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Elizabeth, Hopewell, Dutch Neck, Montclair, Jersey City, Trenton, Bordentown, New Brunswick, Hampton, and Swedesboro, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the patent laws, which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rutherford, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of West Hoboken, Union Hill, North Bergen, West New York, and Weehawken, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against any reduction of the duty on embroideries and embroidered laces, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 7050) to establish a mining experiment station in the State of Wyoming, to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 879) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 7018) to authorize the appointment of Harold Hancock Taintor to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 880) thereon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4900. A bill to provide for the erection of a public building at Altus, Okla. (Rept. No. 884); and

S. 4883. A bill to provide for the erection of a public building at Shawnee, Okla. (Rept. No. 885).

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 6734) to provide for the erection of an armory in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 886) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 6191) to provide for the disposal of certain lands in the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate concurrent resolution 22, to appoint a joint special committee of Congress to investigate rentals paid by the Government and the District of Columbia, submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 7th instant, reported it favorably with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 327, to reimburse the Sergeant at Arms for expenses incurred in bringing the officers and crew of the White Star liner Titanic from New York to Washington, and care while in Washington in attendance upon the subcommittee, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 326, authorizing the Committee on Naval Affairs to employ a stenographer to report hearings on bills or other matters pending before the committee, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 317, authorizing the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico to employ a stenographer to report hearings on bills or other matters pending before the committee, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22204) granting a right of way to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. across the Fort Mason Military Reservation in California, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 887) thereon.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I.

Mr. WETMORE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 7096) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Narragansett Pier, R. I., to report it favorably, without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 878) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to increase the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Narragansett Pier, R. I., to $80,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 7136) granting an increase of pension to Charlotte M. Snowball; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GARDNER:

A bill (S. 7137) granting an increase of pension to Albert White (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 7159) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Samuel E. Cooper; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DU PONT:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 119) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point John C. Scholtz, a citizen of Venezuela; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL (H. R. 25069).

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,000 for the construction of a rostrum at the national cemetery at Florence, S. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for paving the public street of the city of Helena, Ark., in front of the Federal Government building, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Arkansas, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LOSS OF STEAMER "TITANIC."

On motion of Mr. SMOOT, it was Ordered, That the illustrations accompanying the testimony taken in the hearings of the Titanic disaster inquiry be printed with the document.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GEORGE V. SHAFFER.

On motion of Mr. SMOOT, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 3433) granting increase of pension to George V. Shaffer, Sixty-second Congress, second session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 344) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Civil Service Commission is hereby directed to communicate to the Senate the number of persons which the State of New Hampshire is entitled to under the apportionment provision of the civil-service law; also the number now actually in the public service from that State, their names, the date of appointment in each case, and the town or city from which such appointment was made.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator if he will not accept an amendment to add "North Carolina" after "New Hampshire."

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator had better introduce a separate resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not insist if the Senator objects, but I should like to have that information in regard to my State.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on June 13, 1912, approved and signed the following act.

S. 5428. An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its chief clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 299) proposing an international maritime conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 24023, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Curtis	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Briggs	Dillingham	Overman	Stephenson
Bryan	Fletcher	Page	Sutherland
Burnham	Gallinger	Paynter	Swanson
Burton	Gardner	Perkins	Tillman
Catron	Guggenheim	Pomerene	Townsend
Clapp	Heyburn	Shively	Warren
Crawford	Johnston, Ala.	Simmons	Wetmore
Culberson	Jones	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Cullom	Lodge	Smith, Ga.

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber on important business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is not present.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BRISTOW, Mr. BROWN, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. LIPPITT, and Mr. MCLEAN answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. WARREN. There are several pending matters—the civil-service matter, the Commerce Court matter, and others—that were reserved. I will ask the Secretary to state the first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Wyoming will indulge the Chair for a moment, the Chair will state the status of the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Day before yesterday——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey will indulge the Chair until the Chair states the status of the bill before the Senate. The bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, but there has been no action taken upon the amendments which were adopted as in Committee of the Whole. It was at that stage that the Senate yesterday afternoon adjourned. The Chair makes this statement for the information of the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Day before yesterday I submitted a motion to relieve the Judiciary Committee from the further consideration of House bill 23635, known as the anti-injunction bill. Under objection the motion went over. I now most respectfully renew that motion.

Mr. WARREN. The motion is not in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It will take but a minute. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's bill, but I trust——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the Senate has taken up the appropriation bill, and it is now the regular order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I ask the chairman of the committee to withhold for a moment until we can pass on this question?

Mr. WARREN. I can not consent, because I have refused at least half a dozen Senators who wished to call up different bills, and it is a matter of honor as to the unfinished business. I am not antagonizing the Senator's wish to promote his measure; I am not against him; but the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has consented to withhold only for the appropriation bill, and I must insist that the Senate shall proceed now with this measure to its conclusion.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, that being the case, I give notice that I shall call up the motion to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the routine business or at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The notice will be noted. The question before the Senate is upon concurring in the amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole other than those concerning which reservations have been made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to make an additional reservation, which is the provision on page 10, lines 3, 4, and 5, increasing the number of privates of the police force in the Senate Office Building; also on page 12, the provision in lines 12 and 13 with reference to the Maltby Building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reservations, notice of which is to be given——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that amongst the reservations that have been made are the amendments to sections 4 and 5, in reference to the tenure of office of civil-service employees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that those amendments have been reserved. If there are no other reservations, without objection, the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole will be considered as concurred in in the Senate. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, on yesterday there was some discussion in reference to certain officers in the offices of the assistant treasurers at Chicago and at Boston. I said nothing on that occasion because I was not aware of the conditions. I have talked with the chairman of the committee, and I now ask that an increase be made in the case of the vault clerk at Chicago to $2,250, which is the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury; and also an increase to $2,500 as to the salary of the paying teller, and that the salary of the assorting teller be increased to $2,000. These are small increases, and I ask that they be made because it is important that it should be done. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended them, but the House cut them down. It is now in order to offer the amendments. I ask that those three amendments be made. While I shall allow others to go for the present, I feel it very important that these three cases shall be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. They are according to the estimates, and are in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, in the provision for office of the assistant treasurer at Chicago, in line 2, after the words "vault clerk," it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,250."

Mr. CULLOM. That is according to the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 3, after the words "paying teller," it is proposed to strike out "$2,000" and to insert "$2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 3, after the words "assorting teller," it is proposed to strike out "$1,800" and to insert "$2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to say that the office of assistant treasurer at Chicago is the largest office of that character in the country except the one in New York. There are $100,000,000 on deposit there now and the office does an immense business. There ought to be an increase all along the line in the salaries of those connected with that office, but I shall not ask for it at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to section 10, to follow immediately the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], which has already been adopted. In presenting it I desire to say that it is the same amendment that I mentioned yesterday, differing only in form. Instead of applying in general terms section 266 of the judiciary code to these cases, I have written out section 266, so that there can be no misapprehension or misinterpretation concerning it.

The only other change is that I have added a provision which will require the same number of judges to sit and determine such suits upon the final hearing as is required for the issuance of a temporary injunction, and I have provided that from that final hearing the appeal shall lie direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before the amendment is read I should like to suggest that the provision as amended on motion of my colleague [Mr. NELSON] be read, so that it may be again before us. It has been two or three days since it was adopted.

The SECRETARY. In section 10, on page 158, Mr. NELSON offered the following amendment——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to suggest that the entire section with the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not ask that the whole section be read before the amendment is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will all afterwards be read consecutively.

The SECRETARY. In section 10, page 158, Mr. NELSON offered the following amendment, which was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole:

And the procedure in the district courts shall be the same as heretofore in the Commerce Court, and the right of appeal from the district courts shall be the same as heretofore from the Commerce Court.

It is now proposed to add after those words the following:

No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order made or entered by the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit court judge and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. When such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court or to a judge he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided however, That one of such three judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court or any circuit or district judge may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence, and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case, and upon the final hearing of any suit brought to annul, enjoin, or restrain any order of said commission the same requirement as to judges and the same procedure as to appeal shall apply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer as a further amendment to section 10, to immediately follow the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the amendment I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what page does the Senator desire the amendment to come in?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It should come in on page 147.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before the proposed amendment is read, I suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia be read again, as it has been several days since it was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Georgia heretofore adopted.

The SECRETARY. The amendment heretofore adopted on the motion of Mr. SMITH of Georgia reads as follows:

The 5 additional circuit judgeships provided for by the act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, and by chapter 9 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, are hereby abolished, and the authority in said acts of Congress for the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint 5 additional circuit judges is hereby repealed, and the number of circuit judges is hereby reduced to 29.

To follow the amendment just read, Mr. CUMMINS offers an amendment to read as follows:

So much of the act of June 18, 1910, as provides or authorizes or directs the said five judges to preside in the circuit courts of the United States or in the circuit courts of appeal, or to exercise any of the powers, duties, or authority of circuit judges or of said circuit courts or of said circuit courts of appeal is hereby repealed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was under the impression that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia had been transferred to section 10. However, it is as pertinent on page 147 as though it were incorporated in the other place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Iowa should be adopted, and the Senate, upon the separate vote which has been demanded upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, should not concur in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, would it be in order to consider then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Utah that the amendment now offered by the Senator from Iowa, while it is an addition, does not, in the opinion of the Chair, appear to be a part of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia having been adopted as in Committee of the Whole, the amendment now offered by the Senator from Iowa would be an independent question. If this were an amendment which changed the terms of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, the Chair would rule otherwise, but this appears to be simply an addition, without in any manner changing the terms of that amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So that, if it should turn out that the Senate should decline to concur in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia and adopted as in Committee of the Whole, the amendment of the Senator from Iowa would be in the bill as a separate amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the ruling of the Chair that would be so; but if the Senate prefers to consider it as a whole the Chair will submit the question in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Has not the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia been concurred in by the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] gave notice on yesterday reserving that amendment for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had forgotten that, but I now remember it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether he will not defer the vote upon his proposed amendment until the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is finally disposed of?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that is a very reasonable request, for if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia is not agreed to, I would not offer my amendment, inasmuch as it is offered simply to perfect and to carry out the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Iowa takes his seat, I desire to call his attention to what may be an inadvertence in his amendment. He has omitted to enumerate the district courts; that is to say, the amendment provides that the present Commerce Court judges may not be assigned to preside in the circuit courts of the United States or the circuit courts of appeal, while the act provides that the Chief Justice may assign them to those services and also to the district courts.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Idaho is right. I will withdraw the amendment I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state that under the statement made by the Senator from Iowa that the amendment now offered by him is not simply an addition to, but is intended to carry out and to make effectual the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, it really would be considered as a part of that amendment; and in that case the two would necessarily be considered together.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is effectual without my amendment, but in order to foreclose any doubt at all I offered it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to a matter which he has probably overlooked. His amendment relates to the act of June 18, 1910, by name. That act was expressly repealed by the one approved March 3, 1911, which incorporates the Commerce Court provision in the judicial code, so that the repeal of the act of 1910 by his amendment is not effectual. What he ought to do is to propose to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1911, contained in chapter 9 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws of the United States as relates to the Commerce Court.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had not noticed the reference, because I did not personally prepare this amendment, but that can be arranged by the withdrawal of the amendment for the time being until the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair understands that the Senator withdraws the amendment for the time being, and the question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Utah to ask that the amendment now be acted upon?

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understood and had so announced.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I give notice that I will offer it if the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it proper now to offer the amendment which I proposed last evening, or a similar amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is, unless the Senator from Utah has called up that amendment. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I did not call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The amendment is in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, which I propose to add at the end of section 10 as amended by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. It will come at the end of his amendment. He redrafted section 266, as I understand. It is to come in at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, which was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, at the end of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, to insert the following:

The provisions of this section shall also apply to issuing and granting of interlocutory injunctions suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statutes of a State.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], as he will remember, prepared this draft originally, having in view the requirements of its provisions where the enforcement of a statute of a State is involved.

Mr. OVERMAN. This proposes to extend it to all orders of a commission?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

I wish to explain that the courts—and it came up directly in a proceeding in my own State—construe that section to apply only to those statutes relating to schedules made in relation to the rates charged by railways and express companies; that it applies only to those statutes which in terms, in the body of the statute, enacted the schedule; and that the language was not broad enough and did not extend to orders made by boards of railway commissioners fixing maximum rates.

For instance, the board of railway commissioners in my own State, acting under a statute of the State, fixed the maximum rate for the express companies upon their business purely intrastate. A district judge issued a preliminary injunction, without reference to this section, and when the matter came before the court upon argument it was held that the statute which the distinguished Senator drew applied only to State statutes which in terms fixed these rates, and was not broad enough to extend to orders made by boards of railway commissioners. So the amendment I offer is to extend its provisions so that they will apply to administrative boards and commissions created by the statute of a State and acting under the statute of the State.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is a very wise provision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, agreed to, on page 158, it is proposed to insert:

The provisions of this section shall also apply to issuing and granting of interlocutory injunctions suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statutes of a State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think it is a very unfortunate practice to put upon appropriation bills amendments of this character which put into operation very important rules of law and make very important changes in existing law. I do not think any of us can tell from the reading of the amendment just how wide its scope may be. It refers to any administrative board. It is not confined to a railway commission dealing with railway rates, but it may apply to any administrative board. It may apply to a case where a board by some action is depriving a citizen of his civil rights or to any other case where he would have a right under the Constitution or the laws of the United States to an injunction.

Then, again, the amendment proposes that the provisions of this section as amended shall apply. Among the provisions of the section is that notice shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States or upon the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the Senator will find that the language includes not simply the Attorney General, but in a case where a State statute is involved it provides that notice shall be served upon the officers of the State. This, of course, makes it applicable only so far as concerns injunctions against——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator's amendment does not make applicable section 266 of the code, as I understand, but it makes applicable the provisions of the section in this legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It could not be construed to make applicable provisions entirely foreign to these orders. That would hardly be a reasonable construction of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I entirely sympathize with the proposition that any application for an injunction against the State or the State officers, based upon the claim that the State statutes are opposed to the Constitution of the United States, should be heard by the three judges. I quite agree to that. And I quite agree that that principle ought to be extended so as to include railway commissions acting under a statute; but I should have to know more about the scope of this amendment—what it is going to result in—before I would be willing to consent to extend that principle to every administrative board in the State.

I think it is a dangerous thing to undertake to put legislation of this character upon an appropriation bill—legislation that has never been considered by any committee of the Senate. Not because I am opposed to the principle, as I have stated, but for the other reason suggested, I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will withhold the point of order for a moment, I desire to ask a question which may throw some light upon it. If we abolish this court, will the provisions that existed before the establishment of this court, in regard to appealing from the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission, be in effect or would we be entirely without any provision, having abolished the Court of Commerce, for reviewing the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I understand not. I understand the section as now amended provides for that review being had by these three judges.

Mr. HEYBURN. The original law would not be applicable at all; the original law in regard to reviewing the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission is out of effect now, and it would not be revived by anything we do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should say not.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, should we not confine ourselves to merely substituting the United States district courts with the same rights and powers? And is this an appropriate time to attempt to amend or extend the powers of review? I should think not. I am in accord with the opinion, as I understand it, of the Senator from Utah, that whenever we attempt to enlarge or add anything to the provisions now existing, which are really transferred to another court without addition or subtraction, that that is as far as we should go at this time. We ought not to attempt to legislate beyond the scope of existing powers vested in the court that we abolish.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question? I think he has the floor. I want to know if that question has been decided by the circuit court of appeals. Where was that question raised?

Mr. CRAWFORD. In litigation now pending, arising from an act which South Dakota enacted two years ago. It has not been decided by the court of appeals, but was by the circuit court; and the impression is that the decision of the court is well founded because of the narrow language used.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was the case appealed to the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it is pending there now.

Mr. OVERMAN. There was a case from Kansas taken up to the circuit court of appeals, and it was finally carried to the Supreme Court, and the law was upheld; and I did not know but that it had the broadening effect the Senator speaks of. I may be mistaken about it. Therefore I do not see why this should not be covered by the amendment. If it is not broad enough it should be broadened.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the point. We are not here taking any substantial rights from anybody. We are not even curtailing or limiting in any way the right and power to issue preliminary injunctions. We are simply providing a method under which the courts must act in issuing preliminary injunctions that will protect the States from what appears to have been an abuse.

The amendment I have proposed is no more subject to a point of order than the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa which the Senate has already adopted. That simply extends the provisions of section 266 to preliminary injunctions against orders made by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This amendment will simply extend it in the same manner exactly to injunctions against orders made by administrative boards of a State.

Now, there is not any difference in principle or in effect between its requirements as it would apply to a State board of railway commissioners and as it might apply possibly to some other administrative board created under and acting in reference to a State statute. It could involve a constitutional right in one case as in the other, and it seems to me it would be a discrimination that might make it subject to objection that it was class legislation to undertake to specify that it should apply to boards of railway commissioners. The boards of railway commissioners or some other administrative tribunal of a State making these orders under a State law are governed by the same fundamental principles, and the language of the amendment as it is proposed would include one as it would include the other. Undoubtedly in practically all the cases which would arise under it the subject of difference would lie upon the one part with the board of railway commissioners of a State.

It has been a subject of great irritation and annoyance to have solemn acts of the State legislature and orders made by boards under acts of a State legislature rendered ineffective by the hasty arbitrary issuance of preliminary injunctions by district judges. There has been grave abuse in that direction, and the Senator from North Carolina, with whom I had a number of conferences at the time—he drew this provision in section 266 when the railway legislation was up a couple of years ago—was undertaking and intended to cover these orders of State boards, as well as the naked provisions of a State statute. But as the provision has been construed the great majority of the cases which arise are not within it and the purpose of this amendment is to make it include them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the point of order made by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make the point of order under clause 3 of Rule XVI, first, that the amendment proposes general legislation, and, second, that it is not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill. Certainly the latter point is clearly good, because there is not a syllable in this bill to which an amendment of this character can by any stretch of the imagination apply.

This is an appropriation bill, and this particular part of it proposes to transfer the jurisdiction of the Commerce Court to certain other courts, and provides that in proceedings involving cases heretofore under the jurisdiction of the Commerce Court a certain number of judges shall act. Now it is proposed to provide, in addition to that, that these judges shall act upon a totally different class of cases, to which class of cases this bill does not in the remotest degree refer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply desire to say that the Senate has already adopted the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which does put into that law legislation upon this very subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] raises the question as to whether this amendment is germane to the amendment already adopted. Under the rule of the Senate the Chair is compelled to submit that question to the Senate. The Chair will state that if limited to the question of general legislation, the Chair would rule that it is in order, on the ground that it is an amendment to a subject matter that the Senate has already incorporated in the bill, but the question of its being germane the Chair must submit to the Senate under the rule.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. In the question the Chair suggests as to whether it is germane, as I understand it, the question is whether it is germane to the subject contained in the amendment already adopted by the Senate which was offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that to be the question. The Senator from South Dakota having offered an amendment to the amendment already adopted, or an addition to it, the Senator from Utah raises the question as to whether it is or is not germane, and the Chair submits that question to the Senate under the rule.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the amendment already adopted and the proposed amendment both be read together?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will again be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] offered an amendment, on page 158, to follow an amendment on that page already agreed to, offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. The amendment reads:

No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any order made or entered by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit court judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. When such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided, however, That one of such three judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence, and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing and interlocutory injunction in such case; and upon the final hearing of any suit brought to annul, enjoin, or restrain any order of said commission the same requirement as to judges and the same procedure as to appeal shall apply.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator offering the amendment to the fact that in the earlier part of it he uses the term "judge of a circuit court." There is no such office now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is in the amendment already adopted.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no such court. There are circuit judges who sit in the circuit court of appeals, but there is no circuit court. That can be readily corrected. It should be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now read the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment just read, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] moves to add the following:

The provisions of this section shall also apply to issuing and granting of interlocutory injunctions suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statutes of a State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] germane? Those who consider the amendment germane will say "aye," opposed "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the Senate determines that the amendment is germane and in order. The question now is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota again to the fact that his amendment, if adopted, will require in every suit that may be brought under it service of notice upon the Attorney General of the United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not think he desires that that result should follow.

It still further emphasizes what I have already said as to the unwisdom of undertaking to legislate in this way in the open Senate upon a subject of this far-reaching importance. There is already a bill of this same character, I understand, introduced by the Senator from South Dakota, pending in the Judiciary Committee. The Senator shakes his head, but I understood that such a bill had been introduced. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No such bill has been introduced.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I am in error about that; but certainly such a bill could be introduced and referred to the Judiciary Committee, and by that committee taken up in an orderly way, and the whole subject considered.

I think, Mr. President, we are doing here an unwise thing in undertaking to pass legislation of this character, the exact scope and effect of which at least some of us have doubts about.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa provides for the service of notice in each of these cases upon the defendants in the case. It is a pretty far fetched objection to construe the requirements to go so far as to require service upon some one entirely foreign to the case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The provision of the section which the Senator from South Dakota now undertakes to make applicable to the class of cases mentioned in his amendment is as follows:

Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit.

It must be given to all. It must be given to the defendants; it must be given to the Attorney General; it must be given to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Suppose a suit is brought against some administrative board of the State not in any manner connected with railroad matters, why should notice be served upon the Attorney General of the United States? Indeed, why should notice be served upon the Attorney General of the United States in a suit against the railway commission in a State? He has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will ask to perfect the amendment by adding "that in such case the notice required shall be served upon the defendants in the case and upon the attorney general of the State."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota as modified. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for a division.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when Mr. GAMBLE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. GARDNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE]. On this question I transfer my pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. KERN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. Observing that he is not in the Chamber, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM], who is absent from the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I understand that I am at liberty to transfer my pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I do, and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." Observing the pair, however, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McLEAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and withhold my vote.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and therefore I withhold my vote. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], but he will stand paired during the consideration of the bill to-day and on this subject with the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I make this announcement for the day.

My colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming], who is absent on business of the Senate, has a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], and I also make that announcement for the day.

Mr. BRIGGS. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the provisions of that transfer I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OWEN] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I wish to announce my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. JONES. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber on important business. I make this announcement for the remainder of the day.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As the transfer of my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] will not stand, I will transfer my pair [Mr. DAVIS], who I am informed would vote "yea," to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], which will permit my vote to stand, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is at liberty to vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I am informed that under the transfer of pairs I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Ashurst	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bacon	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.

So Mr. CRAWFORD'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The amendment to the amendment is adopted. Now the amendment as amended, I suppose, is the next question, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original amendment was adopted. This was an additional amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. And now it has been amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it does not change in any manner the status of the action of the Senate in the adoption of the prior amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. My purpose in inquiring was that the RECORD might show my justification in asking unanimous consent that in line 10, where the word "court" last appears, that word be stricken out, because there is no such court, and I call attention to the fact.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that. I followed the language of the judicial code precisely. This will all be in conference, and the conference committee can change the phraseology if necessary.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is an amendment now before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not yet disposed of the request made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] for unanimous consent for the striking out of the word "court." Does the Chair understand that to be the motion of the Senator?

Mr. HEYBURN. It not being amendable, I ask unanimous consent that the word "court" be stricken out, it obviously not having a proper place there.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection at all to that.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, section 10 was adopted, as in Committee of the Whole, with one amendment, the amendment offered by myself, yet it was excepted when the bill was reported to the Senate. We have amended it by two separate amendments; so the question now before the Senate is upon concurring in section 10 as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is correct as to that. The response which the Chair made was as to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. He misunderstood the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. And there was no objection to my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no objection, as the Chair understood, to unanimous consent to striking out the word "court," as requested by the Senator from Idaho. The question now is upon concurring in the section to which two amendments have been added this morning—section 10 of the original bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole and as amended by the action of the Senate to-day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, is it now in order to call up the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not unless it is an amendment to section 10, the section to which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has referred.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought that had been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I misunderstood the status.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that section 10 is the one to which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] referred and to which each of these amendments has been added.

Mr. NELSON. Exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the adoption of section 10.

Mr. NELSON. As amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As amended by the action of the Senate to-day [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it, and section 10 as amended is concurred in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask now for a vote—I do not now recall in just what part of the bill it occurs—on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it is under the title of "Judicial," on page 147. The amendment will be reported to the Senate. It is the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia and adopted as in Committee of the Whole. The question now is upon its adoption by the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 147, after line 10, the following amendment was inserted:

> The five additional circuit judgeships provided for by the act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, and by chapter 9 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, are hereby abolished, and the authority in said acts of Congress for the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint five additional circuit judges is hereby repealed, and the number of circuit judges is hereby reduced to 29.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can not give my consent to the proposition that with the exception of the Supreme Court of the United States it is in the power of Congress to abolish any court, nor that it is in the power of Congress to destroy the term of office of any judge appointed to any of those courts. Believing that this precedent will at some time in the history of the country come back to plague us if adopted, and desiring a record vote directly upon that proposition, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words inserted as in Committee of the Whole on the motion of Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. MCCUMBER now proposes to insert the following:

That five additional circuit judges appointed under the provisions of an act to create a Commerce Court, approved June 18, 1910, shall from time to time be assigned by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in any district court or the circuit court of appeals for any circuit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota offers this as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. LODGE. It is an amendment to strike out and insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is to strike out the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MCCUMBER. That is the effect of the motion, Mr. President, to strike out the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole, known as the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, and to insert in lieu thereof the language which has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In order to prevent any misconstruction subsequently, the Chair will state that the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is now before the Senate as if originally offered; in other words, it is an amendment proposed in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment was adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. And agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. And agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it has not been concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. This is a motion to strike out and insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a part of the bill as the bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not, but this is a motion to substitute other language for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is undoubtedly true, but the Chair desires to recall attention to the fact that it does not occupy the same status that it would if it were an amendment proposing to strike out a paragraph of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. It is to strike out from the report of the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; but it is pending now before the Senate subject to all the features which would attach to an amendment offered in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, is it in order to submit an observation on the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter upon any discussion of this question and I shall only state my conclusions with reference to it. I am fully aware that nothing I may say will have any effect on the action of this body, as Senators have their minds settled as to what they should do.

I was opposed to the establishment of the Commerce Court, and if there was a vote upon that question as a separate measure, I voted against it. I know the record shows that I was opposed to the creation of the court. I voted, however, for the bill which contained a provision for the court, because it had so many valuable provisions in it that I did not think I should allow my opposition to the establishment of the Commerce Court to prevent me from voting for the measure. I believe that Congress is without power to remove from office the circuit judges who preside over the Commerce Court for the time being. The repeal of the act creating the Commerce Court could not have the effect of abolishing the judgeships. They are not judges of the Commerce Court, but circuit judges assigned for a time to preside over that court. The duties they are to thus perform are only part of the duties which they are required by law to perform. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia does not attempt to abolish the circuits in the districts from which they were appointed. The circuit courts remain. The practical effect of the proposed amendment is simply to remove from office five circuit court judges. The effect is not to abolish the circuit courts, but to remove the judges. In my opinion, the amendment will be invalid if it passes, and I am opposed to it on that ground. Even if Congress had the power to enact it into a law I would still be opposed to it, because of its revolutionary character. It threatens the independence of the judiciary. Unless the independence of the judiciary is maintained, the right to life, property, and the pursuit of happiness is in jeopardy. If Congress is in political accord with the Executive, every circuit judge might, in the manner here proposed, be removed from office and their places filled by the political adherents of the administration. The effect of such an act would be nothing short of revolution. Therefore I say such legislation has a strong revolutionary tendency, and I can not give my consent to it.

While I was opposed to the establishment of the Commerce Court I would not have voted to abolish it for the reasons which most of the Senators gave who so voted, to wit: That that court had rendered decisions that did not meet with their approval. I had the honor to serve upon a bench for some years, and I know how easy it is for courts to err. I have seen, in my judgment, this great body of men commit as great errors as the courts of the country, including the Court of Commerce, have committed. So it is human to err.

I am opposed to the recall of judges because they may render opinions that may not meet with popular favor; I am opposed to the recall of judicial decisions; and I am opposed to this method of trying to get rid of five judges, who, it seems, are objectionable to many Members of this body. I therefore shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I shall, however, vote in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, to insert the words just read in lieu of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, which has been adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN and Mr. LODGE. On that the Senator from North Dakota asked for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota has asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the question is on the substitute amendment of the Senator from North Dakota for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIGGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST (when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S name was called). I am authorized to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and that the Senator from Oregon is necessarily absent from the Senate Chamber on official business.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GARDNER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. KERN'S name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. KERN] from the Senate Chamber, and the fact that he is paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS]. I desire this announcement to stand for the rest of the day.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is absent from the Chamber; but I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea" on this question; so I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], but I understand that the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER], who is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE], has transferred his pair to the Senator from Missouri, so that I am at liberty to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, and I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP (when Mr. THORNTON'S name was called). The junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is paired on this vote with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] has transferred his pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I am therefore at liberty to vote, and desire to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. As already announced, I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a pair, is not present and has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. Noticing that that Senator has not voted, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I will let this announcement stand for the rest of the day.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. CRANE], who is now paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], if present would vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN. When my name was called I announced a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I do not know how that Senator would vote if present, but I desire to say that were I at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. PERCY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—23.

So Mr. MCCUMBER'S amendment to the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As I understand, the question now is upon the amendment which I reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon concurring in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. CRANE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CRANE], who is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] would, if present, vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer it to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer it to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. Under the transfer made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I understand I am at liberty to vote and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the negative). Inadvertently I voted. I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer it to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand I am now at liberty to transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. I so transfer it, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT. I again announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. In pursuance of the transfer of pairs announced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire again to announce my general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has a pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] has a pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I will let that statement stand as to all votes relating to the Commerce Court.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to make the announcement for the remainder of the day that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] is necessarily absent and has a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. ASHURST. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], and that the Senator from Oregon is necessarily absent from the Chamber.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—28.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a personal statement about pairs. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. On the vote on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, offered as a substitute, I voted when my name was called, thinking the Senator from Delaware would come in. The matter passed from my mind, and I let my vote stand, although the Senator from Delaware did not come in and vote. The vote was 25 to 23. My vote would not have changed the result, else I should very gladly move to reconsider and have the matter righted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment to immediately follow the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 147, following the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, just agreed to, insert:

So much of the act of June 18, 1910, and of March 3, 1911, authorizes or directs the said five judges to preside in the circuit or district courts of the United States or in the circuit courts of appeal or to exercise any of the powers, duties, or authority of circuit or district judges or of said circuit or district courts or of said circuit courts of appeal is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection it will be so ordered. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Mississippi will yield, there is another amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And which will perfect it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withhold my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will ask whether the reservation carried with it also the two other amendments, one as to the amount appropriated for the salaries of these judges and the other as to the total. If it did, I ask that they be passed on.

Mr. WARREN. The matter of totals has already been provided for by unanimous consent. The clerk has been instructed on the finishing of the bill to correct all totals.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That does not take care of the provision in line 7.

Mr. WARREN. It takes care of the totals only.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not take care of the provision in line 7, which refers to 34 circuit judges instead of 29, and I call attention to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 147, line 7, strike out "thirty-four" before the words "circuit judges" and in lieu insert "twenty-nine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment I had printed and gave notice of on yesterday. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. That the Senate amendment striking out the House provision numbered section 5, beginning on line 19, page 152, and including line 21, page 153, be disagreed to, and that the House provision be adopted with the following amendments:

First. After the semicolon in line 1, page 153, all the language in lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, down to the word "provided" in line 7, be stricken out.

Second. That after the word "shall," in line 8, page 153, there be inserted the words "except as hereinafter prescribed"; that in line 12, page 153, the word "fair" be stricken out; and that after the word "efficiency," in line 12, page 153, these words be inserted: "prescribed by the Civil Service Commission," so that the provision as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That on and after July 1, 1913, all appointments to positions in the classified service of the executive departments within the District of Columbia provided for at annual rates of compensation shall be made, after the probationary period of six months shall have expired, for terms of five years each; at the expiration of each such appointment the employment of each person so appointed shall cease and determine: Provided, That all persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall, except as hereinafter prescribed, be eligible for, and may, in the discretion of the head of the executive department, be reappointed without examination for additional periods of five years if at the time of such reappointment they shall be up to a standard of efficiency prescribed by the Civil Service Commission and capable of rendering a full measure of service in return for the salary of the place to which they may be appointed: Provided further, That in reducing the force in any of the executive departments no honorably discharged soldier or sailor whose record in said department is rated good shall be discharged or dropped: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the head of any department from removing any time for good and sufficient cause any employee of his department."

That in the Senate committee amendment, after the word "promoted," in line 5, page 154, there be inserted the words "or reappointed at the end of his five years' service"; and in line 6, strike out the words "below which no employee may fall without being demoted," and insert, after the word "rating" in line 6, this language, "and any employee having this rating shall be reappointed to a place in the service, unless on charges made he shall be deemed in character unfit," so that the amendment shall read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted or reappointed at the end of his five years' service; it shall also provide a maximum rating, and any employee having this rating shall be reappointed to a place in the service, unless on charges made he shall be deemed in character unfit; it shall further provide for a service maximum rating below which no employee may fall, without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules. Copies of all records of efficiency shall be furnished by the departments and independent establishments to the Civil Service Commission for record in accordance with the provisions of this section."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to consume any time of the Senate in the discussion of this amendment, but believing that it would be very disastrous to the civil service of this country I feel that it is my duty to record some of the conclusions that I hold with respect to the subject.

I believe that the employees of the civil service of the United States compose as faithful, efficient, loyal, and competent a body as ever served the public in any country of the world. I will go further; I believe them to be as efficient and as faithful as ever served any private enterprise in the country. I do not believe that, as a whole, they are overpaid. I believe that some of them are overpaid and that some of them are underpaid. I believe that owing to a duplication of work, which unfortunately exists in many departments, and owing to a faulty system under which the work is done, we have more employees than we ought to have, and that with proper care with respect to the duplication of labor and proper care with respect to the system under which the work is done we could dispense with a great many of the civil-service employees; and I am heartily for a readjustment which will reach these results.

I believe that in the higher grades of service the United States is paying less to its men and its women than is paid for like service anywhere in the country, and I hope the time will come when we can readjust this system so that every man and every woman will receive that which he or she fairly and honestly earns.

This civil service of ours has five defects, and I feel obliged to speak of them, because the amendments proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will, if not destroy, radically revolutionize the system. The first is that the law should prescribe what employees should be in the civil service or rather under civil service rules, what employees should enter upon merit, upon competitive examination; and that power should not have been remitted to the Executive. I think it is the duty of Congress to speedily take up the subject and prescribe by a statute what employees of this country shall enter upon examination and shall be governed by the rules of the civil service.

Second, there should be a reclassification of the civil service employees in the departments, so that the grade held by a particular employee would indicate the importance and the quality of the work in which he is engaged. As it is now, promotions are personal. Although I do not say that the power of the head of a department is often misused, nevertheless it is misused. It is not infrequent to see an employee receiving a salary of $1,000 sitting side by side with an employee who is receiving $1,200 or $1,400 per year, and the two men engaged in doing exactly the same kind of work; and it is too often true that the employee receiving the lowest salary does the more work.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator allow an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. If it will not interfere with the course of the Senator's argument, it does seem to me that that very point, the fact that there is no such thing as promotion, but there is merely provision made for increasing certain salaries, the clerks receiving the increased salary still working at the same desk and doing the same work, ought to be emphasized, because there is an impression that there is a system of promotion when in fact it is not promotion, it is merely an increase of salary. If the Senator will pardon me, it seems to me that this is a good place to make that plain to the public in the speech which he is making.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad the Senator from Minnesota has emphasized the thought I had just expressed. One of the manifest defects in our system now is that there is no uniformity in the character or importance of the work that is being done by the employees who receive the same compensation. We ought to have a system into which men and women will enter in the low grades, and as they become more efficient, as their training becomes more perfect, then they ought to be advanced by grades to higher and more difficult work, and their compensation should be increased accordingly.

I may say to the Senate that the committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has had that question under investigation for now a year and a half at least, and a bill has been prepared, which would have been introduced long ago had not this session apparently been given over to other subjects, in which provision is made for a reclassification of all the civil-service employees and a readjustment, so that each clerk will take the place which he ought to have.

The third defect in our system, and it is a corollary of the second, is as to promotions. Promotions should be from grade to grade and promotions should be upon merit alone. We have devised a system, so far as I think we can go, requiring that entrances to the civil service shall be upon merit. We need now to devise a system by which, after entrance is successfully made, promotion shall also be made upon merit, and without any regard to political influence or the favoritism of any chief of a bureau or head of a department.

I may say this also is a subject which is under consideration. The committee of which I am chairman will propose presently a system or a plan by which the ratings, the markings of every employee shall be made as accurately as human foresight can make them accurate, and shall be so posted and so exhibited and so dealt with that there will be no possibility that they can be ignored when promotions or changes take place.

The fourth defect is that we have no provision for the retirement of our civil-service employees. We have a great many men and women above the age at which it is possible to do efficient work, and the common sentiments of the human heart prevent heads of departments from dismissing these employees, even although they have become incompetent by age, especially when it is known to the heads of departments that if they are dismissed, having been somewhat improvident during their connection with the Government, they are dismissed to a life of poverty and want. Therefore, I think it is true that every man when he reaches a certain age should be dismissed from the service, and every woman should be dismissed or discharged also upon arriving at an age to be fixed by Congress.

The bill that is now before the Senate on the calendar provides that when a civil-service employee of the first class, which really embraces all the clerical employments, arrives at the age of 70 years he shall retire. There is no discretion reposed in any department for the retention of such an employee except that he may be retained for a period of two years, if especial efficiency or value is shown.

Of the other class—that is, those employees whose service involves severe physical exertion or labor—the retirement is to be at the age of 65 years, and it is mandatory also with the limitation or condition I have just suggested. In this way, Mr. President, the civil service will be purged of its inefficient employees so far as the inefficiency arises from accumulating years.

This measure, to which I have referred, creates a retiring allowance, solely, however, from a fund accumulated by the employees themselves, except as to those employees now in the service and who will retire within a period of 20 years. I do not agree with the Senator from Mississippi that a compulsory saving system will be the forerunner of an unjust increase of compensation. What he says is an impeachment, as it seems to me, upon the resolution and the wisdom and the intelligence of Congress. All compensation should be great enough to enable the person who receives it to live with fair economy and save enough to support himself during those years in which, according to the decrees of nature, he will be incompetent or incapable of labor. I think that when the salaries of our employees are properly adjusted they ought to be compelled to save enough to make a provision for their old age, and I do not believe that the amount which they will be required to save from month to month will be used or can be used as a basis for increase of compensation, assuming always that the compensation is what it ought to be.

Recurring to the statement with which I began, I believe that some of the employees receive too much now; I believe some of them receive too little; and it is one of our highest duties to correct the injustice which now prevails by such a readjustment of salaries as will pay every man and every woman, too, for the work actually done according to the civilized standards of our own country.

The bill to which I refer bridges over the period between the present time and the moment at which the contributory system will become fully effective and fully self-sustaining by making an appropriation looking to a payment to those employees who will retire at the ages which I have already suggested and who can not in the very nature of things create the fund which will enable them to live in decency and comfort after their retirement. That, however, is a mere incident to the plan.

The plan itself is the compulsory contribution of an amount which will accumulate at the retiring age the sum of $5,000, which may be invested in the purchase of an annuity or may be taken as a whole. In either event the retiring employee is left with enough to sustain life in a moderate and comfortable way of living.

I have now suggested the four defects of our present civil-service system. They are all removable with a little diligence on the part of Congress. There is one defect in the system which never can be removed. It inheres in every governmental service. The defect is that young men especially enter the service at 21, or 22, or 23, or 24, or 25 just for the opportunity that is afforded of a training in their somewhat youthful years. They enter it with no intent to remain permanently in the service. They enter it because, first, it gives them the chance to become familiar with Washington or with their country's affairs, and especially because it gives them a chance to complete their education in the schools which are so plentiful in the Capital of the country. They serve a period of three, four, or five years, and having equipped themselves with all the knowledge which they can gather here, they retire from the service and reenter private life.

I do not desire to put a straw in the way of any young man pursuing that course. I think it indicates on his part a high and fine conception, better paths of life, those which lead to greater success and greater contentment; but, nevertheless, it leaves the civil service shorn of the exceptional ability of the young men, who use it simply for the training and education of which I have spoken.

We can never take that difficulty out of the civil service. It will remain under the changes proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. It would remain under the spoils system, and it can not be eradicated from the one we have.

I have given you in this way a hasty survey of what I look upon as the changes that ought to be made in our civil-service laws and rules. I now come to the proposal of the Senator from Mississippi. I premise what I am about to say by expressing the conclusion that if it is adopted it will destroy the essential idea of a regulative, permanent civil service.

Senators have heard his amendment read, but I will take the liberty of describing what I understand to be the changes which he proposes. I have no hesitation in admitting that the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is much better than the House provision. I would a great deal rather see, however, the bill remain with the amendment proposed by the committee without any change whatever.

The Senator from Mississippi proposes, first, that all appointments shall be for a period of five years—that is, a five-year term. That is substituted for the indefinite tenure of office which lasts during efficiency or competency under the present system.

Second, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi compels reappointments at the end of the term if the particular employee holds or enjoys the maximum rating which is provided for in the committee amendment, and which is to be made by the head of the department under rules prescribed by the Civil Service Commission. All those employees who fall below the maximum rating and are above the minimum rating are entirely at the pleasure of the head of the department; that is to say, the head of the department has the power to reappoint, but he is not compelled to reappoint. All employees who fall below the maximum rating of efficiency are dismissed. That is the provision made by the committee, and it is not disturbed by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

My objections to the amendment proposed by my friend from Mississippi are as follows: In the first place, the two sections, namely, 5 and 6, as they would be left if the amendment were adopted, are inconsistent in this, that section 5 would give to the head of the department the discretion generally to reappoint, while section 6 would limit that discretion or destroy that discretion in cases in which the employee held the maximum rating. This repugnance, however, can very easily be removed, and I only call it to the attention of the Senator from Mississippi in order that he may, if his amendment prevails, reconcile it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, it does not exist, because in section 5 the language is inserted there by me, "except as hereinafter prescribed by the Civil Service Commission." That was put there for the express purpose of removing the objection of which the Senator speaks. The Senate committee had provided these regulations, and there would have been just this inconsistency between the two except for the insertion of that language.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi, Mr. President, may be right about that. I will turn to the language.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is on lines 12 and 13 of the amendment. This is the language—I will read it to the Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. I have it now, as it was printed in the RECORD yesterday, and, in order to be sure, I will read it aloud. If I am wrong about it, I will at once say so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will direct the Senator's attention to the particular point that I think cures it, and that is the proviso:

Provided, That all persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall, except as hereinafter prescribed, be eligible—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think, if the Senator from Mississippi will reflect upon that a moment, he will see that I am right. In order to show that I am, as it appears to me, I will read it again:

Provided, That all persons separated hereunder from the classified service shall—

And, of course, all persons are separated from the service under the section—except as hereinafter prescribed, be eligible—

Those who are ineligible are those who fall below the minimum rating—be eligible for and may, in the discretion of the head of the executive department, be reappointed.

I read it hastily, of course, but I do not think that the words "as hereinafter prescribed" refer to the discretion exercised by the head of the department at all, but refer only to those employees who fall below the minimum rating, and therefore become ineligible under any circumstances to reappointment. I simply suggest that to the Senator from Mississippi because I believe that to be the true construction of the section.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would say to the Senator that that is rather a narrow construction, because when it says "hereinafter prescribed" it refers to the whole of section 6, which is the Senate amendment, and is the provision that the Civil Service Commission shall establish a system of efficiency ratings, and so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only suggested it because, if the amendment passes I have not much interest then in what takes place in the civil service—I do not mean that; I have not any right to correct the proposals which are made by the Senator, and I have made this suggestion only to him.

In the next place, the word "maximum," as used in section 6 the last time, in my opinion, should be stricken out, and the word "minimum" should be inserted. I can not believe that it will bear the interpretation which is intended for it if it be permitted to remain. It says:

Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted or reappointed at the end of his five years' service; it shall also provide a maximum rating, and any employee having this rating shall be reappointed to a place in the service, unless on charges made he shall be deemed in character unfit; it shall further provide for a maximum rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me there, I inserted later in the amendment as it was read to the Senate the word "service," and the words "service maximum rating." They are in the amendment as printed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not understand that we are giving the Civil Service Commission the power to make two ratings, one a maximum and one a minimum rating. Those who hold the maximum rating are under the original amendment to receive certain consideration in the way of promotions and those who are below the minimum are to be entirely dismissed from the service. As I read the amendment, it would have that effect after the changes made by the Senator from Mississippi are introduced. However, I only suggest that because, if the amendment passes, we are all desirous that no confusion shall result.

I come now to state in a few words my objection to the substance of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. To anyone who is familiar with this matter, as is the Senator from Mississippi, it must be apparent that but few employees will reach the theoretical, abstract maximum rating established by the Civil Service Commission. There are only a few people anywhere who get a mark of 100, it matters not whether or not it is in school, college, business, Congress, or wherever human activity is found. Only a few people attain the maximum. I venture to say that when the Civil Service Commission establishes a maximum rating not 10 per cent of the civil-service employees will reach that maximum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought perhaps some of the Senators might misunderstand the Senator from Iowa, though I do not think that I have misunderstood him. The Senator does not mean, of course, that what I mean by "maximum" there is a rating of 100.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Mississippi is not prescribing the maximum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I leave that to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Mississippi was prescribing it, I would have less difficulty about it. The amendment proposed by the committee, which remains so far as this point is concerned, is as follows:

SEC. 4. The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service in the several executive departments in the District of Columbia based upon records kept in each department and independent establishment with such frequency as to make them as nearly as possible records of fact. Such system shall provide a minimum rating of efficiency which must be attained by an employee before he may be promoted—

Or reappointed at the end of five years' service. Of course the latter words were not in the original amendment.

It shall also provide a maximum rating—

I had better read, I think, from the amendment proposed by the committee. Taking up this point, it says:

SEC. 4. The Civil Service Commission shall, subject to the approval of the President, establish a system of efficiency ratings for the classified service * * *; it shall also provide a maximum rating below which no employee may fall without being demoted—

I think that that is an erroneous use of the word "maximum," but—it shall further provide for a maximum rating below which no employee may fall without being dismissed for inefficiency. All promotions, demotions, or dismissals shall be governed by provisions of the civil-service rules.

If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi is adopted it will read:

It shall also provide a maximum rating—

That is, the Civil Service Commission—

it shall also provide a maximum rating, and any employee having this rating shall be reappointed to a place in the service.

I do not know, Mr. President, just how that would be applied; but I am very sure that it could not be applied so that a very large proportion of the employees would reach this theoretical maximum rating. I assume that it means to make up a sheet in which good conduct shall be counted for so much, faithful attendance for so much, and for accuracy in work so much, and that when we have the aggregate of all of these things their comparison with a perfect standard will determine the rating of the employee whose work is being examined. I do not know what it will be, because that is a mere conjecture; but I do feel sure that a very small proportion of the employees will ever reach that rating. If 90 per cent of the employees fall below it, or if 75 per cent of them fall below it, then the greater number, by far the greater number, of our civil-service employees will be reappointed or rejected according to the pleasure of the head of the department. We will in that way introduce into the civil service all the objections which were so great to the service at the time when employees were either brought into the service through political influence or through the favoritism of the heads of departments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the wording of the committee amendment is much preferable to the wording of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, and yet I can hardly agree with the conclusion just reached by the Senator from Iowa. The word "maximum," as used in the amendment of the committee, virtually means that a rating must not be lower than the one provided by the Civil Service Commission, but that may be, in reality, the minimum rating required to enter the service. In other words, I do not think the word "maximum" in this amendment means that an employee must pass the highest rate possible, namely, 100 per cent; but it means that he must reach the maximum rate fixed by the commission before he can be reemployed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the idea in my own mind was that if, for example, I myself were the Civil Service Commission—there are three ratings here—I would prescribe, say, merely for illustration, 85 or over as the maximum rating. You might leave out the adjectives "maximum" and "minimum" altogether, if you choose, and the bill would be perfectly plain or just as plain. I put those words in because the Senate had embraced them in the provision. I should have said, if left to myself, "a rating above which" and "a rating below which" and "a service rating at which," but the Senate provision uses "maximum" and "minimum" throughout.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can understand what the Senator from Mississippi says, but I do not——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The word "maximum" does not mean in that case the highest rating, and, of course, it does not mean 100.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I endeavored to call attention to—that the word "maximum" does not mean that it shall be 100 per cent or 95 per cent or even 90 per cent. The commission may say that the maximum rate at which employees shall be reappointed shall be only 75 per cent, or whatever they choose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should think 85 per cent would be a good maximum.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, I do not know what these words mean as used in this section, and I do not think anybody else does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nobody will until the Civil Service Commission fixes it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The explanation of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] seems to be what more than once I have heard the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] call an attempt to elucidate the simple by the complex. I suppose that what is meant is that the Civil Service Commission shall say that if one does not reach 75 per cent or 65 per cent, according to the marks which it prescribes, then he can not be promoted, but must be demoted, and that if he does not reach 50 per cent of a perfect standard, then he must be dismissed from the service. I do not know, though, what the Senator from Mississippi means when he says that if the employee should have a maximum rating of efficiency, then the head of the department must reappoint him. I would not know what "the maximum rating of efficiency" would mean if used in that way; but I reiterate——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, if the Senator will pardon me, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If these words stood alone, and that was the end of it, the Senator would be right; but that is not what the amendment says. It is a certain rating, a maximum rating, to be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission. I purposely did not undertake to indicate even to myself what should be a maximum or minimum, because I thought the Civil Service Commission was the proper body to do that; but whenever it indicates and announces that "the following is to be the maximum rating," "the following is to be the minimum rating below which employees are to be discharged," and "the following is to be the service maximum," then the commission have indicated the three points. I leave it to them, not to myself or to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, does the Senator understand that if the Civil Service Commission should say that employees who attain 25 per cent must be reemployed the head of the department will be compelled to reemploy them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Civil Service Commission was foolish enough to say that, yes; but I have no idea that they would be. Here is the language which, taken in connection with this, explains it:

> If at the time of such reappointment they shall be up to a standard of efficiency prescribed by the Civil Service Commission and capable of rendering a full measure of service in return for the salary of the place to which they may be appointed.

If the Senator could conceive that the Civil Service Commission would be so foolish as to prescribe 25 per cent, then, of course, my whole measure would fail by the stupidity of the Civil Service Commission; but I do not think they would do any such absurd thing as that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply wanted to know in order to construe it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I admit that it all hangs upon the wisdom and efficiency of the Civil Service Commission, and if the Civil Service Commission is stupid and foolish, why the whole thing will go by the board.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a very extraordinary power which the Senator from Mississippi proposes to give them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have the same power now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, they have no such power now. Of course, they can keep people out of the service, but they can not promote them in the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have not the same power, no; but they have a similar power as to entry into the service; for instance, the Civil Service Commission, if it were foolish enough to do so, could say that anybody obtaining a rating of 15 per cent should be eligible.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But they have not done so, of course, because they are not foolish.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course not. But, Mr. President, although I do not believe that the amendment means what the Senator from Mississippi now believes it to mean, if the Civil Service Commission fixes a low rating that will compel the heads of departments to reemploy employees after the period of five years, we accomplish nothing; and if it fixes a high rating, a theoretical rating, then the measure of discretion that is left with the head of the department is just as large practically under the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi as under the House provision.

What I ask the Senate to reflect upon is this: Does it desire to open up 50 per cent or more—one can not tell whether it will be 25 or 50 or 75 per cent—of employees who will be at the discretion and pleasure of the heads of the departments? Do we want to destroy the existing system and introduce the old methods of reaching the public service? I, for one, do not. I believe that men who do not maintain a fair efficiency ought to be dismissed; but until they are dismissed by reason of a failure in their efficiency, they ought to continue until the retiring age, which I have already suggested.

I believe, Mr. President, that these are all the suggestions which I desire to make with regard to this matter. I simply wanted to point out what I thought ought to be done to remedy the defects of the civil service and to point out the disaster which I think will be brought about if the amendment now proposed receives the approval of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the first thing that I want to say is that the period of retirement of an employee from the service ought not to be a period of age at all. It ought to be a status of efficiency or inefficiency. To prescribe that a man shall be separated from the public service when he reaches a certain age is just an awkward way of approximating efficiency. It is better to go to the root of the evil at once and give somebody who is responsible for the success of administration the opportunity to have some discretion, at any rate, about the efficiency of his employees. So much for that.

The Senator from Iowa says that the amendment offered by me would leave things substantially the same as they are left by the House provision with regard to an advance of what is called "the spoils system" and a retrogression of the civil-service system as we know it. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The House provision if adopted—and that was my objection to it—would leave the entire civil service of the United States at each recurring five-year period subject to the discretion of the executive officers as to the retention or dismissal of employees. I have undertaken to cure that by saying, first, that I would leave the question largely to the Civil Service Commission, as being a very much more able body to prescribe ratings than the Congress itself could be, and that those of the public employees obtaining a certain rating should be retained, regardless of the discretion of the executive officers; and those of them falling below a certain rating should be dismissed, regardless of the discretion of the executive officers, and that in between these two ratings there should be, as the Senator from Iowa has said, a very large measure of discretion in the executive officers.

Now, as to what the Civil Service Commission would prescribe as a rating at which and above which men should be retained and a rating at which and below which men should be dismissed is a question for the sound judgment and discretion of the Civil Service Commission, which is a better judge of the ratings to be prescribed than I am, and therefore I have not undertaken to interfere with it in that regard. As between the two ratings, I am of the opinion, and have been for a long time, that there ought to be left to the chief of the bureau, his foreman, and to the department a very large measure of discretion in promoting and demoting for the purpose of getting men who will render good service. There is nothing of the spoils system in it; there is no attack upon the civil service about it.

The Senator from Iowa began his remarks by saying that this would be disastrous. He will pardon me for saying that I never suspected him of being capable of so lame and so impotent a conclusion to so emphatic an introduction. He has pointed out no respect in which it would be disastrous to the civil service. He has pointed out no respect in which it is an attack upon the civil service.

In the first place, no man can gain entrance into the public service if this amendment is adopted any more than he can now, except under the rules prescribed by the Civil Service Commission. That is the first proposition. It does not reduce the pay or the compensation of anybody, nor does it put that matter any more within the discretion of the executive officers than it is right now.

What is the situation right now, Mr. President? To that I call the attention of Senators, especially the attention of the Senator from Iowa, who is complaining that under my amendment a large measure of discretion is left between the two ratings for the executive officer to promote or to demote or to fix salaries.

What is the condition right now? It is that after a man once gets into the civil service he can be transferred, promoted, or demoted without restriction, without any limitation at all from anybody, anywhere. There is not even a maximum at which he must be kept, nor a minimum below which he must be dismissed. Once in, he can stay in forever, and he can be promoted or demoted at the will and at the discretion of the man who is now managing the office.

In a word, Mr. President, if I am correct in the conclusions I have drawn from trying to listen very attentively to the Senator from Iowa, he has made but one attack upon the amendment I propose, and that is an attack growing out of a conviction upon his part that the employees of the Government ought to have a life tenure. That is the difference between us, so far as I can see it. I think they ought to have an efficiency tenure and not a life tenure. He seems to think a man has a right to hold the office for his lifetime, and then to be retired at a certain age—an age so high that superannuation and inefficiency are conclusively presumed. With these exceptions, he seems to think a man ought to have a life tenure of office, and I do not. That is the difference between us.

I think the man ought to have an indefinite tenure, and I think he ought to have an efficiency tenure, and I think he ought to be susceptible of reappointment just as long as he has proven efficiency, and I think when he proves efficiency to a certain marked degree his retention ought to be compulsory.

That is the object of the amendment, as well as I could word it. Of course, as the Senator said, its success or failure depends upon the wisdom, discretion, or folly of the Civil Service Commission. But that is equally true of the present system; and hitherto we have never found that the Civil Service Commission was stupid enough to prescribe impossible, absurd, or ridiculous regulations.

The Senator admits that we have more employees now than are necessary, and he offers but one plan to cure that condition in the bills he proposes later on to submit to the National Legislature. That plan is, at either 70 or 65 years of age, to cut these men out of the service. But that will not cure it.

Under this amendment of mine I am not proposing to take out a single superannuated employee of the Government at this time, except in so far as under the present law he may be taken out. Out of a tenderness of feeling toward the deadwood already accumulated in the departments I have let it alone; and for that reason I struck out so much of the House provision as removed such employees from the service at this time. I am willing to leave them to die out. What I am looking forward to, if this amendment is adopted, is the prevention of any such barnacle growth in the service in the future. But as far as the present barnacle is concerned, I am willing to let him stick to the bottom of the ship. He is there and you can not very well get rid of him; and I knew that if I did attempt to go too far it would create animosity to the provision. But I do attempt to see to it that after the passage of this bill no fresh barnacles shall get themselves attached to the coppers of the vessel.

There is nothing in the bill proposed by the Senator from Iowa, there is absolutely nothing in what he has suggested, that will cure the evil, except by making the taxpayers of the United States contribute to old-age pensions for the tax eaters of the United States, with the tax eaters getting upon the average 50 per cent more annual pay than the taxpayers are getting upon the average. That is all there is to it.

The Senator says he is going to compel the employees of the Government to accumulate this fund themselves. He can not do that. He says that when I say Congress would increase the employees' salaries to make up for the amount that would be thus compulsorily taken away from them, I am impeaching the wisdom or the patriotism of Congress. Perhaps I am. I am not halting about words. But whether I be impeaching it or not, it is a fact—and every Senator will bear me out in it in his own inner consciousness—that if we pass a bill to accumulate retirement or old-age pensions for these employees, and take so many dollars away from them each month in order to do it, they will come here to the Senator from Idaho, to the Senator from Wyoming, to the Senator from Iowa, to the Senator from New Jersey, to the Senator from Ohio, and to the Senator from Mississippi and make our ears ring until we do give them these increased salaries. We know they will do it.

If that be impeachment of my own wisdom and patriotism, and of the wisdom and patriotism of other Senators and Representatives, let it go at that. But I have seen enough of public life to know that when the civil-service employees here in Washington get after anything they are pretty apt in the long run to get it; because while they are only about one-fifth of 1 per cent of our constituents, they are here, and the other 99⅘ per cent of them are at home. Those who are here can come in to see you in the morning, stay with you until late at night, write to you every day, and bring every sort of influence to bear upon you. And that is not all. They bring to bear the influence of the great newspapers of the city of Washington and of the entire commercial population of the city of Washington, all of which are greatly interested in larger salaries for these employees. I know the influence they have.

The Senator says one of the faults of the present system is that there is no provision for retirement. The only provision he offers is one for age retirement, and that at the expense of the tax-paying public of the United States. I think I offer a much better one. That is that at the end of each period of five years there shall be an opportunity to separate the barnacles from the bottom of the ship. I do not leave absolutely free discretion, because a man with a certain rating must be reappointed, and a man below a certain rating must be put out. But between these two ratings there is a certain amount of discretion which can not be avoided, as far as I can see, and which exists under the present law.

I think the distinction between the two plans is just this: The Senator's plan is one of compulsory, paternalistic saving, effected by law. Mine is an appeal to the individual to save for himself, confronting him with the danger of being severed from the public service, and therefore appealing to his selfish interest to take care of himself, instead of looking to the Government to take care of him.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate having struck out the House provision and substituted in lieu thereof a provision of its own, as recommended by the committee, I was going to ask the Senator whether it would not be possible for the conference committee to agree on something in the nature of the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes, Mr. President; that could be done. That is absolutely true. But I think the Senate has already gone too much on the idea of leaving legislation to conferees. I would rather have the opinion of the Senate, wherever I can get it, especially if the matter be an important one. This is a very important one and a very far-reaching one; and in so far as the Senate has an opinion, I should like to get it. Merely to say that the two Houses disagree, in order that the conferees may legislate, is not, in my opinion, a good way of carrying on public business.

Mr. OVERMAN. Inasmuch as the Senator has made a very wise, interesting, and able elucidation of this matter, I thought perhaps the conferees could take his amendment as the basis of their agreement. If we should strike out the clause and adopt the Senate committee's amendment, then, having discussed the question as he has in a very able manner, and having thrown a great deal of light on it, I thought probably they might agree to something like that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They might or they might not. But if the Senate agrees with me about it, the conferees would be much more apt to agree with me than they would without an expression of the opinion of the Senate. I think I have succeeded measurably well in doing what the House wanted to do, cutting out of the House provision so much as really seemed to me to be dangerous to the civil service.

I certainly do not want to go back to anything resembling the old spoils system. In my own interest I would not want to do it. I do not want to turn loose upon myself the brigade of pie hunters. Nobody else with any sense wants to turn them loose upon himself. So I tried to take out of the House provision the part of it that seemed to me to be dangerous to a nonpartisan, nonpolitical public service. I want a nonpartisan, nonpolitical public service. Then I tried to accord the balance with the provisions of the Senate committee, which seems to me to be wise as far as they go, but not to go quite far enough, and, by bringing the two into harmony with one another, to furnish a scheme under which we could have a nonpolitical public service, while at the same time a nondependent public service; and one is almost as important as the other.

I have a perfect horror of having a class of people in Washington and the District of Columbia who feel absolutely dependent all their lives upon the Public Treasury for their support, and who are fed all the time upon the hope that they are to be taken care of by special laws, carrying special privileges to them as a part of the petted population of the United States. I think an independent and self-dependent public service is almost as important as a nonpolitical public service. Both are important; and surely we can manage to obtain both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to set myself right in some remarks I made yesterday upon a communication I received from the Treasury Department. It came in so late that I did not have time to thoroughly read it, and I have read it only casually. I asked a question in regard to the Santee Competency Commission. I find upon reading the report that that commission expired in April of last year, and so have about three or four of these commissions. But there are others still in existence.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry. On yesterday I presented three amendments as in Committee of the Whole, two of them relating to the superintendent of the press gallery, and one to a messenger in the same service. At that time the amendments were ruled out of order as violating Rule XVI of the Senate. My inquiry is, Are those amendments in order at this time in the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. The same point of order that was made as in Committee of the Whole would lie against the amendments in the Senate, and would be made.

Mr. OVERMAN. Further, they were not reserved.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to have the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of the Senator from Michigan may be considered from two separate and distinct viewpoints. The fact that the amendments were ruled out yesterday would not prevent their being renewed to-day, if that is what the Senator means.

Mr. WARREN. But, as I understand, the Senate has already confirmed the action of the Committee of the Whole, because that was not one of the reserved amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to reach that in the next statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the Senator from Wyoming is entirely wrong about that. The Senate has never acted upon the amendment. This was not an amendment which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did the Senator reserve the right to offer these amendments when the bill came into the Senate?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No, sir; he did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the amendments relate to a provision which the Senate adopted, the Chair is very firmly of the opinion that they can be renewed at this time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 9, line 12 of the bill, after the word "gallery," I move to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 12, after the word "gallery," it is proposed to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I make a point of order on several grounds. The first is that the increase is not estimated for. Second, it was not presented as an amendment, printed, and sent to the committee. Third, it has not the indorsement of any standing committee of the Senate. Fourth, it increases the amount of an appropriation for which no law or treaty or stipulation has been passed at this session, or is in existence, in fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then I refrain from offering the other amendments, because they are exactly like this one.

Mr. JONES. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] I desire to offer an amendment on page 96.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 96, line 7, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,200."

Mr. WARREN. That has been estimated for. I will not raise any objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer another amendment on behalf of my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, line 3, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,200."

Mr. WARREN. That is estimated for, and I make no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. On page 103, line 19, I desire to amend the committee amendment by making it "$3,000" instead of "$2,750." It is for the second assistant commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was the amendment reserved yesterday?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. An estimate for $3,500 has been submitted.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Washington is right. The estimate for that office is $3,500. The committee did not reach the estimate, and the Senator in his amendment does not now reach the estimate. I do not object.

Mr. JONES. No; the amendment does not reach the estimate.

Mr. WARREN. I make no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 103, line 19, strike out "$2,750" and insert "$3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, on page 10, line 4, the committee increased the number of privates in the Senate Office Building from 7 to 16. It seems to me that that is a very excessive number. I do not see what possible reason there can be for so many, and certainly 9 policemen would be ample—three watches of 3 each. For what do we need 16 policemen over there?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, the increase is not in fact as it appears here—from 7 to 16. We really are not increasing the number now and heretofore employed, but the House cut it down for some reason; I am not quite certain why. I should suppose that the House would refrain from taking charge of the Senate Office Building. But the policemen for the main Capitol building here are under the joint control of both Houses, and perhaps that makes it competent.

There have to be at all those places which are open day and night three shifts, of course. There have to be on the others—there are several other openings—one or two shifts, as the case may be, for the day and evening. Now, given that they work 8 hours on and have 16 hours off, making allowances for the fact that they have to be on duty every holiday and Sunday, the fact that they are entitled to the same leave—30 days—that other employees have, and to sick leave and the consequent necessity of having the absence of one made up for by the presence of another, the Superintendent of the Capitol and also our Sergeant at Arms are of the opinion that we can not properly guard and watch the office building with less than the number of officers we have provided for.

I am not certain how many openings there are in that building which have to be covered by the watchmen; I do not just now remember, but the building covers a whole city square of ground, and there are openings, I think, in every one of the four corners, and there are openings on the street elevation and also on the lower elevations. Senators and their clerks go in and out of all of them. I do not believe we should reduce the number.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think we need a policeman at every opening. Take the large office buildings, into which more people enter than enter the Senate Office Building, and where there are infinitely more offices, and no such number of policemen is maintained. It does seem to me that it is a useless piece of extravagance.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am rather disposed to think that the Senate has on its rolls a great many needless persons, but in this particular instance I do not think they are needless. It is an enormous building, with rooms filled with valuable papers; it has large corridors; there are four stories to be patrolled; and under the system of having 16 watchmen, if the whole force was always on duty, allowing nothing for the necessary 30 days' leave, it would give at the outside 5 on a shift. Now, as a matter of fact, it is about 4 on a shift, and I really think that for a building of that size 4 officers on duty is a very reasonable number.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia speaks of there being no necessity for having an officer at every opening. I think there is no opening for ingress and egress to either the House or Senate Office Building or to this main building that ought to be left without some one on guard. Almost every month in the year—sometimes oftener than once a week—some weak or poor demented individual makes his way in and has to be taken care of. We are subject, of course, to pilfering. There is a great deal of valuable property in the building. The building is a very expensive one. We are not discussing now whether we ought to have built it or not. That does not come up now. But it is a very expensive and complete building, of great size, with a great deal of property in it, and we ought to protect it. There should not be disreputable characters going in there night or day, nor should property be carried away, and there should be nothing carried into it except what is proper. These officers are not only policemen, but watchmen, and I think the Senator upon reflection concerning this public building, with public men from every State in the Union in it and subject to all kinds of interruptions such as I have mentioned, will hardly agree to have an entrance left unguarded and think it safe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and is still open to amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, yesterday I reserved a point of order against the amendment on page 103, line 17. I withdraw the point of order and will allow the amendment to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, all the amendments which have been reserved and which have not been now challenged will be considered as concurred in by the Senate. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I understood the phraseology of the President's statement—that in the absence of objection all other amendments reserved would be adopted—I hardly think he intended to go that far. I reserved two amendments which upon further consideration I concluded not to press. Of course, they are not adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was speaking simply of amendments which had been adopted in Committee of the Whole, and not of amendments which had been proposed by Senators. He referred simply to amendments which had been adopted in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will state that in the absence of reservations the usual course is to say that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole are concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was only because of the omission of that statement that the Senator from Idaho rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Possibly the Senator from Idaho is correct in that.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to send to the desk to have read by the Secretary a matter which is of privilege of the highest order. I have marked the part to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks as a matter of privilege for the reading of a paper sent to the desk. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. From first page of Washington Herald, Friday, June 14, as follows:

SOLON PLACES LAND BEFORE GOD—SENATOR HEYBURN DECLARES NOT EVEN EMBLEM OF CHURCH FLOATS ABOVE THE STARS AND STRIPES—WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS HOLDS FLAG DAY EXERCISES—PRAISE FOR COUNTRY AND NATIONAL FLAG FEATURE ANNUAL CEREMONIES.

Senator WELDON BRINTON HEYBURN, of Idaho, placed his country before his God last night at the Flag Day exercises in celebration of the one hundred and thirty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Old Glory at the Church of Our Father, Thirteenth and L Streets NW., under the auspices of the Woman's Relief Corps, Department of the Potomac, Grand Army of the Republic, when he declared that no flag floats above the Stars and Stripes.

Mrs. Isabel Worrell Ball, patriotic instructor for the Department of the Potomac, Woman's Relief Corps, had made an address on the "Evolution of the flag," illustrating her remarks with 70 large flags, most of which she made herself, and in concluding had shown a flag of blue bearing a single white cross, which she declared was the flag of the church, and was the only flag which floated above the Stars and Stripes, explaining that when religious services were held on board ship the flag of the church was run up above Old Glory. Immediately Senator HEYBURN, who was sitting on the platform, asked in a voice that was heard all over the church, "By what authority does this flag float above the Stars and Stripes?" And when Mrs. Ball replied that she could not quote the authority, Senator HEYBURN said, "No flag floats above the Stars and Stripes."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, my object in calling attention to that publication, which I did with reluctance, because of the personal associations with it, was that the Senate might know it is claimed to be the practice in the United States Navy and upon ships of the Government to raise a flag above the Stars and Stripes at the masthead of a ship. I do not believe that any considerable portion of the people understand that this is the practice in the Navy of the United States, or upon Government ships, but I do speak with confidence when I say that no Senator will approve of any such act. No flag, church or state, has a right to be placed above the Stars and Stripes. We do not recognize the precedence or prominence of any church or the flag of any church above the Stars and Stripes.

At another time I will introduce an appropriate resolution in regard to this matter.

COST OF LIVING IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES (H. DOC. NO. 833).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a report by the Secretary of State, submitting reports from American consular officers in the German Empire and certain other foreign countries in regard to cooperation and the cost of living.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1912.

[Papers accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

IMPERIAL VALLEY, CAL. (S. DOC. NO. 846).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing an appeal from the board of supervisors of Imperial County, Cal., for further appropriations of money and further works for the protection of lands and property in the United States against the flood waters of the Colorado River.

In my message dated February 2, 1912, transmitting data of the work of the Interior Department, published as House Document No. 504, Sixty-second Congress, second session, there is contained a report of the engineer in charge of the work of protection done under the act of June 25, 1910, appropriating $1,000,000 for this purpose, and also a report of a special board convened, by my direction, to review this report and advise what further work should be done along the lower Colorado River for the protection of the interests of the United States. In this report of the special board, dated June 7, 1911, there will be found a recommendation that certain additional work should be at once executed and an estimate of $1,000,000 as necessary for this work.

In my message I stated that I did not at that time make a definite recommendation for the reason that the plan to be adopted for the betterment of conditions near the mouth of the Colorado River proves to be so dependent on a free and full agreement between the Government of Mexico and the Government of the United States as to joint expenditure and joint use that it is unwise to move until we can obtain some agreement with that Government which will enable us to submit to Congress a larger plan, better adapted to the exigencies presented than the one adopted. As stated in this message, the matter was being pressed upon the attention of the Mexican Government and favorable progress has been made in the negotiations. However, it is not probable that the negotiations with Mexico can be consummated before the adjournment of Congress, and it is therefore desirable to provide against a possible emergency which may arise after Congress has adjourned.

Since the report of the special board above referred to a part of the work proposed has been executed, and it is believed that the work will prove adequate for the protection of the lands in Imperial Valley against serious overflow during the present flood, which materially exceeds the average flood in volume, but, as shown in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, the Colorado River, since the date of the report of the special advisory board, began and has continued to cave its banks, until the protecting levee on the Mexican side, about 7 miles below the intake of the Imperial Canal, is threatened, and apprehensions are aroused that the Colorado will again cut a deep channel into the Imperial Canal, and flow again into Salton Sink with disastrous results to American lives and property.

I request that the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior be followed and that an appropriation of $1,250,000 be made to meet any emergencies that may arise, for the construction of levees and revetments along the Colorado River, and for the protection of property in the United States from damage by the flood waters of that river, and to be expended, in whole or in part, for the purpose stated and under the direction of the President of the United States.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1912.

POST-OFFICE FACILITIES IN NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7012) to permit the construction of a subway and the maintenance of a railroad under the post-office building at or near Park Place, in the city of New York (S. Rept. 883), and inasmuch as it is an emergency measure, I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I object.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Do I understand that the Senator from North Carolina objects to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand what the bill is, but I wish to go on with the chemical schedule bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from North Carolina will not object to the bill when he understands the purpose of it, and I can state it in just a word.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will not trouble the Senator to make a statement. I will withdraw my objection to that bill and to two other bills the Senator is about to report.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well. It will not take very long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SANTA FE, N. MEX.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 6269) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Santa Fe, in the State of New Mexico (S. Rept. 882). I call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] to the bill.

Mr. CATRON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Utah.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and to insert "two," and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ninety-five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevator, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices in the city of Santa Fe, county of Santa Fe, State of New Mexico, the cost of said site and building, including the above-mentioned apparatus, not to exceed the sum of $295,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RATON, N. MEX.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 6573) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Raton, N. Mex. (S. Rept. 881).

Mr. CATRON. I ask for the immediate consideration of this bill also.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevator, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices in the city of Raton, county of Colfax, State of New Mexico, the cost of said site and building, including the above-mentioned apparatus, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER "DAMARA."

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 7015) to provide American registry for the steamer Damara.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will not object, with the understanding that there is to be no debate upon it.

Mr. BURTON. I think it will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the unfinished business, House bill 20182, be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I realize that the chemical schedule is one of the most intricate and complex of all the schedules of the tariff law, and that in performing the duty which has been assigned me by my associates of the minority of the Finance Committee, I do not bring to the task any extensive knowledge gained from actual experience or from a long study of the schedule. In a very general way, however, I will attempt to present the views of the minority to the Senate, feeling sure that in the matters which I do discuss I have satisfied myself at least of the correctness of the statements which I make.

The revision of the chemical schedule which is proposed by this bill I believe to be in accordance with the wide-spread general feeling throughout the country that there should be a reduction of the duties of the different schedules of the present tariff law. I am aware that the majority of the Finance Committee have said in the report which has been submitted that no representations have been made by the manufacturers engaged in this industry that a revision is necessary, but when have manufacturers ever made any such representations in regard to any schedule of the tariff law? If we are to wait until the beneficiaries under the tariff law themselves ask for a revision we may be sure that no revision ever will be reached.

Whatever the benefits or the merits of a tariff law as it has been enacted and enforced in this country, certainly one of the evils which all now see is that a partnership has been built up between the beneficiaries under that law and Congress, so that business in different industries is made dependent upon legislation, and the spectacle is presented every time a revision is proposed of these same beneficiaries flocking to Washington to protect their interests or fancied interests, for I believe that in many instances instead of having received a real benefit there has been a stunted growth, which would have been of a larger and wider development if some of the protected industries had been made to depend upon themselves, just as I believe that the child who is taught to stand upon its feet, and the young man who is taught to go forth into the world, depending upon his own abilities, and upon his own manhood, will fight his way better and make greater progress than one who is continually helped and receives the care of fostering parents and is not allowed to develop along the lines on which he can best develop.

It is not wise to leave the revision of any tariff schedule until the beneficiaries under that schedule themselves make representations that it is necessary. To do so has caused the evil which, I say, has grown out of the system, without discussing its merits or its benefits; and I am willing to concede that there have been benefits derived from it. But greed must be guarded against. The States have been compelled to regulate the hours of labor of women and children in factories and in workshops by legislation, and I hope we shall be able to lay before the country information gathered by the Children's Bureau, established by this Congress, which will stir the people of the country to further action. But we have not found it sufficient to leave this question to those alone who are engaged in the employment of women and children. Neither have we found it wise to leave the sanitary conditions of workshop, factory, and mill entirely to those interested. Nor have we found it in the interest of the great public to leave the distribution of food products among the people wholly to those directly interested, and we have been compelled to pass a pure-food law to protect against their greed. So long as greed exists, so long as the interests of the people as a whole are affected by legislation and certain classes are its direct beneficiaries, we have a duty to perform, it seems to me, beyond that of waiting until these beneficiaries themselves call for a revision.

The pending bill has been reported favorably by the minority of the Finance Committee, with certain amendments, and before proceeding to discuss the bill I wish to present these amendments and make some explanation in regard to them.

The first amendment proposed is to amend, on page 3, by striking out, in lines 3 and 4, which constitute paragraph 6, the words:

Alizarin, natural or artificial, and dyes derived from alizarin or from anthracene, ten per centum ad valorem.

In explanation of the amendment I will say that these dyes are used in coloring the cheaper cotton and woolen goods, and the majority of the committee feel that they should be continued upon the free list, where they are to-day, because of this use.

Our importations of alizarin and dyes derived from alizarin and from anthracene for the year 1911 were 3,188,000 pounds, valued at $709,909.

Also, on page 6, lines 16 and 17, amend by striking out the words "anthracene and anthracene oil."

If the first amendment is adopted the second becomes necessary, because alizarin is made from anthracene and anthracene oil.

On page 10 amend lines 9 and 10 by striking out the words "gum copal, one-half of one cent per pound," and the words in line 10 "gum resin, ten per centum ad valorem."

Also, on page 10, line 13, amend by striking out the words "gum kauri and damar."

Gum copal and damar are the imported gums that are used in the manufacture of varnish, and the testimony of the varnish manufacturers before the committee, particularly that given by ex-Gov. Murphy, of New Jersey, was that at the present time no protection is needed upon varnishes provided these gums are admitted without the imposition of any duty.

I read from page 213 of the hearings before the Finance Committee, from the testimony of Gov. Murphy:

Senator SIMMONS. These are your raw materials?
Mr. MURPHY. These are our raw materials.
Senator SIMMONS. The raw materials are not produced in this country?
Mr. MURPHY. They are not, Senator.
Senator SIMMONS. And you want them put on the free list?
Mr. MURPHY. I want them to remain on the free list, where they have been.
Senator SIMMONS. You want them to remain on the free list?
Mr. MURPHY. Yes, sir.
Senator SIMMONS. What duty are you asking for on your finished product? What do you want?
Mr. MURPHY. We do not want anything.
Senator SIMMONS. You do not want anything on varnish?
Mr. MURPHY. We have 25 per cent. It was reduced from 35 per cent in the Dingley bill to 25 per cent in the Payne bill, and it was not objected to.
Senator SIMMONS. Do you want that 25 per cent duty to remain?
Mr. MURPHY. I do not think it is important, Senator. I am willing to have it remain, and I think the industry is, but I think it is quite indifferent about it. I think the industry can stand alone without any duty.

I read that testimony now because by a subsequent amendment the duty upon varnish has been reduced from 25 per cent to 15 per cent, but the gums which are used in the manufacture of varnish, by these amendments, are retained upon the free list.

Amend, on page 8, line 6, by striking out after the words "or conditioned by" the word "peeling," and also amend paragraph 88, on page 22, in line 14, by striking out after the words "or conditioned by" the word "peeling."

This word appears in the paragraph where reference is made to the importation of drugs, berries, barks, woods, etc. Under the present law—the Payne law—if they are not advanced by any process of manufacture they come in free of duty, and in the House bill the words are "if they are not advanced by peeling, shredding, chipping, or crushing," etc., or words to that effect, i. e., woods come in free of duty unless they are advanced by peeling.

We import a good many woods which are used in making extracts for tanning, like quebracho, from South America. If they come in with the bark upon them they would come in free of duty, but if peeled, and the word "peeling" is retained, they would then be subject to a duty. If stricken out of the pending bill the words then remaining would be "advanced in manufacture by shredding, crushing," etc.

Amend on page 10, line 16, by striking out the first word—"indigo."

As indigo is extensively used as a dye in the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods, it was felt by the minority that it should be retained upon the free list, and also because they felt that there should be no excuse at least for adding to the price of cotton or woolen goods because of a duty on it.

Furthermore, because other bills are pending reducing the duties upon woolen and cotton goods, it was felt that those dyes should be retained upon the free list.

Amend, on page 12, lines 19 and 20, after the word "soaps," by striking out the words "containing castor oil, any of the foregoing in whatever form" and insert in lieu thereof the following words, "all the foregoing made from or containing castor oil in whatever form, 20 per centum ad valorem," followed by a semicolon.

At present the duty on these articles in the pending bill is 15 per cent, but as the articles bearing that duty are made in part from castor oil, and castor oil bears a duty under this bill of 20 cents per gallon, it was thought that the duty on articles manufactured from it should be increased from 15 to 20 per cent.

Amend, on page 12, line 25, by striking out the words "and soya-bean," and on page 13, line 1, the first word "oil."

Under the pending bill soya-bean oil bears a duty which by this amendment would be cut out, and it would be left upon the free list.

Amend, on page 13, line 9, by striking out the words "Chinese-nut oil."

Both Chinese-nut oil and soya-bean oil are used by the varnish and paint manufacturers; and as in the bill by a later amendment, which is proposed, the duty upon varnish has been decreased from 25 to 15 per cent, these oils are left upon the free list.

Amend, on page 17, line 21, by striking out the word "twenty-five," and substituting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen," and on page 18, lines 1 and 2, by striking out the word "twenty-five," and substituting therefor the word "fifteen."

The effect of this amendment is to reduce the duty on varnishes from 25 per cent to 15 per cent ad valorem, and this reduction the minority feel the industry can very well bear, in view of the statement of Gov. Murphy and the fact that we export yearly a large amount of varnish—I think about a million dollars' worth in the year 1911—competing in other countries with varnish made elsewhere.

Amend, page 21, line 19, by inserting after the word "gray" the words "carbide of."

Calcium carbide would fall under paragraph 5 of the House bill and bear a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem. Calcium carbide is a material manufactured heavily in the United States from lime and coal, by the use of electric energy, and is principally used as a raw material for the manufacture of a fertilizing substance known as calcium cyanamid or lime nitrogen. This being on the free list, it was thought consistent to put calcium carbide, the raw material, on the free list. Under the present law it bears a duty of 25 per cent, and under House bill 20182 would be dutiable at 15 per cent. The exports of calcium carbide in 1911 were 13,300 tons, valued at $756,000.

Amend, page 21, after paragraph 78, by inserting as a new paragraph the following: "Alizarin and indigo, natural or artificial, and dyes derived directly from alizarin or from anthracene."

This would be an amendment to the special free list which the chemical schedule contains as it appears in the House bill, making these articles which I have read free of duty.

Amend, page 22, in line 2, by inserting after the words "known as" and before the word "napthalin" the words "anthracene and anthracene oil," followed by a comma.

This would place anthracene and anthracene oil on the free list under the House bill.

Amend, page 22, after paragraph 88, by inserting as a new paragraph the following: "Gums, copal, damar and kauri, and rosin."

This would place the gums which I have named in the special free list of the schedule as it appears in the House bill.

Amend, page 22, in line 25, after the word "petroleum" by inserting the following words: "soya-bean oil and Chinese-nut oil."

This would place these oils upon the free list in the special schedule of the House bill.

The amendments proposed by the minority members of the committee would reduce the estimated annual revenues under the House bill $764,577.

In the preparation of the House bill the Ways and Means Committee gave it long and careful consideration through a subcommittee which for nearly a year had the revision of this schedule before it. They had the assistance of a very complete glossary of the schedule prepared by the chemical expert of the Tariff Board, which afforded them most valuable assistance, not only by reason of the information which it contains in regard to the production and nature of the different articles included within the schedule, but by reason of its discussion of the history of the chemical industry in the United States and in Europe and the collection of a vast amount of useful information in regard to the industries to which this industry contributes its products. The same expert was associated with the members of the subcommittee in the preparation of the bill, so that they had the benefit of his experience and knowledge. This glossary appears as an appendix to the very voluminous and exhaustive report of the bill to the House of Representatives by the Ways and Means Committee, and even a casual examination of it will convince anyone that a great deal of time and labor has been spent upon it, and a more careful study, that the statements it contains are accurate and reliable. The report contains many valuable tables relating to the chemical industry; and, as a part of my remarks, I ask that I may be allowed to insert here, without reading, a table in that report compiled from the census relating to the manufacture of chemicals and allied products for the years 1910, 1905, and 1900, showing the magnitude of this industry and its growth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN in the chair). If there is no objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Census of manufacture of chemicals and allied products: 1910, 1905, and 1900.[1]

	1910	1905	1900
Number of establishments	11,863	9,689	8,820

[1] No census previous to 1900 shows classification by subdivision. Figures for 1900 and 1905 from Census of Manufactures, 1905, Vol. I, p. cxxiv; figures for 1910 from advance sheets of census report.

[2] Of these, 20,549 were women 16 years and over, and 1,807 were children under 16 years.

[3] Not given.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It should be observed, however, with reference to this table—which I will say, by way of explanation, is the table which is given in the report of the majority of the Finance Committee—that it includes not only the articles covered by Schedule A of the present law, but articles allied to chemicals which are distributed among other schedules of that law. The glossary prepared by the Tariff Board at page 308 contains a table which covers only those articles included in Schedule A of the present law. This table gives the number of establishments, salaried employees, wage earners, salaries, wages, invested capital, value of product, cost of raw materials, and miscellaneous expenses relating to manufactures directly affected by Schedule A according to the census of 1905 and that of 1910, which I ask permission to insert at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to follows.

[1] Not given for 1910.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. While the census of 1910 shows that 11,863 concerns were engaged in the production of chemicals and allied products in this country, with an invested capital of $2,000,000,000, consuming about $900,000,000 worth of raw materials per annum, with an output of nearly $1,500,000,000, and with a total of over 300,000 persons employed, it will be seen from an examination of the table which I have taken from the glossary compiled from the census of 1910 that the number of establishments engaged in the manufacture of those chemicals and articles covered by Schedule A and not contained in other schedules was 7,620, with 41,186 salaried employees, 102,063 wage earners, paying $52,045,000 as salaries, $53,842,000 as wages, having an invested capital of $616,470,000, products valued at $705,068,000, and that the cost of raw materials was $395,769,000. While the figures are not given for the year 1910, it appears from those given in the census of 1905 that of the wage earners employed in these industries 20,167, or 22.6 per cent, were women over 16 years of age.

In speaking of the manufacture of chemicals the author of the glossary makes the following statement upon page 318 relating to the operations of a chemical factory:

> The operations comprising the routine of a chemical factory are mechanically of a very simple nature. Moving solid, liquid, or gaseous masses from one place to another; separating heterogeneous substances by filtration or distillation; crushing, grinding, and mixing materials; heating and drying, together with some few other equally simple operations, are the most frequent, if not the exclusive, task required of a workman in a chemical factory.
> The machinery used for these purposes, though varying in capacity and design, is equally simple in character, requiring for attendance no more skill than will be gained after a short experience by any able-bodied, willing, and fairly intelligent workman.
> As a rule, there is little necessity to cumulate operations in order to produce a given product from given materials, and therefore the value of the human labor comprised in the value of the chemicals produced constitutes a relatively smaller proportion to the total cost of production than is the case in most other industries.

From the table which has been given, covering only the industries whose products are included in Schedule A, it appears that in 1910 there was paid in wages and salaries the sum of $105,887,000, and that the total product of these industries was valued at $705,068,000. The total amount paid in wages and salaries constituted therefore but 15 per cent and the amount paid in wages alone less than 8 per cent of the entire value of the products; or, if reference is made to the establishments engaged in the manufacture of chemicals and allied products given in the first table which I have inserted and which appears in the report of the committee, it will be seen that in the 11,863 establishments given in this table the wages and salaries paid constitute but 13½ per cent of the value of their products. As the average ad valorem duty of Schedule A under the present law is 25.78 per cent, calculated upon the imports for 1911, and under the duties of the House bill covering exactly the same items based upon imports of 1911, about 22.45 per cent, it can not be urged that the duties of the House bill are not sufficiently high to cover the difference between the cost of production in this country and abroad when the average duty collected is high enough to more than cover the total of salaries and wages paid in this industry. From the standpoint, then, of those who maintain that the duties levied upon imports into this country if like articles are manufactured here should be high enough to cover the difference between the cost of production here and abroad, it would seem that the average ad valorem rate of H. R. 20182 is sufficiently high, and an inquiry into the cost of production abroad can not be important so far as the protection of labor in this industry is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator knows that the amount of salaries and wages last quoted by him and figured upon a basis of the production of the chemical industry of this country is only upon the finished product.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is upon the products of the chemical industry made in those establishments given in the table. I understand that; certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. It is on the finished product.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. But, Mr. President, I think the Senator will also admit that in all the intermediate processes of manufacture the wages are not taken into consideration in the figures quoted by the Senator. The same thing applies to the chemical schedule as applies to the steel schedule and as applies to every other schedule in the tariff bill, as is shown by the abstract of every industry in this country.

I merely call the Senator's attention to that fact because he must know that, taking the raw products, converting them into finished products, and including the wages in all the intermediate processes, the wages amount to more by way of percentage than the figures quoted. I will admit, Mr. President, that the figures quoted are correct so far as the finished product is concerned; but the statement I have made, as I have said, applies to this schedule just the same as it does to the metal schedule or to any other schedule in the tariff bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I have heard the Senator from Utah make the same argument in connection with the metal bill, and I understand his position. I simply gave the percentage of salaries and wages to the products of the chemical industry, of course, considering only salaries and wages paid in those establishments, and not salaries and wages paid in the manufacture of any of the products which are used in chemical establishments as their raw material.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

The imports under Schedule A for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, amounted to $50,736,874, and the duties collected upon the same for this period were $13,082,915, making an average ad valorem of 25.78 per cent, and there were imported free of duty, chemicals and related articles of the value of $68,303,636, making the total imports for the year $119,040,510, less than 50 per cent of which were dutiable. The revenues collected for this year were the largest since the adoption of the schedule.

Schedule A, as it appears in H. R. 20182, is made up not only of articles embraced in Schedule A under the present tariff law, but also of other articles, some of which have been taken from the general free list of the present tariff law, and others from other schedules which would naturally fall under this schedule. Under the bill as reported by the House the dutiable imports upon the basis of those of 1911 would amount to $92,980,535, and would yield in revenue at the rates of duty established by H. R. 20182, $15,448,022, or an average ad valorem of 16.62 per cent. The imports under this schedule, as estimated in the House report, would be $96,768,250, yielding an estimated revenue of $16,254,636 at an average ad valorem of 16.79 per cent.

I am now giving the average ad valorem duty of the whole bill. I gave before the average ad valorem duty upon the same items which are now contained in Schedule A of the present tariff law, but the average ad valorem duty of the whole bill would be 16.79 per cent.

House bill 20182 contains a special free list as a part of Schedule A, which is made up of articles of the value of $26,059,975 on the basis of the imports of 1911. If the amendments proposed by the minority of the finance committee are adopted, articles of the dutiable value of $8,710,083 will be deducted from the dutiable list, making its value $84,270,452, which would yield a revenue under the rates of the amended bill of $14,683,445 on the basis of the imports of 1911, or an average ad valorem of 17.43 per cent. As the value of the articles taken by the amendments from the dutiable list are added to the free list, this as amended would comprise articles of the value of $34,770,058.

At this point I ask leave to insert the following table compiled from reports of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, showing the total revenues of the United States derived from customs duties, the amount of revenue derived from Schedule A, and the per cent that the revenue under it constitutes of the total tariff revenues from 1890 to 1911.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be entered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. From this table it appears that for 1911 the revenues derived from this schedule constituted 4.06 per cent of the total tariff revenue collected that year. Upon the basis of the imports for 1911, the tariff collected under this schedule in the House bill would constitute 5.01 per cent of the total tariff revenue, and if the amendments proposed by the minority of the Finance Committee are adopted it would constitute 4.73 per cent of the total tariff revenue. It is very difficult to give any statement of the exports under this schedule which would fall strictly under Schedule A as it appears in H. R. 20182. The table of exports printed in the report of the Ways and Means Committee covers only a part of the exports of articles included in the dutiable and free lists of this schedule, but, with this explanation, I ask permission to insert it, as it shows the magnitude and growth of our export trade in articles covered by this schedule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The increase in exports from $21,891,707 in 1900 to $38,882,506 in 1911 furnishes abundant proof of the ability of our manufacturers to hold their own in competition with foreign manufacturers in the production of the articles contained in this table.

REASONS FOR PRESENT REVISION.

The development of the chemical industry in this country has been rapid, due in a large measure to the greater demand created by the constantly increasing size of industries using products of the chemical industry in nearly all of their operations and also to the use of electricity in this industry. The growing volume and changing character of the business were not fully recognized in the revision of 1909, and the classification of the tariff of 1897 was closely followed. This was not as simple or appropriate as it should have been. Many of the ambiguities in classification in the present bill have been corrected in the proposed bill and a more scientific and simpler classification introduced, making use of the knowledge which has been gained in the administration of the customs law and which has been supplied by those intrusted with the administration of the law from their personal knowledge of the difficulties which have arisen in its administration. I will briefly refer to some of the more important of these changes in classification. The most marked is that contained in paragraph 18, which treats of chemicals containing alcohol or in the manufacture of which alcohol is used.

In 1906 denatured alcohol for manufacturing purposes was freed from the payment of an internal-revence tax. Before this date it was necessary, in order to protect not only the Treasury but also the domestic manufacturer, to levy a duty upon all articles containing alcohol or in the manufacture of which alcohol was used in order to compensate the manufacturer of such articles for the internal-revenue tax upon the alcohol used, but by reason of the removal, in 1906, of the internal-revenue tax from denatured alcohol, a compensatory duty to the manufacturer using alcohol became unnecessary in those cases where denatured alcohol can be used. Under the present law no difference in rates according to the percentage of alcohol is made, so that the imports containing a small percentage of alcohol bear the same rate of duty as those containing a much larger percentage or in the manufacture of which a larger percentage is used. The proposed law in its classification lays the duties in accordance with the percentage of alcohol contained therein and, for this purpose, establishes three classes of duties, one for articles containing not exceeding 20 per cent of alcohol, another for those containing not exceeding 50 per cent, and a third for those containing above 50 per cent. In each instance the duty is fixed so that the internal-revenue tax will be fully covered and yet articles will not be excluded from importation which contain only small percentages of alcohol.

It will also be noticed that in the present law alcoholic compounds are treated in three specific paragraphs, 2, 3, and 65, but that through the classification of the proposed law it is possible to consolidate these three paragraphs into one. The clause used in the old law, "In the manufacture of which alcohol is used," has been omitted, not only because it is difficult of administration, but also for the reason that denatured alcohol upon which no internal-revenue tax is paid is almost exclusively used by manufacturers here in their processes, and so they are not entitled to any compensatory duty because of the alcohol used.

Paragraph 19 of the present law contains a feature not heretofore embraced in any tariff schedule, and which provides that all compounds, etc., whether specially provided for or not shall be dutiable at a rate of not less than 20 per cent ad valorem if imported in individual packages of 2 pounds or less net weight, excepting samples without commercial value sent by mail, whereas the same articles imported in bulk would be dutiable at 15 per cent or less. Such a provision was deemed necessary because a great variety of chemicals come into this country put up in small individual packages which are sold directly to the consumer without any labor being expended on them here. These articles are in many cases trade-marked or otherwise branded, and it would seem only just in consideration of the fact that Schedule A is principally meant to cover merchandise arriving in bulk and used for purposes of further manufacture in the United States, that articles imported in a condition fit to go to the ultimate consumer and which are largely subdivided and have been subjected to processes of refining should pay a duty somewhat higher than the same articles when imported in bulk.

COAL-TAR PRODUCTS.

A wide departure from the present tariff bill has been made in H. R. 20182 in the classification of coal-tar products upon lines conforming to their degree of manufacture which is believed to be rational and scientific. While coal tar itself and some few elementary derivatives therefrom have been left on the free list, products such as benzol, and all other items enumerated in paragraph 23 of H. R. 20182 which are derived by comparatively simple processes from coal tar, carry a duty of 5 per centum ad valorem, and the products enumerated under paragraph 25 of the same bill, the manufacture of which is more complicated and requires more labor than those mentioned in paragraph 23, have been made dutiable at the rate of 10 per cent ad valorem. On the other hand, the products which are manufactured from intermediary products and which are covered by paragraph 22 were made dutiable at 15 per cent instead of 20 per cent ad valorem as in the present law, and the duties upon coal-tar colors representing a high state of manufacture have been reduced from 30 per cent to 25 per cent ad valorem. Upon page 205 of the glossary the value of the imports of coal-tar products for the year 1910 as far as traceable was given as $12,994,860, of which $6,148,305, or 47.3 per cent, were imported free, and products valued at $6,846,555, or 52.7 per cent, were dutiable, yielding in duties that year $2,023,189, an average of 29.54 per cent ad valorem. For the purpose of raising additional revenues from the importation of these products a small duty has therefore been placed upon the intermediary products

GLUE AND GELATIN.

The classification of the articles falling under the glue and gelatin paragraph in the proposed law omits to specify gelatin in sheets and emulsions, which enumeration is contained in the present law and enumerates solely manufactures of gelatin. The reason for this omission is that because of the legal construction given to the term "sheet" a higher rate of duty has been applied to gelatin as commercially prepared, while sheet gelatin is an article manufactured with gelatin as a base combined with glycerin and other substances and used as a transparent substitute for celluloid or mica.

I have here at my desk the commercial gelatin and that in sheets. This [exhibiting] is commercial gelatin, which under the present law bears the higher rate of duty which was intended to be imposed on gelatin in sheets, which is this gelatin [exhibiting] and which has been corrected in the new classification.

In the administration of the law gelatin as commercially prepared and which appears in the form in which I show it here [exhibiting] has been held to be gelatin in sheets and bears the higher rate of duty on gelatin manufactured into sheets.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to see if it is not possible to have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the unfinished business.

I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill on the other side whether there would be any objection to agreeing to a vote on the 2d day of July?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Maine yielded to me. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from North Carolina, I will say that I do not believe there will be any objection to fixing the date——

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I ask unanimous consent that on the 2d day of July, immediately after the termination of the routine morning business, the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business, and that a vote be taken upon the bill and all amendments thereto before the end of that legislative day.

Mr. CURTIS, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. SMOOT. Calendar day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well. I like that better; the calendar day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina. Is there any objection to it as made? The Chair hears none, and the order will be so entered.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask whether the Senator from Maine desires to continue longer and to conclude his speech to-day or would he prefer to leave it until a later day?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I think I would prefer to defer it, but I am not——

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if the Senator would prefer to conclude his speech later the Senate can go into executive session at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I think it will take me only about a half hour longer.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is plenty of time, and perhaps the Senator had better finish this evening.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think if the Senator from Maine can conclude in a half hour he had better go on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The classification and language used in H. R. 20182 in regard to chalk, glues, gelatin, and particularly in regard to coal-tar products, oils, and soaps is believed to be more specific and more easily understood than that of the present law relating to the same subjects.

Some of the inconsistencies of the present law have also been corrected. Among these may be mentioned the duty of 18 per cent upon phosphorus, while phosphoric acid made from it is on the free list. Hydrochloric acid is also on the free list, although common salt and sulphuric acid from which it is made are both upon the dutiable list. Fluorspar and sulphuric acid are both upon the duitable list, while hydrofluoric acid made from them is upon the free list.

While it is true that in the revision of 1909, as pointed out in the report of the committee, some duties were decreased, it is also true that some were raised, and upon the whole the duties are much higher than are necessary, as they are in many instances prohibitive and do not permit foreign competition, which is necessary to keep down prices to a fair and reasonable level, and even from the standpoint of the protectionist are more than sufficient to cover the difference between the cost of production here and abroad. With a large supply of natural resources at hand, and also supplied as by-products in other industries, the chemical industry, even under the fostering and protecting care of the Government, has not made the advance which should have been made, so that the consumer is forced to pay in this country a largely increased price upon many articles imported for consumption under this schedule without any corresponding benefit in the way of the development of the chemical industry here; and except where needed for the purposes of revenue, reductions should be made and can be made without injury to domestic manufacturers, and in the interests of the consumer. The pulp and paper industries of this country use large quantities of chemicals in the manufacture of their products, the census for 1905 stating the value of the same for that year to be $10,203,340. By reason of the large importations of pulp and paper free of duty from Canada under the reciprocity act they are fairly entitled to a reduction in the duties upon the chemicals which are used by them. In the hearings upon this act in 1911 before the Finance Committee it was strongly urged by these manufacturers that they were at a disadvantage in competition with Canadian manufacturers of pulp and paper because of the increased cost to them of chemicals by reason of the duties levied upon them.

I will read the testimony of one of these manufacturers as given in the hearings before the Finance Committee on page 159, Reciprocity with Canada. This is from the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co., furnished by their president in the form of a letter which was presented to the Finance Committee:

"I have likewise prepared a statement," the letter goes on to say, "taken from the books of our company, showing the amount we were obliged to pay during our last year's operations"—that is, one fiscal year—"on account of these tariff charges over and above what the duties would have been on the same items if brought into Canada instead of the United States." That is to say, this table does not show the actual amount paid, but shows what the excess amounts to on these importations over and above what it would have been into Canada, taking into consideration the tariff where any existed on the importations into Canada.

"This company paid last year in excess duty on bleaching powder, $70,000; on alum, $21,000; on aniline dyes and ultramarine and other coloring matters, $5,000; soda ash, $40,000; which would not have been paid or any portion of it would not have been paid had this same company been conducting the same operations on the same scale in Canada last year."

The decreases in duty made by H. R. 20182 on the most important chemicals used in the pulp and paper industries are shown by the following table, which I ask leave to insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the table show that the cost of the raw materials will be any considerably less as the result of the passage of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It does not. It simply shows the articles used by the manufacturers and the rates of duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What difference is there? Is the cost of the raw material increased or reduced?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The table shows the rates of duty under the proposed act and the rates of duty under the present tariff law. I will read some of them.

Sulphuric acid, which under the present law bears a duty of one-fourth cent a pound, or an ad valorem equivalent of 18 per cent, is free under H. R. 20182. On alum, which bears a duty of one-fourth and three-eighths cent per pound according to content under the present law, the ad valorem has been reduced from 37.46 per cent to 15 per cent. The duty on chloride of lime or bleaching powder, which bears a duty of one-fifth cent per pound under the present law, or an ad valorem equivalent of 24.81 per cent, has been reduced under the House bill to one-tenth cent per pound or an equivalent ad valorem of 12.53. The duty has also been reduced on glue size, chrome colors, ochery, and ochery earths. On caustic soda the duty under the present law of one-half cent a pound or an ad valorem of 20 per cent has been reduced to one-fourth of a cent per pound or an ad valorem of 10 per cent, and upon soda ash from an ad valorem of 22.36 to 11.35.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that, as far as the Senator has read, the manufacturers of pulp derive a benefit in that the duty on their raw materials is materially reduced.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is thought they will derive a benefit, and they so thought, and in appearing before the Finance Committee they represented that the cost of manufacturing in this country was largely increased because of the duties upon the chemicals which they use.

I have read the letter from the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. showing the estimate of the excess which they have to pay in this country because of the duties over what their Canadian competitors would have to pay upon the articles named in that statement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice that by the letter to which the Senator refers there was one item which cost the American paper manufacturer $70,000 more than it would cost the Canadian manufacturer because of the American tariff being higher. If that prevails to any considerable extent that would account——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That article was bleaching powder, which is used to a large extent in the pulp and paper mills.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that if that excess prevails upon other articles, the high tariff on chemicals would account in part for the higher cost of manufacturing paper in the United States as compared with Canada, if there is a difference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That was the claim made by the paper manufacturers in their testimony before the Finance Committee from which I have read.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will ask the Senator if there is any prospect that, if these duties are reduced so that the manufacturers can get their raw materials cheaper, the consumers will get theirs any cheaper?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I can not answer that, except to state my expectation that they will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. While the Senator is on that point, has he any figures to show what is the total consumption in the United States of the chemicals embraced in Schedule A? He has shown that the amount of imports is something like $119,000,000 a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I beg the Senator's pardon. The imports of dutiable and free articles aggregate $119,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; there are $119,000,000 of imports of chemicals embraced in Schedule A, either as dutiable or free. But has the Senator any figures to show what is the total consumption in the United States? I ask the question for the purpose of ascertaining what proportion of the chemicals consumed in the United States is imported and what proportion is produced locally.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not have those figures.

The cotton and woolen industries are the largest consumers of dyestuffs in this country, many of which are imported, and they also consume large amounts of chemicals; and as doubtless a reduction in the duties upon woolen and cotton goods will soon be made, this furnishes an additional reason why there should be a reduction in the duties upon dyestuffs and chemicals used in the manufacture of textiles. From the census of 1905 it appears that the value of chemicals used in that year by the textile industries amounted to $30,097,685. Some of the reductions made in the chemicals used in the textile industries appear in the following tables, which I ask permission to insert:

[1] Imports of 1911. [2] According to specific gravity.

In addition to the reduction in the duties under the chemical schedule to meet the requirements of the pulp and paper industries and the textile industries, the unnecessarily high rates of duties upon many articles in this schedule of common use by all classes of citizens call for a substantial reduction of these rates, and in some instances for the abolition of all duties, particularly upon heavy chemicals the materials for the manufacture of which are easily obtained and which are either produced in this country or bear no rates of duty when imported here, and many of which are almost universally used and necessary to the comfort and livelihood of our people, and from which therefore all unnecessary tariff taxation should be removed except so far as the same may be necessary for raising revenue. The articles which have been transferred by H. R. 20182 from the dutiable list to the free list appear in the following table, which shows the rate of duty under the present law, the amount imported for the year 1911, and the duties collected, and which I ask permission to insert at this point:

The first article in this table is acetic, or pyroligneous, acid, which bears a duty of three-fourths of a cent and 2 cents a pound under the present law, according to the specific gravity, that having a specific gravity of more than 1.047 bearing the higher duty. It is made from acetate of lime, of which this country is the principal producer and exporter, our exports for 1911 being 35,000 tons, and which under this bill is on the free list, and from sulphuric acid. As sulphuric acid and acetate of lime have in this bill been placed upon the free list and acetate of lime is produced here, no reason seems to exist for leaving acetic acid, which is largely consumed in the textile industry, on the dutiable list. Glacial acetic acid, which bears the higher rate of 2 cents a pound, is merely an acid of higher strength, obtained by rectification, a process which is not complicated, and for this reason it should not be treated differently from acetic acid itself.

In connection with this acid it should be mentioned that in February, 1900, the State Department made an investigation into the possibilities of the exportation of acetic acid, and did this at the solicitation of a leading chemical manufacturing concern, which stated in its request that the manufacture of acetic acid in the United States had reached then a state of development where the exportation of acetic acid would be not only possible but highly desirable.

As acetic acid has a very extensive use in the industries and arts, in the manufacture of white lead, sugar of lead, arsenical insecticides, iron and aluminum mordants, and can be made from raw materials produced here, there would seem to be no reason for maintaining any duty upon it.

The importations of chromic acid are very slight, and its use is confined almost entirely to the laboratory. Sulphuric acid, or oil of vitriol, the most important of all acids, is used in nearly all industries, and its consumption in this country has been very largely increased by the manufacture of superphosphates. It bears a duty under the present law of one-fourth of a cent a pound, or $5 a short ton. Because of its weight and its very corrosive character it can not be easily transported. Iron pyrites, from which it is largely made, is admitted to this country free of duty, as is also nitrate of of sodium, which enters into its manufacture. Upon this subject the glossary of the Tariff Board states (pp. 169 and 170):

Sulphuric acid is to-day one of the absolute prerequisites of civilization, ranging in importance next to if not with pig iron, and therefore justifies a more detailed study than any other item of Schedule A of the tariff law.

In speaking of the difficulty in shipment, this statement appears upon page 170:

The powerfully stimulating influence which the Le Blanc soda process exercised over the production of sulphuric acid in Europe was wanting in the United States, because this process, for reasons purely economic, never crossed the Atlantic. Our soda supply was imported, and the only reason why the same was not done with sulphuric acid was the difficulty in the shipping of the material. Glass carboys had to be used for the purpose, and even with the most careful packing breakage was unavoidable, involving not only loss of material, but very serious damage to cargo and ship or injury to crew, owing to the corrosive and destructive action of the acid.

This difficulty of shipping the acid, which in the early period protected the manufacturer against foreign competition in spite of the prevailing high prices, is even more potent to-day, because the quantities to be transported exclude anything but bulk shipments and the relatively low price of the acid will not permit the additional cost of transportation. This operates to prevent importations. The difference in manufacturing cost at home and abroad is probably not great where modern scientific methods are employed.

* * * * * * *

A very powerful factor in the development of the sulphuric-acid industry in the United States was the extended use made of this acid in refining mineral oils and in the production of superphosphate for fertilizer purposes—two industries which found in the United States their greatest development and which to-day consume beyond doubt the largest part of the total output. In later years the iron and steel industry became the third largest consumer of sulphuric acid. The geographical expansion of the production of the latter followed, therefore, closely the lines of these industries and of course also that of the manufacturing of chemicals generally, the basis of which is and always will be sulphuric acid.

* * * * * * *

In comparison with the enormous quantities used there is only a comparatively small number making sulphuric acid for sale. Many of these, moreover, are consolidated under common ownership of relatively few corporations.

In the brief of the General Chemical Co., one of the largest manufacturers of acids and chemical salts in the United States, filed with the Finance Committee March 19, 1912, this statement in regard to the manufacture of sulphuric acid appears upon page 470 of the tariff hearings:

We believe the domestic manufacture of inorganic heavy chemicals, such as sulphuric, muriatic, and nitric acids, is now firmly established and can hold its own in competition with the world on the basis of cost of manufacture.

Therefore no injustice has been done the manufacturers of sulphuric acid, the basis of all chemical industries, and used in so many other industries, by taking off the duty of one-fourth of a cent a pound, or $5 a ton, when, according to investigations made by the Tariff Board itself, and this admission from one of the largest chemical companies in the United States, the industry in this country is now established upon a firm basis.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows the average rate of duty on an ad valorem basis on the articles embraced in schedule A under the present law, the Payne-Aldrich law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Twenty-five and seventy-eight one-hundredths per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. What will be the average rate of duty on an ad valorem basis under the bill as it is proposed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. About 16 per cent. But I will say to the Senator that I have already made the explanation which I ought in fairness to make—that taking the same items which are dutiable under schedule A of the present law, and considering them alone, the reduction upon these items is from $25\frac{78}{100}$ per cent to $22\frac{45}{100}$ per cent, a reduction of nearly 13 per cent. I will say, however, that while the reduction is only about 13 per cent, it would be 25 per cent if it were not for the increases which have been made in the bill on some few items for special reasons.

For instance, upon gum chicle, imported into this country in large quantities, and used in the manufacture of chewing gum, the duty has been doubled, to obtain additional revenue. The duty upon opium also has been increased from $1.50 to $3 per pound; and that upon cocaine has been largely increased, to discourage the importation of both.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement made by the Senator is perhaps correct if he does not take into consideration the items that have been transferred from the free list to the dutiable list.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I made that statement, I think. I said I referred to the same items covered by Schedule A as it now is in the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is not the difference that the Senator says.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Then we differ as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. But I want to call the Senator's attention, and the attention of the Senate, to the fact that about $40,000,000 of chemicals that have been on the free list are transferred to the dutiable list under this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not care to have that statement injected at this point. I shall come to that presently in the treatment of the matter.

I return to sulphuric acid and observe that the small amount imported shows that no competition exists. While the present law provides in paragraph 687 that sulphuric acid not exceeding a specific gravity 1.380 shall be admitted free of duty, this provision has not resulted in any free importation, because acid of such strength can not be economically manufactured nor transported.

BLUE VITRIOL OR SULPHATE OF COPPER.

This country is one of the largest producers and exporters of blue vitriol or sulphate of copper. The amount imported is so small that the imposition of a duty serves no useful purpose. What has been said of blue vitriol or sulphate of copper can be said of borates of lime or soda, charcoal, bone char, blood char, copperas, or sulphate of iron.

Paris green and London purple are also placed upon the free list. All the articles which I have been discussing have been placed upon the free list by the proposed law.

Copper sulphate, white arsenic, acetic acid, and soda ash, the raw materials for the manufacture of Paris green, are produced abundantly in this country, and it is manufactured very extensively. Its use as an insecticide has made its price fluctuate very much owing to the excessive demands which are made at times for it when pests infect the crops of any section of the country, but the farmers of this country should be allowed to purchase this almost indispensable product at a price which is not increased for the sole benefit of its manufacturers. Very little London purple is imported and very little is made here.

PHOSPHORUS.

Phosphorus is used extensively in the manufacture of matches and certain alloys. As its sources are abundant in this country and in its manufacture great advancement has been made through the use of electricity, the duty should be removed in the interest of the consumer. Salt cake and niter cake are both made in large quantities as by-products in this country, the former in the manufacture of hydrochloric acid by heating a mixture of salt and sulphuric acid, and the latter—niter cake—in the manufacture of nitric acid from a mixture of nitrate of soda and sulphuric acid. They are extensively used in many industries, particularly in the manufacture of glass, and as they are by-products in the manufacture of acids they are produced here in great quantities and importations are small, and upon no theory is any duty necessary.

The industry of extracting strychnine from nux vomica on a fairly large scale is carried on by some few establishments in the United States, and the domestic production is in excess of the consumption since large quantities of strychnine are exported from the United States and sold in competition with that manufactured elsewhere. The duty therefore of 15 cents an ounce is entirely unnecessary. The duty on strychnine was 30 cents an ounce under the Dingley tariff law, which was reduced to 15 cents in the law of 1909. The large medicinal use of strychnine furnishes as strong a reason for placing it upon the free list, as is furnished in the case of quinine, which has been admitted free of duty for many years.

SULPHUR.

Large deposits of sulphur are found in this country, particularly in Louisiana, and our domestic consumption is more than covered by home production. Large exports therefore are made. The duty of $4 per ton under the present law is entirely unnecessary. A careful investigation of the manufacture of all these articles included in the above table and the uses to which they are put will clearly demonstrate the wisdom of placing them upon the free list in the interests not only of the consumers of this country, but also of the manufacturing industries which use them.

MEDICINAL COMPOUNDS AND DRUGS.

Very large reductions have been made in H. R. 20182 upon medicinal compounds and drugs so that the price of the same might be enhanced as little as possible by the duties which are levied and at the same time those engaged in their manufacture receive due and fair consideration. The duty upon calomel has been reduced from 35 per cent to 15 per cent; that on medicinal compounds containing alcohol, from 55 cents per pound to 10 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem up to 40 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem, according to the alcohol contained in them. On other medicinal compounds not containing alcohol the duty has been reduced from 25 per cent to 15 per cent; upon chloroform from 10 cents per pound to 4 cents per pound; on drugs such as roots, berries, balsams, etc., advanced in value from one-fourth of a cent a pound and 10 per cent ad valorem to 10 per cent ad valorem; on potassium iodide, from 25 to 20 cents per pound; on iodoform, from 75 cents per pound to 25 cents per pound; on sulphuric ether, from 8 cents to 4 cents per pound.

It would be impossible to speak of the many reductions which have been made in the rates of duty under this schedule, but I will briefly explain some of the more important changes. The duty has been reduced in the case of glue and gelatin valued at 10 cents a pound or less, from 2½ cents per pound to 1 cent per pound, and upon that valued above 10 cents per pound and less than 25 cents per pound it is fixed at 15 per cent ad valorem, and upon that valued above 25 cents per pound at 25 per cent ad valorem. These reductions it is believed will work no hardship to those engaged in the manufacture of these articles, and that they will permit importations to keep down prices to a fair and reasonable level. Under the present law, glue and gelatin, valued at 10 cents or less a pound, bears a duty of 2½ cents per pound; valued above 10 cents and not above 35 cents per pound, 25 per cent ad valorem; valued above 35 cents per pound, 15 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem. Glue is made from bones, hides, or similar material, and gelatin is merely a high-grade glue. The uses of glue extend through a great many industries, and is used by furniture makers, bookbinders, veneer manufacturers and paper and wood box makers, piano makers, hat makers, in the textile industries, the printing trade, and many others. It is claimed by those who are acquainted with the glue industry that its manufacture is to a large extent controlled by the meat packers and their associates, the raw materials of which are provided from the by-products of their meat-packing establishments; and while in the brief filed by the National Association of Glue and Gelatin Manufacturers it is stated that not over 35 per cent of the total annual production of glue in this country, amounting to 100,000,000 pounds, is the product of factories owned or controlled by the slaughter-house interests, those who are familiar with the business assert that at least 65 per cent of our annual production is manufactured in factories directly or indirectly controlled by these interests. While some glue stock is imported into this country from South and Central America, India, and Australia, it is all admitted free of duty and costs the American manufacturers of glue no more than the foreign manufacturers. Much of the raw material is obtained as by-products of the meat-packing establishments in this country and is manufactured into glue by them; and certainly their efficiency of operation and organization can not be exceeded anywhere.

The following table, obtained from the census reports for the years 1890 and 1910, shows the number of establishments, salaried persons, wage earners, salaries and wages, capital invested, products, and raw materials for these census years in the glue industry:

Year.	Establishments.	Salaried persons.	Wage earners.	Salaries.[1]	Wages.[1]	Capital.[1]	Products.[1]	Raw material.
1890.....	62	139	1,697	$147	$676	$4,859	$4,270	$2,511
1910.....	65	530	3,265	$747	$1,571	$14,289	$13,718	7,525
Increase, per cent.	5	280	90	408	132	200	221	200

[1] Expressed in thousand dollars.

From an examination of this table it will be seen that there was in 1890 for each salaried person a value of product of $30,800, which fell in 1910 to $26,000. The value of product per wage earner, on the other hand, was, in 1890, $2,510 and in 1910 its value rose to $4,200. In 1890 a sum equal to 3.4 per cent of the value of products was paid out in salaries and in 1910 5.4 per cent. The amount paid in wages in 1890 constituted 15.8 per cent of the value of products and in 1910 11.4 per cent. The percentage cost of raw material relative to the output in 1890 was 60 per cent and in 1910 less than 55 per cent. It is a well-known fact, and will appear from an examination of trade journals, that soon after the passage of the Dingley bill, which increased the duty from 25 per cent ad valorem to a specific duty of 2½ cents per pound, equivalent in the case of the cheaper grades of glue to an ad valorem of 50 per cent or more, the price of glue costing below 10 cents a pound increased very materially and is to-day almost 50 per cent higher than it was before the passage of that act. Under the facts disclosed by these statements, the claim of the National Glue Co. that the American glue industry would be seriously injured by a reduction of the duty from 2½ to 1 cent a pound upon glues costing less than 10 cents a pound is absurd upon its face, as the duty of 1 cent a pound covers the entire wage cost and also part of the salaries paid.

In this connection I will read a statement made to me by one of the independent glue manufacturing companies which has been engaged in the business for about 40 years in this country, as I am informed by one of its officers, and it is as follows:

We submit that the present customs duties on glues and gelatines are extortionate, and notably so on glues below 10 cents per pound.

When the Dingley bill was under discussion an effort was made by the packers and their allied interests to secure a tariff on imported raw material as well as on the finished product.

Failing to secure this protection of their domestic raw material (the bulk of which they produce and continue to control to-day since it is a by-product of their industry) these same packers, with their allied associates, set about to secure such high rates on glues below 10 cents per pound, and which are chiefly made from the grade of stock they produce, as to effectually shut out all foreign glues of similar character, and in this were successful.

The duty on all grades had formerly been 20 to 25 per cent; the above advance of the duty made in the Dingley bill secured them from 30 to 75 per cent duty on glues below 10 cents per pound.

This outrageous and unnecessary protection was secured insidiously and concealed from the knowledge of the other and independent glue makers until enacted and without any public notice being given of the proposed action.

That the packers and their allies controlled and still control powerful influence is well known.

Apart from the great advantage of this special increase of duty enjoyed by the packers and their allies, the effect has been to finally injure the industry in glues below 10 cents per pound, since the resulting high prices have stimulated substitutes for glue, which the consumers are forced to use, though unsatisfactory.

The proposed House bill as passed is an eminently fair and reasonable measure, offering all the protection required to offset the lower cost of foreign labor.

Furthermore, obtaining imported raw material free of duty, the domestic makers are on an even basis with those abroad, and surely require no protection to offset any alleged techinque or inventive genius on the part of foreign manufacturers.

The imported glue stock (raw material) is drawn from South and Central America, India, Australia, in fact, from all over the world, and being free of duty costs the American makers no more than it costs the foreign makers of glue.

CAMPHOR AND CELLULOID.

In the proposed bill a duty of 3 cents a pound has been placed upon crude camphor which heretofore has been upon the free list, and a reduction made in the duty on refined camphor which is reduced from 6 to 5 cents a pound, while the duty upon celluloid into the manufacture of which camphor enters to a large extent, constituting about one-third by weight, has been decreased, and a reduction also made in the duty upon articles made from celluloid. Under the present law celluloid in blocks, sheets, rods, tubes, or other forms, not polished wholly or partly and not made up into finished or partly finished articles, bears a duty of 45 cents per pound, which has been reduced in the proposed law to 15 per cent ad valorem and not less than 15 cents per pound. Articles made of celluloid under the present law bear a duty of 65 cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem, and the rate upon these articles has been fixed in the proposed law at 35 per cent and not less than 40 cents per pound. A high duty was placed upon these articles in the Dingley bill because of the alcohol used in their manufacture, but since the passage of the denatured-alcohol act in 1906 the necessity for maintaining so high a duty does not exist. The act of 1909, while making a small reduction in the duties upon celluloid in blocks or sheets, increased the duty upon articles made from celluloid. As denatured alcohol is now used in the manufacture of celluloid there is no necessity for the maintenance of any compensatory duty to the manufacturer for the alcohol used in making it. The duty upon celluloid in blocks and sheets is to-day prohibitive, and very little is imported. The manufacturers of celluloid who appeared before the finance committee claimed that the provisions of the proposed law would work a hardship upon them, because a duty was placed upon camphor and the duty reduced upon their finished product, and that their business would be ruined by competition with celluloid articles manufactured in Japan. In connection with this claim I wish to insert the following taken from the Daily Consular and Trade Reports, page 1202, of the year 1911, as given by the American consul, George M. West, relating to the celluloid manufacture in Japan. In speaking of the celluloid factories being erected in Japan he makes the following statement:

CELLULOID MANUFACTURE IN JAPAN.

[From Consul George N. West, Kobe.]

Supplementing the report in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports for January 10, 1911, I have succeeded in obtaining additional information concerning the celluloid factory being erected at Sakai (and the same information will apply to the Aboshi factory) and the probable effect of their output in the oriental and American celluloid markets.

The normal capacity of the Sakai factory will be 1 ton per day of 10 working hours, or 1½ tons at 14 working hours; of the Aboshi plant, 3 tons per day; but it is not thought possible for them to produce their normal capacity, and 600 to 700 pounds per day will be the limit, at least for the present, of the Sakai factory.

COST OF PRODUCTION.

The output of the factories will be of very medium quality, owing to the inferiority of the materials from which it is made and the lack of skilled labor. Only the cheap qualities of celluloid are used in Japan, and this will be what the factories will produce. The imports in 1910 were about 700,000 pounds, of which 300,000 pounds were reexported to China in a manufactured state.

From the best sources of information obtainable the cost of the ingredients entering into the production of celluloid in Japan, other than camphor, will be as follows: Nitric acid, to be manufactured at the works, 8 cents per pound of about 90 per cent strength; sulphuric acid, $22 per ton of 98 per cent strength; nitrate of soda, $45 per ton; grain alcohol, 96 per cent strength, 8½ cents per pound; wood spirits (American) of 97 per cent strength, 14 cents per pound; tissue paper (cotton), Japanese manufacture, 18 to 20 cents per pound. This paper will be inferior in quality to the American 10-cent grade. The factories are paying 32 cents per pound for the cheaper class of camphor at the present time (January 17, 1911).

While the cost of labor will be low in comparison with the prices paid in the United States, it will take five or more workers in Japan to perform the work done by one person in the United States. The average cost for all classes of labor at these factories will approximate 50 cents per day of 10 hours, overtime being paid for at the same rate. The employees are given two holidays each month with pay; otherwise they work seven days each week.

The cost of maintenance of the factories will be greatly in excess of that necessary in the United States, as the same attention is not paid to the care of machinery and other articles and repairs are not quickly and adequately made, but makeshifts are used to supply broken parts, which soon render machinery useless.

It will be noted that the prices given in the above report for the raw materials used in the manufacture of celluloid are, in some instances, 50 per cent and even, in many instances, close to 100 per cent higher than the American prices for the corresponding articles. These same manufacturers were also before the Ways and Means Committee in 1909, claiming that their business would be ruined by any decrease of duties upon their products and succeeded in obtaining an increase of duties upon articles manufactured from celluloid. The manufacture of celluloid is an American invention, and an examination of statistics shows that quite a large foreign trade has been built up. We exported in the year ending June, 1911, about $1,694,000 of these manufactured products, and in 1907 $444,000, showing an increase of nearly 300 per cent.

As the average price of crude camphor imported in 1911 was about 30 cents per pound, the proposed duty of 3 cents per pound would be equivalent to an ad valorem duty of about 10 per cent. As the duty upon crude celluloid would be at the minimum 15 cents per pound, in which the duty on camphor would amount only to 1 cent, as camphor constitutes, by weight, but one-third of celluloid, and since the duty upon articles manufactured from celluloid in the proposed bill is at a minimum 40 cents per pound, the manufacturers being allowed the use of denatured alcohol and obtaining nearly all their raw materials free of duty, have no just ground for complaint. Nor does the information disclosed in the consular reports in regard to the cost of manufacture of celluloid in Japan furnish any ground for the claim that their industries would be severely crippled by a reduction of the duties proposed in H. R. 20182, especially so when it is considered that the Japanese factories, as has been stated, are equipped with machinery imported almost exclusively from the United States. At a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee in 1890, page 384, J. R. France, president of the Arlington Manufacturing Co., one of the companies appearing before the finance committee in 1911, in speaking of a bill permitting the use of denatured alcohol in the manufacture of celluloid, said as follows: "The increasing cost of manufacture makes this tax entirely prohibitive to the sale of our goods in all markets except home. There are large fields open to us from which, for this cost, we are entirely shut out. The superiority of American manufacturers in this line is so much in advance of foreign competition that despite the disparity of earnings by employees as compared with foreign labor we could easily compete and that with good profits except for this tax." The tax referred to, of course, is the internal-revenue tax upon alcohol then in existence. In view of this statement by Mr. France, the complaint of his successors before the Finance Committee at this session that they will be subjected to ruinous competition by reason of the reductions in the duties upon celluloid is without any substantial foundation.

PAINTS.

The pending bill recognizes the extensive use of paints and pigments in this country and the established condition of the paint industries and makes a moderate reduction in the duties on their products, as well as on the raw materials from which they are manufactured. Nearly all the raw materials for manufacturing paint are found or manufactured in this country except the finer grades of ochers and earths, which are imported. Statistics show that in 1910 we exported paints and pigments to the value of $4,726,000, and in 1911 $5,240,000. Testimony given before the Finance Committee disclosed that profits were large in this industry, one manufacturer admitting his profits to be about 40 per cent. The duty upon paints, therefore, has been reduced from 30 per cent to 20 per cent ad valorem.

In this connection I will take but a moment to read into the RECORD the testimony of R. E. Armstrong, as found on page 339 of the hearings before the Finance Committee at the present session:

Senator McCUMBER. Will you give the committee an idea of the profit there is in your business?
Mr. ARMSTRONG. In my own personal business?
Senator McCUMBER. Yes; the percentage of profit. I am not asking you to go into the details of your private business at all.
Mr. ARMSTRONG. I understand. I might say before I tell you that, Senator, that I think my business is different from my fellows', perhaps, in this way: If you and I were running peanut stands and you got to your place of business at 10 o'clock and I got to mine at 5, I probably would do considerably more business than you would, and make more money at it.
Senator McCUMBER. Unless you belonged to a labor union. Then, of course, it would be the same.
Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will say that our profits will run, usually, about 40 per cent on the capital invested.

SOAPS.

House bill 20182 also makes a large reduction in the duty upon soaps, that upon common soaps being reduced from 20 per cent to 15 per cent ad valorem, but not less than 1 cent per pound, and upon medicinal soaps from an ad valorem of 73½ to 30 per cent, and upon fancy or perfumed soaps from 50 per cent ad valorem to 40 per cent ad valorem, but not less than 20 cents per pound. While we imported in 1911 common soap to the value of $68,806, we exported soap of the same class of the value of $2,305,010. Of toilet or perfumed or fancy soaps we imported in the same year $380,472 worth and exported $1,741,171 worth. As the production of soaps in this country amounted in value to more than $100,000,000 in 1910, there is no danger that this industry will be ruined by the new rates. A heavy reduction has been made in the duties upon sodas and glycerin, which enter largely into the manufacture of soaps, which will nearly offset the small duty that has been imposed upon some of the oils which enter into their manufacture.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to recur for a moment to the quotation made by the Senator from Maine from the manufacturer of paint who appeared before the committee. Is there much testimony of that character to indicate that protected manufacturers are earning a profit of 40 per cent annually on their invested capital?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not recall any testimony to that effect except that which I have read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the testimony from which the Senator read was that of a young fellow by the name of Armstrong, of Chicago. He started in——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I would prefer to give the statement in regard to it, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me. He can make any answer he sees fit in his own time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will be glad to listen to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. My recollection of him is different from that of the Senator insofar as his being a young fellow is concerned, unless I am young.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator looks that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that the only explanation the Senator desires to make?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I had some additional questions I wanted to ask. I wanted to inquire whether, in the opinion of the committee, that was the "reasonable profit" mentioned in the Republican platform that manufacturers were entitled to make at the expense of the American people?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I am unable to answer the Senator's inquiry. I have simply read from the testimony of one manufacturer who appeared before the Finance Committee, and the record of his testimony disclosed the statement which I have read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume that manufacturer was anxious to have the tariff reduced?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. He complained about placing a duty on certain raw materials used in the manufacture of paint and which by the amendments proposed by the minority of the committee are returned to the free list. His complaint was that we were taxing raw materials and that the raw materials used in the manufacture of paint should be left upon the free list.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He had no objection to the reduction of the tariff on paint?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not recall that he was inquired of in regard to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember the testimony of Mr. Armstrong very well. He was a young man who started a business in Chicago——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, while I would be glad to yield to the Senator for a question, but so long as he is, as I understand, to present his views to the Senate upon the subject, it seems to me he can very well answer in his own time. I am very anxious, if the Senator will pardon me, to get through with what little I have to say, as the hour is late.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator objects, I will say nothing more about it; but will tell the Senate at some later time who Mr. Armstrong is, what capital he has invested, and what sort of a manufacturer he is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The bill also makes heavy reductions upon soda salts and corresponding heavy reductions upon manufactured potash salts, while the potash salts used for fertilizer purposes have been left on the free list as heretofore, and a small revenue duty has been placed on some of the potash compounds which have hitherto been upon the free list, the manufacture of which has been introduced into this country and which the small duty imposed may operate to stimulate.

The widest departure from previous tariff bills is made in H. R. 20182 in placing a duty upon a large number of articles which have hitherto been upon the free list and many of which are not produced in this country. Many of these are luxuries, and the duty imposed is for the purpose of raising a revenue. The dutiable value of these articles in the imports of 1911 was about $42,000,000, and at the rates fixed by H. R. 20182 would have yielded a revenue of about $4,000,000, at an average ad valorem of 9.55 per cent. By the amendments proposed these dutiable values would be reduced to less than $34,000,000, and the revenue derived therefrom would be $3,300,000, at an average ad valorem of 9¾ per cent. While these are articles of universal consumption and the duty imposed is therefore a tax upon consumption and admitted to be such, nevertheless it is a tax which will be paid by the consumer into the Treasury of the Government for the purpose of its maintenance, and is therefore a tax which every patriotic citizen will readily pay. If any of these articles are used as the raw materials for the manufacture of exports from this country, the duty imposed upon them will not increase the price of such articles, because under the provisions of the present law a rebate of the duty paid can be obtained upon proper application. Many of these items which have been transferred from the free list to the dutiable list are used in the manufacture of perfumes and cosmetics, articles which are luxuries, and while the duty upon the finished products has not been increased by this bill, it will be found by reference to importations for the year 1911 that the duties upon perfumes have an ad valorem equivalent of 64.32 per cent, and, as the duties placed by the proposed bill upon raw materials entering into the manufacture of perfumeries and cosmetics is 20 per cent ad valorem, the manufacturer is still afforded a margin of about 40 per cent, which ought to enable him to meet foreign competition. As these perfumes are highly finished products and luxuries, they afford a legitimate opportunity for the imposition of a revenue tax.

In the report of the committee the proposed bill is criticized because a tax is placed upon some raw materials or the present duty upon some increased, while there has been a decrease in the duty upon the manufactured products made from them. This criticism has been answered in the report of the minority of the committee, and I ask permission to insert at this point so much of the report as deals with this criticism. The motive for this course was merely to raise revenue in the case of the raw materials on the one hand and to protect the consumer against unreasonably high prices on the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The extract referred to is as follows:

BENZOIC ACID AND BENZOATE OF SODA.

Benzoic acid is transferred from the free list to the dutiable list, with a duty of 5 cents a pound by H. R. 20182, and the duty on benzoate of soda made from it reduced from 25 per cent to 15 per cent. No benzoate of soda is now imported, because the duty is prohibitive, and as it is used exclusively as a food preservative, which at present is discouraged, no hardship would seem to fall upon its manufacture because of this change in duties, nor would those engaged in it seem to be entitled to the fostering care of the Government under any theory.

PHTHALIC ACID AND PHENOLPHTHALEIN.

In the case of phthalic acid and phenolphthalein the import price of the latter is between $1 and $1.50 per pound, so that even at the lowest price it would pay a duty of 15 cents per pound, against the proposed duty of 5 cents upon the acid. Moreover, in its manufacture over 50 per cent of the raw material used is carbolic acid, which H. R. 20182 places on the free list. The colors made from phthalic acid will pay a duty of 25 per cent under H. R. 20182, which will afford a sufficient manufacturing margin.

ARGOLS OR CRUDE TARTAR AND CREAM TARTAR AND TARTARIC ACID.

H. R. 20182 increases the duty on argols or cream tartar from 5 per cent ad valorem to 10 per cent ad valorem, and upon tartaric acid and cream of tartar made from the same the duties are decreased from 5 cents a pound to 3 cents and 2½ cents a pound, respectively. Argols or crude tartar, of which we imported 29,269,977 pounds in 1911, at a unit value of about 10 cents a pound, would at the proposed ad valorem duty of 10 per cent, bear a duty of 1 cent per pound, and as cream of tartar, which is made from argols or wine lees by refining, bears a duty of 2½ cents per pound, the difference between the duty on the raw material and that on the finished product will about equal the manufacturing cost, as the process of refining is simple and inexpensive, and consists in boiling the argols in water, thereby separating the cream of tartar from impurities, and obtaining crystals of cream of tartar by evaporation. In this process tartaric acid is one of the by-products, and what has been said of the duty on cream of tartar applies to the duty on that. The present duty on both cream of tartar and tartaric acid is practically prohibitive.

COAL-TAR PRODUCTS AND COAL-TAR DYES OR COLORS.

Strong representations were made by several parties to the Ways and Means Committee in 1908–9 as to the advisability of placing a duty upon certain of the primary and intermediate coal-tar products. It was claimed that this country could now supply these products and would do so with slight protection, and that this would not increase the price to the consumer of the finished product. (See pp. 103–147, Tariff Hearings, Schedule A, 1908–9.)

CAMPHOR, COLLODION, ARTICLES OF COLLODION.

While crude camphor is transferred from the free list to the dutiable list with a duty of 3 cents per pound by H. R. 20182, the manufacture of collodion is not affected thereby, because collodion contains no camphor. Camphor, however, does enter into the manufacture of articles of collodion, of which it constitutes about one-third by weight; the other articles used are nitric acid and sulphuric acid and cotton. As nitric acid and cotton are on the free list and sulphuric acid is placed there by this bill, a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem on articles of collodion or celluloid would seem to afford a large manufacturing margin. The average price of crude camphor imported in 1911 was about 30 cents per pound, and at this price the proposed duty of 3 cents per pound would be equivalent to an ad valorem duty of less than 10 per cent.

GUM CHICLE AND CHEWING GUM.

In the case of gum chicle and chewing gum at the hearing before the Finance Committee the manufacturers declared their willingness to pay a duty of 50 per cent ad valorem, which, at the price given in the imports for the last year, would be more than the duty proposed of 20 cents per pound. They wanted, however, the duty put on an ad valorem basis because they admittedly controlled the market and would be able to determine the price. In 1911 we imported 5,368,567 pounds of chicle, practically all of which was converted into chewing gum, and doubling the duty will have little or no effect upon this import and will yield over half a million dollars additional revenue. No chewing gum is imported. The Chicle Trust is certainly no object of justifiable commiseration.

IODINE AND POTASSIUM IODIDE AND IODOFORM.

Potassium iodide contains 70.5 per cent iodine; iodoform, 95 per cent. There is therefore a large margin left to cover manufacturing differences. Neither potassium iodide nor iodoform are imported, nor are they likely to be under the reduced duty. The duty on iodoform was originally placed high on account of the alcohol used in its manufacture, and since the introduction of denatured alcohol in 1906 the high duty is no longer necessary.

COCA LEAVES AND COCAINE.

The duty on the leaves is increased from 5 cents per pound to 10 cents per pound and on cocaine from $1.50 per ounce to $2 per ounce, a duty claimed by manufacturers and dealers to be prohibitive, which, in the case of a dangerous drug like cocaine, will assist in the regulation of its use. If the duty on the manufactured articles is made practically prohibitive, there should be an increased duty upon the leaves.

CITRATE OF LIME AND CITRIC ACID.

In 1910 we manufactured $77,200 worth of citric acid and imported only $9,940 worth, about 1¼ per cent of our consumption. The duty of 7 cents a pound is clearly prohibitive. The duty of 1 cent a pound upon citrate of lime, which is easily manufactured, is equivalent to about 7 per cent ad valorem, while the duty upon citric acid is over 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The General Chemical Co., one of the largest manufacturers of chemicals in this country, in its brief filed with the committee, opposed the reduction of the duties upon some heavy chemicals manufactured by it, among which are alum, sulphate of ammonia, hyposulphite of soda, silicate of soda, and sodium sulphide. In view of the fact that these are all heavy chemicals and their manufacture is protected not only by the duties imposed but by the large cost of transportation, we believe that the reductions in the duties made in the proposed bill are not unreasonable, and a brief examination will disclose the correctness of our position. Alum is made from bauxite which is dutiable under the present law at $1 a ton. This duty has been reduced to 50 cents a ton in the House metal bill which has already passed the Senate. One ton of bauxite will make at least three tons of alum which will sell in the market at the average price of $25 a short ton. In the House bill a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem has been placed upon aluminum compounds equivalent to a specific duty of at least $3 a ton, so that alum would bear this duty under the proposed bill, and as there is no duty upon the other ingredients used in its manufacture this duty surely ought to cover the difference between the cost of production here and elsewhere. Sulphate of magnesia or Epsom salts is manufactured from kieserite which is already on the free list and is continued there by the proposed bill. The duty has been reduced upon sulphate of magnesia or Epsom salts from one-fifth of a cent a pound to one-tenth of a cent a pound, equivalent to a reduction from $4 a short ton to $2 a short ton. As sulphate of magnesia or Epsom salts is used industrially to a very large extent, especially in the textile industries, and no chemicals which bear a duty are used in its manufacture, it would seem as if a duty of $2 a ton added to the sea freight would be a sufficient protection to place the manufacture of it on a fair basis of competition.

The reduction of the duty on hyposulphite of soda from three-eighths of a cent to one-fourth of a cent per pound was made for the reason that under the present duty of three-eighths of a cent per pound there are no importations, as the duty is prohibitive. The reduction of one-eighth of a cent a pound in the proposed bill, making the duty one-fourth of a cent per pound, allows for possible importation to induce some competition. It is very evident, from an examination of the imports under the Dingley tariff law compared with the importations under the Payne-Aldrich tariff that the lower-priced or commercial product is excluded from importation, and that the higher priced is now imported, as under the Dingley tariff law the unit value of importations was 1 cent a pound and in 1910 this was increased to 1.4 cents and in 1911 to 2.1. The rate in the proposed bill of one-fourth of a cent a pound is equivalent to 12.50 per cent ad valorem, a reduction from 18.10 per cent in the present law. Hyposulphite of soda is a heavy chemical, and when the cost of sea transportation is taken into consideration the duty of 12.50 would seem to be sufficient protection.

Soda silicate. In this the reduction has been from three-eighths cent a pound to one-eighth, or from 39.89 per cent to 13.89 per cent ad valorem. This is a heavy chemical, and the cost of transportation is a large factor.

Sodium sulphide. The House bill proposes a reduction from three-eighths to one-fourth of a cent per pound on the crystal. In 1911 not quite 228 tons of both the crystal and the concentrated were imported, so that the competition between the American and foreign manufacturer can not be very keen, in view of the fact that the articles are of general heavy consumption. The duty of one-fourth of a cent a pound is equivalent to an ad valorem of 17.85 per cent. A large cut is made in all of the soda salts, because of their extreme importance and their use in the industries.

C. E. MOORE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine has concluded, I move that the Senate——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5790) for the relief of C. E. Moore.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Postmaster General to cause the accounts of C. E. Moore, late postmaster at Cherryvale, State of Kansas, to be credited with the sum of $130, and that he cause that credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, being on account of the loss of $130 in postal funds lost by the failure of the Cherryvale National Bank, at Cherryvale, Kans., it appearing that the loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the late postmaster, and appropriates $130 to pay the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator to make a request.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I stated to the Senate in some remarks I made a few days ago that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had prepared a substitute bill for Senate bill No. 3. I now rise, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 3, Calendar No. 348, be now laid before the Senate in order that I may ask to substitute for it the amendment proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks that the bill which he has indicated be now laid before the Senate in order that he may offer an amendment to it in the nature of a substitute. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3) to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries, and home economics in secondary schools; in maintaining instruction in these vocational subjects in State normal schools; in maintaining extension departments in State colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure.

Mr. PAGE. I now ask that the amendment reported by the committee be substituted for that bill on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to inquire whether the acceptance of the substitute would commit the Senate to the substitute without further amendment in any way?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. PAGE. Not at all. I have no desire to do that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that the Senator asks unanimous consent to substitute the bill to which he refers for the original bill?

Mr. PAGE. That is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that it go to the calendar, to take the place of the original bill reported?

Mr. PAGE. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 15, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 14, 1912.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE ARMY.

First Lieut. Emery T. Smith, Ninth Infantry, to be first lieutenant of Field Artillery, with rank from January 25, 1907.

First Lieut. Charles T. Smart, First Field Artillery, to be first lieutenant of Infantry, with rank from January 25, 1907.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Frank M. Foote, of Wyoming, to be receiver of public moneys at Evanston, Wyo., his term having expired March 30, 1912. (Reappointment.)

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

George D. Orner, of Oklahoma, to be register of the land office at Woodward, Okla., his term having expired May 1, 1912. (Reappointment.)

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

H. C. Hollenbeck to be postmaster at Soldiers Home, Cal., in place of Thomas J. Thorp, resigned.

Samuel F. Jenkins to be postmaster at Richmond, Cal., in place of Lizzie McGann.

W. D. Pennycook to be postmaster at Vallejo, Cal., in place of W. D. Pennycook. Incumbent's commission expired May 20, 1912.

FLORIDA.

Elbert A. Froscher to be postmaster at Marathon, Fla. Office became presidential April 1, 1912.

INDIANA.

Andrew F. Gugsell to be postmaster at Jasper, Ind., in place of Winfield S. Hunter. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1912.

George E. Spake to be postmaster at Monroeville, Ind., in place of Frank D. Walters, removed.

IOWA.

J. V. Williams to be postmaster at Union, Iowa, in place of Oscar E. Wood. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1912.

LOUISIANA.

Earl G. Eagles to be postmaster at Winnfield, La., in place of Edward Eagles. Incumbent's commission expired May 14, 1912.

MARYLAND.

Samuel S. Yingling to be postmaster at Reisterstown, Md., in place of Samuel S. Yingling. Incumbent's commission expired May 26, 1912.

MICHIGAN.

A. Edgar West to be postmaster at Upton Works, Mich., in place of Frank A. Peavey. Incumbent's commission expired February 27, 1912.

MISSOURI.

Charles L. Farrar to be postmaster at Macon, Mo., in place of Charles L. Farrar. Incumbent's commission expired April 22, 1912.

Chester R. Peck to be postmaster at Malden, Mo., in place of William J. Huggins, deceased.

NEW JERSEY.

William E. Bedle to be postmaster at Keyport, N. J., in place of Ellison D. Petteys. Incumbent's commission expired December 11, 1911.

NEW YORK.

David Akers to be postmaster at Hillburn, N. Y., in place of David Akers. Incumbent's commission expired February 10, 1912.

Wilfred A. Robbins to be postmaster at Mexico, N. Y., in place of Webster M. Richardson. Incumbent's commission expired December 17, 1911.

Frank W. Smith to be postmaster at Freeville, N. Y., in place of William E. Stufin, deceased.

Louis M. Spaulding to be postmaster at Albion, N. Y., in place of Samuel P. Milby, removed.

Wilbur H. Wolcott to be postmaster at Crown Point, N. Y., in place of Charles Talbot, deceased.

NORTH DAKOTA.

John W. Doles to be postmaster at Stanley, N. Dak., in place of John W. Doles. Incumbent's commission expired March 17, 1912.

OHIO.

Clifford N. Quirk to be postmaster at Chardon, Ohio, in place of Clifford N. Quirk. Incumbent's commission expired May 16, 1912.

OKLAHOMA.

David C. Blossom to be postmaster at Atoka, Okla., in place of David C. Blossom. Incumbent's commission expired April 28, 1912.

OREGON.

Mabel Miller to be postmaster at Jacksonville, Oreg., in place of John F. Miller. Incumbent's commission expired March 21, 1912.

PENNSYLVANIA.

David A. Moore to be postmaster at New Castle, Pa., in place of John A. McKee. Incumbent's commission expired April 29, 1912.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Fred C. Bowles to be postmaster at Dell Rapids, S. Dak., in place of Fred C. Bowles. Incumbent's commission expired May 22, 1912.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 14, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, the inspiration of all that makes life dear, we thank Thee for our Republic, with its splendid traditions, sacred institutions, and incomparable genius; a precious heritage made possible by the heroic sacrifices and daring deeds of our fathers, which challenged the admiration of men everywhere and thrilled the hearts of the liberty-loving people round the world. We thank Thee that its national ensign, designed and carried to victory by our revered Washington, the Father of his Country, will be celebrated today with appropriate ceremonies in song and story. Grant, O most merciful Father, that it may continue to float in peace over a united country and with all the peoples of all the earth, forever and aye. In the spirit of the Prince of Peace, whose advent was heralded by the angelic host, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." And Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GREAT SEAL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 586.

Whereas the great seal of the House of Representatives having been in use continually since the year 1830 A. D., and having now become so worn as to make impressions taken therefrom almost illegible: Be it

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives immediately procure a new seal for the use of the House of Representatives, which shall possess the same design and description as the present seal, but shall now have 48 stars, emblematic of the 48 States of the Union, instead of the 24 stars now upon the present seal, which represent the 24 States constituting the Union at the time of the adoption of the present seal.

The necessary expense of procuring the new seal to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suppose, when the seal is obtained that the gentleman will introduce a resolution similar to the one now in force in reference to furnishing a copy of the impression to the State Department?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that that is the intention. This resolution simply provides for the purchase of the seal. I will state that the old seal is so worn that the impressions from it are almost illegible.

Mr. GARNER. What is to become of the old seal?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It will remain in the archives of the Capitol, I presume. This resolution does not undertake to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL MARITIME CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House House joint resolution 299, proposing an international maritime conference, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments. And in that connection I desire to say that this resolution, for an international maritime conference to propose laws and regulations for greater security of life and property at sea, was introduced by Judge ALEXANDER, of Missouri. It was unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and was passed by the House unanimously and sent to the Senate. While pending in the Senate the Secretary of State informed the Senate that the German Government had issued a similar invitation for an international maritime conference, and that the President, as I understand it, through the German ambassador, had, on the part of our Government, accepted the invitation. These amendments are to give the United States Government representation at this international maritime conference for the greater security of life and protection of property at sea. I trust the House will concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. SULZER. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman states that the invitation of the German Government was accepted by this Government, and now an appropriation is sought to be made for the expenses of our representatives at that conference. What right has anybody to accept these invitations without authority of Congress?

Mr. SULZER. Of course, if Congress does not authorize it, it can not be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it not be a little more deferential to submit the matter to Congress for its assent before the invitation is accepted, rather than to embarrass, sometimes, those who accept these invitations by having it ascertained later that Congress thinks a little differently about it?

Mr. SULZER. In view of the recent terrible catastrophe of the Titanic it seems to me that this international maritime conference should be called, and everything ought to be done that can be done to provide better laws and regulations for the security of life and the protection of property at sea. It is a matter of much public moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection, but I simply wanted to admonish those in authority who are too free in accepting invitations.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know whether this resolution, as amended by the Senate, carries an additional appropriation beyond what it carried when passed by the House?

Mr. SULZER. The joint resolution carried no appropriation in the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New York ask unanimous consent to consider this resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole, because the rule, as I understand, is that where a House bill or joint resolution is amended and an appropriation added to it or increased, it can not be agreed to except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. This amendment carries no appropriation.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand it carries $10,000.

The SPEAKER. The bill itself carries an appropriation of $10,000.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from New York, I understood, stated otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is mistaken. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion to concur was agreed to.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, in connection with this matter, two letters from the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to by Mr. SULZER are as follows:

JUNE 13, 1912.

The Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: In order that you may be informed of the reason for the amendment made by the Senate to House Joint Resolution 299, proposing an international maritime conference, I beg to inclose herewith a copy of a letter which I addressed to Senator Cullom on the 11th of this month. I am sure that you will agree with me that, in view of the purpose of the German Government as set forth in the letter, the amendment made by the Senate would seem to be desirable to avoid duplication by this Government of the work already undertaken by the German Government.

I am, my dear Mr. Sulzer,
Very sincerely, yours,
P. C. KNOX.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 11, 1912.

The Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM,
Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR CULLOM: In the belief that the information may be of interest to your committee in connection with the pending legislation now under consideration by it, I have the honor to inform you that this department has recently been notified by the German ambassador that his Government has already ascertained, as a result of informal inquiries, that practically all the important maritime powers of the world would receive with favor a proposal from his Government to join in an international conference to consider the adoption of regulations for safety at sea, and that his Government therefore is about to issue invitations for an international conference on this subject to be held in Germany. It is understood that it is the intention of the German Government to arrange, if possible, to convene the proposed conference before the end of the summer, and in that case the conclusions reached by it will doubtless be available for use by Congress at its next session.

In view of this purpose of the German Government I take the liberty of suggesting for your consideration the advisability of amending the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 299) now under consideration by your committee, so that instead of providing that the President be authorized and requested to ascertain the opinions of the maritime nations upon the desirability of an international maritime conference to meet at Washington on the invitation of the United States (lines 3 to 7), that the President be authorized to convey to maritime nations the desire of Congress that an international maritime conference be held to consider, etc., as provided in the resolution. Some such amendment as this seems desirable in order that it may not be necessary for this Government to duplicate the work already undertaken by the German Government if the conference to be called by that Government is willing to take up for consideration the several subjects enumerated in this resolution. I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
P. C. KNOX.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BROWNING, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to ask if this is not the day specially set apart by the rules for the consideration of private pension bills?

The SPEAKER. That is true; yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes to explain the present condition of pension legislation, pending this motion.

INTERNATIONAL MARITIME CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri in a minute. It turns out that the Chair was mistaken instead of the gentleman from New York. The amendment was on the other side of the sheet of the resolution and misled the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to vacate the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SULZER. I will.

Mr. BARTLETT. Where is it proposed to hold this conference?

Mr. SULZER. In Berlin, Germany, the latter part of the summer.

Mr. BARTLETT. And how many commissioners are provided for?

Mr. SULZER. If this resolution becomes a law, no doubt the President will send two or three representatives from the United States. The $10,000 will pay all their expenses.

Mr. BARTLETT. And this resolution provides for their expenses?

Mr. SULZER. That is all.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Will the amount in this resolution be the limit of their expenses?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; absolutely. I shall oppose any additional expense.

Mr. GARNER. Will they not be here next session with a deficiency?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly not.

Mr. GARNER. It was stated in the House at the time the resolution was reported that the commission would not cost anything. I am asking the gentleman now so that the RECORD may show that there will be no additional expense outside of this.

Mr. SULZER. I will be in accord with the gentleman regarding that.

Mr. GARNER. But the gentleman stated before that he would be with me.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Texas will pardon me, if the RECORD shows it, it does not affect the facts at all; they can come back whenever they want to.

Mr. GARNER. I have observed that, especially with regard to resolutions that come with a proposition for a commission, the thing is authorized, accepted, invitations issued, and the statement is made that it will cost nothing; but they immediately come back with a proposition that costs the Government anywhere from $10,000 to $50,000. I want to find out whether this next Congress will have to appropriate $10,000 or $20,000 more.

Mr. SULZER. The $10,000 will be the limit; there will be no more asked for. That amount should be ample to pay the expenses of our representatives.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, this appropriations of $10,000 which was added in the Senate was for the purpose of carrying out some sort of an agreement made by the State Department, I understand.

Mr. SULZER. The $10,000 is appropriated to pay the expenses of the representatives of the United States in case they are sent to Berlin to participate in this international maritime conference.

Mr. SISSON. Who called this conference?

Mr. SULZER. It has been called by the German Government.

Mr. SISSON. And the United States Government signified its acceptance to attend through the State Department?

Mr. SULZER. I understand that was done.

Mr. SISSON. Through the State Department?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the State Department and the Executive Department have a habit of incurring certain obligations by entering into an agreement with foreign nations and then coming to Congress and asking Congress to appropriate money in accordance with that agreement. It is a practice that is extremely dangerous, because the Executive Department assumes and arrogates to itself a power to enter into an agreement and then coming and telling Congress that they have entered into an agreement and that there is a moral obligation resting on Congress to provide the funds. It is a practice that is gradually on the increase. It is an encouragement to the Executive Department with a monarchical tendency to create obligations which Congress has no right, they say, to decline to meet. I think the practice has got to be a very wicked one. In this instance they are asking now for $10,000, but that is a mere beginning. I have never known one of them to end, and I am opposed to the Federal Government paying one cent toward this conference. If the ship owners and the people interested in this transportation of passengers across the ocean are willing to do their duty by the public, the Government ought not to be called upon to contribute anything.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is a fact that not only this Congress but the English people have had an investigation of the recent terrible disaster, and all the facts have been developed about it from these investigations already. Laws have been passed by this Congress, and laws are proposed to be passed by the English Parliament and by other Governments that will prevent these disasters in the future.

Mr. SISSON. I think the gentleman from Georgia is right; both Governments have already taken steps, and all the Governments have taken such steps. These international conferences only result, as a rule, in an opportunity for a number of gentlemen to take a junketing trip abroad, and no real good will come from it. These transportation companies across the ocean, those having vast facilities, owned by people who owe obligations to the traveling public, themselves are the ones who ought to have this business meeting and agree among themselves what they ought to do.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a few words. Let me say to my friend from Mississippi that the House of Representatives through the gentleman from Missouri, Judge ALEXANDER, initiated this movement for an international maritime conference to provide for better laws and regulations for the security of life and for the protection of property at sea. The joint resolution introduced by him passed the House unanimously. It provided that the President of the United States should call this international maritime conference here, and of course if it were held here it would entail on the Government a very large expense to receive and entertain the representatives from foreign countries; but while this matter was pending in the Senate, after it had passed the House, the German Government called a similar conference, and our Government signified that it would be glad to participate. This will no doubt save us thousands of dollars. It will be much cheaper to send our representatives to Germany to attend the conference, instead of having the representatives of all the foreign Governments come to the United States. I think the resolution as amended by the Senate is a good solution of the problem along economical lines.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, there never was a proposition to take money out of the Treasury but that the proponents did not think it was a splendid thing and along economical lines. If we all entertained the views of the gentleman from New York, we never could stop it.

As suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], the investigations in England and the United States show that, as far as the vessel was concerned, so far as the Titanic disaster was concerned, it was due to criminal negligence and criminal carelessness. No amount of law and no amount of regulation will prevent people from being careless and negligent, because the law of negligence can not make people careful. No amount of regulation will bring about any state of affairs which might not be repeated with the same conditions that surrounded the Titanic. This proposition is a mere beginning of what will result in a large claim for an appropriation.

Mr. SULZER. This amount of $10,000 is all that will be expended for this purpose. I assure the gentleman of that.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman can not bind the future action of these men that will meet here, and I expect to hear the gentleman from New York at the next Congress showing how economical it would be to spend $20,000 for the next conference, in view of the magnificent result that was attained by this.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, no. Our representatives can not exceed this appropriation for expenses. If they do, they will have to pay it out of their own pockets.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 71, noes 18.

So the Senate amendments were concurred in.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for five minutes in order to explain the present condition of pension legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it not the intention of the gentleman to endeavor to set aside some other day for pension business?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is; but I want to explain the importance of it, in the hope that no objections be made to the request.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he better do that on the day he sets apart.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, then I will now only ask unanimous consent that the day following the completion of the sundry civil appropriation bill be substituted for to-day, with all of the rights that now pertain to this as private pension day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to suggest that he except suspension days and Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; excepting Calendar Wednesday and suspension day.

Mr. MANN. Excepting Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will except all three of them, and in case one of those days should follow the completion of this bill, then the day following that to be substituted for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to set aside and substitute for to-day the first legislative day following the completion of the sundry civil appropriation bill, to be devoted to consideration of pension legislation, excepting Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 16689. An act legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6926. An act to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas;

S. 6688. An act to repeal section 13 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes'";

S. 6453. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," approved March 3, 1899;

S. 6414. An act to establish a fish experiment station and fish hatchery;

S. 1152. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Bradford Crowninshield; and

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to amend the patent issued to the State of Idaho for lands described herein.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution (H. Con. Res. 56):

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 23557) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war" to strike out, on page 35, line 23, the name "Moffitt" and insert the name "Maffitt."

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 6414. An act to establish a fish experiment station and fish hatchery; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 1152. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Bradford Crowninshield; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to amend the patent issued to the State of Idaho for lands described herein; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6926. An act to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6688. An act to repeal section 13 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act amending an act entitled 'An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes'"; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is business on the Private Calendar which the House has been unable to attend to, many bills that are of importance to the Members and their constituents, and I rise to ask unanimous consent that after the sundry civil appropriation bill is disposed of, not to interfere with the order which has just been made with reference to pension and not to interfere with suspension day or Calendar Wednesday on such other days next week as are available, it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar which are not objected to, and that after the bills that are not objected to have been considered then it shall be in order to consider the other bills on the Private Calendar, the order to be limited to next week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that next week, after the disposition of the sundry civil appropriation bill and after the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] has his day for the consideration of pension legislation, such private bills as to which there is no objection shall be considered; that after that any other private business may be called up; this order to apply to next week only. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if, during the next two weeks, in which will be held two national conventions, when a good deal of politics will be discussed throughout the country, it is the intention for this House not to do anything more than what may be done by unanimous consent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if there is objection to the latter portion of the order which I suggested, I shall withdraw that request and simply limit it to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar to which there is no objection. Next week it will probably be difficult to obtain a quorum. A number of Members will be here, however, and there are a great number of small bills on the calendar to which there really is no objection and which Members are anxious to get through the House. This is an opportunity when that can be accomplished.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I have no objection to taking up bills on the Private Calendar and to disposing of them, because I realize that during the session there has not been very much attention given to that class of bills. But we have been in session now for nearly six months, and a great many of us have been here constantly—have not missed a day of the session—and it occurs to me that it seems hardly the proper thing for us to remain here for two weeks and do nothing when we might finish up the business of the session, get through, and go home. [Applause.]

Of course I am not charging anything against my good friend from Alabama, but I realize there has been a demand on both sides of the House for this sort of proposition, and it has been openly stated in the other body that they will not transact any business until the 1st day of July.

Mr. MANN. They have entered a unanimous-consent order to that effect.

Mr. FOSTER. A unanimous-consent order has been entered to that effect. But I want to suggest that it seems to me that the membership of the House of Representatives ought to remain here and transact the business of the House and be ready to adjourn by the 1st day of July and let the country know that it is not through any fault of ours that both Houses are not ready to adjourn. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he intends to be here every day during the week after next?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say that I expect to be here every day that my presence is necessary here.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman's presence is necessary all of the time.

Mr. FOSTER. And I want to say this, that my services are not required in Baltimore or Chicago, but that whatever little service I may be able to give to this House is required right here. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I daresay the gentleman's services will not be required in Baltimore, but they will be received.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. All of us desire to dispose of the public business, but in view of the fact that the coordinate branch of Congress is not going to do any business for two weeks from next Monday, except by unanimous consent, can my colleague suggest any possible means under the Constitution by which we can forward the public business ourselves?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague's statement is correct, but I want to remind him that this House can say to the people of this country that we have transacted our business and are ready to adjourn and go home. [Applause.] We can let the people know that fact by remaining here in session and keeping a quorum and transacting the business that is necessary to be done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will guarantee a quorum in the House next week if the gentleman will guarantee a quorum in the House week after next. I do not want any bluffing.

Mr. FOSTER. And that if there be any blame for not adjourning, it will rest upon the body at the other end of the Capitol and not upon us.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me just one word. In 40 years I have heard the speech of my honest colleague duplicated so many times that I want to suggest to him that, while he does not mean it, it is, in effect, as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to my colleague——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield for a minute.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to my colleague from Illinois that in his judgment it may be as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, but I want to say to him that the people of this country realize that the business of Congress should be promptly transacted and it should adjourn and go home. [Applause.] I want to say to him if he will go out among the people of this country that he will find that they do not regard this as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the proposition I desire to place before the House is not a partisan proposition. On all questions that come before the House, except the Private Calendar, we have a unanimous-consent day. You can not place bills on the Private Calendar on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Now, there are bills on that calendar that may not be of importance to the country at large or to the membership of this House as a whole, but they are of great importance to the individual Members and of great importance to the constituents of individual Members. Now, what I desire to do is to secure a day when we may have a unanimous-consent day practically, or days, for the Private Calendar, and that is what my request is, and if gentlemen want to object to bills on that calendar they ought to stay here, if they think it is of importance enough to object to them. It would not interfere with the conduct of business of the House because, if they want to go away the next week, it is apparent we can not attend to the general public business, and I think this is a good opportunity to dispose of the Private Calendar.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understood the gentleman's request to extend to next week only?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To next week only.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has the gentleman any objection to including the week following that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say the week following there will be probably conference reports in here and other public business that can be disposed of——

Mr. MANN. There will be conference reports here in the negative and conferences over in Baltimore.

Mr. ANTHONY. I intend to go to Chicago next week, but be here during the following week.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas if he is to be away, and he has a bill on the Private Calendar, he can probably get a friend to look after it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not this mean we will not transact any business for two weeks?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. SISSON. Well, I understand we have two parties in this House, notwithstanding the fact the gentleman says this is a nonpartisan request. Now, if Republicans should attend pretty largely the Republican convention in Chicago——

Mr. ADAIR. They will not. They are afraid to go.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman suggests that; I do not know whether they will go there or not, but will assume that they want to go to that convention. Then, if the Democrats go largely to Baltimore the following week you will have a majority of the Republicans absent next week and a majority of the Democrats absent the following week.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from Mississippi this has nothing to do with the following week. It will take all of next week on the sundry civil bill, or take a large part of next week——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will take a portion of it, at any rate. Monday will be taken up and Wednesday will be taken up, and the day for pensions, and this order will probably be confined to one day.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the request of the gentleman from Alabama will not be objected to. It is perfectly patent to everybody that a good many Members from this side of the House will be absent in Chicago next week. It is a courtesy on the part of the majority side of the House that they will not attempt to take up important legislation during the absence of many Members on the Republican side of the House who desire to attend the Republican national convention, and of course it goes without saying that if the House should be in session and the Republicans should have a majority during the session of the national convention in Baltimore that some sort of an understanding would be reached and carried into effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Now, the Chair will state it so there can not be any mistake on the part of Members. The request is, next week after this sundry civil bill gets through the House, except Monday and Wednesday, and allowing the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] a day for pensions, then any bill on the Private Calendar not objected to shall be considered.

Mr. MANN. And that the Private Calendar will be called in regular order.

The SPEAKER. It will be called in regular order.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069—the sundry civil appropriation bill—and I wish to give notice that I shall ask the House to stay late to-night in order to complete this bill before adjournment to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. What do you mean by staying late?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ten or 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25069—the sundry civil appropriation bill—with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 25069, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 77, line 17:

"Harbor of New York: For prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City:

"For pay of inspectors, deputy inspectors, office force, and expenses of office, $10,260;

"For pay of crews and maintenance of patrol fleet, six steam tugs, and one launch, $75,000;

"In all, $85,260."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations something about this item, which is for "the prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City." How far does the jurisdiction of the Federal Government extend in this matter?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the river and harbor act either of 1886 or 1888 provision is made for the prevention of deposits in the harbor of New York, and this force is maintained for that purpose. In view of the very extensive building operations that are carried on in the city of New York, and on account of the further fact that the street sweepings and garbage must be taken out to sea, the temptation is so great to shorten the haul and to dump within the harbor limits that it is to the interest of the Federal Government to maintain this supervision and thus avoid a large expenditure that otherwise would have to be made for removing the deposits.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the act referred to apply specially to the port of New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the river and harbor act either of 1886 or 1888 specifically provides for this service in the harbor of New York.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I inquire of the gentleman how far this appropriation would extend as applied to the Hudson River or the East River?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know just how far it runs up the river. But the difficulty is not up the river. It is more in the upper and lower bays, and the trouble comes from the fact that the scows do not go far enough out beyond the bars. The authorities require these scows to be taken out a number of miles. That is what they wish them to do; but they do not get them out far enough, and some of the men connected with the navigation of ships complain that around Scotland Light now the bottom is shoaling on account of these deposits.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The removal of obstructions is for the benfit of navigation. That goes without saying; but I would like to know if there is similar provision for other ports in matters of this kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the appropriation made on the ground that it is for the benefit of international commerce?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know the reason that was given when the legislation was enacted, except, as I have stated, that there is in New York a large amount of material that must be disposed of, and there exists a very great temptation to those who are compelled to dispose of it to deposit it inside of the limits prescribed by the authorities. It would involve a large expense on the part of the Federal Government for dredging if this service were not maintained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has held that the expense of dredging streams which bisect a city should be borne by the municipality. I wish to inquire, if the gentleman knows, why appropriation in this case was made for a particular port? In other ports, more inland than the port of New York, it is expected that the municipality or State shall look out for obstructions of this kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the conditions are the same anywhere else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This appropriation, or the act under which it is made, does not apply to any other port than New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. That is my understanding.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address made by myself before the bankers' convention at Knoxville, Tenn., recently on the question of banking and currency.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman insert it in the latter part of the RECORD, after the regular proceedings?

Mr. PADGETT. I think that would be appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday a very interesting argument took place with regard to the allowance of traveling expenses to the President of the United States. I do not know whether the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], who raised the question, is entirely satisfied with the verdict of the House or not, but there were at least 55 Democrats who indicated by their votes that they were willing to appropriate money for the traveling expenses of a Republican President. Whether the votes of those gentlemen are to be taken as evidence that——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to anything that is pending before the House. That matter was disposed of yesterday, and we ought to proceed now with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. When the amendment is offered the gentleman can proceed in order, but at present we ought to proceed with the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I offer the amendment now, and in offering it I want to say——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that unless the gentleman offers an amendment and speaks to it he is not in order. He can not rehash something that is passed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Speaker: For automoble for use of the Speaker of the House of Representatves, $5,000.

Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. FITZGERALD interposed a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was going to let me speak on the amendment. I said I was going to offer the amendment, and now that I have offered the amendment he objects.

Mr. SHERLEY. I wanted to see what the amendment was. I object to the discussion of matters that are not germane to the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it is germane.

Mr. SHERLEY. I make the point of order, and the Chair can determine it. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will not reserve it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the Speaker ought to be permitted to ride once in a while. I hate to see him standing in street cars taking his chances with the other strap-hangers. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have I not a right to discuss the point of order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SCULLY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title on June 14, 1912:

H. R. 23626. An act to appropriate $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to equip all Army transports with all lifeboats and rafts necessary to accommodate every person for which transportation facilities are now provided on said transports and the crew of said transports.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Artificial limbs: For furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus, or commutation therefor, and necessary transportation, $115,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. This is an item of a good deal of importance to the old veterans who have lost a limb. I notice that the current appropriation is $330,000 and in this bill it is reduced to $115,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the amount requested. Every third year it is much larger.

Mr. WILLIS. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. What is the reason given by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Every third year there is a much larger sum appropriated.

Mr. MANN. Do they lose more limbs every third year? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are entitled to a new limb every third year and then a larger appropriation is required. This is one of the lean years.

The Clerk read as follows:

The existing unexpended balance of the appropriation for additional repairs and for furniture and covered way connecting the main building of Garfield Memorial Hospital with the new children's ward is reappropriated and made available for furniture and equipment for the "Henry A. Willard Memorial Building" of said Garfield Memorial Hospital.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the Government owns any interest in the Garfield Memorial Hospital?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has a lien on the property and buildings for a very large sum.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the gentleman mean?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just what I say. In the event that they should discontinue this institution, certain sums advanced by the Federal Government for improvements are a first lien upon the real estate and improvements.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government holds an interest in the institution for all the money that has been appropriated for buildings and purchase of grounds?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has a first lien in the event that it should be discontinued as a hospital. The advances made by the Government for the improvements, purchase of land, and buildings are a first lien.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government has a right to force the collection of moneys that Congress has appropriated for the equipment of the hospital and the purchase of ground?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the situation under the law. The Government has that right. It is the same as a mortgage, only the amount does not become due—that is, the contingency under which the amount is to become due is the abandonment of the institution as a hospital.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the policy of the Government to loan money in that way for such purposes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Congress has in the past appropriated for a number of institutions in this city certain sums of money for various purposes. This lien is under a general statute.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the case with all hospitals for which the Government has contributed for the buildings and grounds—that they have a lien on the property?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is, by general statute.

Mr. FOSTER. And in case the hospital is abandoned——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Government has a first lien for the amounts advanced.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, namely: Pay of commissary sergeants, commissary clerks, porters, laborers, bakers, cooks, dishwashers, waiters, and others employed in the subsistence department; the cost of all articles purchased for the regular ration, and the subsistence of civilian employees regularly employed and residing at the branch, their freight, preparation, and serving; aprons, caps, and jackets for kitchen and dining-room employees; of tobacco; of all dining-room and kitchen furniture and utensils, bakers' and butchers' tools and appliances, and their repair not done by the home, $255,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The current law provides for $285,000, and this bill carries $255,000. How does it come that there should be such a large decrease in that branch of expenditure? Obviously the number of inmates have not decreased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The estimates called for $245,000. These figures are based on information furnished by the board of managers. There has been a reduction in the number of inmates of the soldiers' homes, although in some the attendance has been very much larger than anticipated.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman says the estimate was for $245,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two hundred and forty-five thousand, but the board of managers before the committee made a statement that they required $255,000. We have endeavored to give all the board needed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $187,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is the item that covers the food of the members of soldiers' homes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has any step been taken by the committee to improve the rations of the members of these homes? If the gentleman will recall, for the last two years there has been considerable complaint voiced on the floor in regard to the rations of the old soldiers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has not taken any steps, but it has made inquiries of members of the board when they were before the committee, and the statement was to the effect that the rations were very excellent and sufficient.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say for the benefit of the House that I have one of these homes in my district, located in my home town, and I am very familiar with the character of food given them. There is universal complaint that the food is not such as should be given to men of the age of these old soldiers. They are reaching the ages of 75 and 80 years, and the same ration that is meted out to the Army or in a penitentiary or any other public institution is no longer fit for the maintenance of the old soldier. They deserve the very best that can be given them, and it is a fact, and I get it from personal complaint from members of these homes, that while they get an ample supply of food and what they do get is of good quality, it is not sufficient in its class to maintain and properly nourish old men like the majority of the members of these homes. I hope the gentleman will permit a sufficient increase in this appropriation to enable the management to give the men what they require.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the only justification for any complaint is a complaint that is unavoidable. Whenever food is prepared for a large number of men they become in time tired of the food. Complaint was made as to the character of food in the hospitals, and the president of the board of managers made a statement as to the character of food in the hospitals and the character of food in the homes and respecting the method of determining food that should be used, which would convince anybody that ample food is prepared. The president of the board of managers of soldiers' homes is Mr. Wadsworth, who for a number of years was a Member of this House. He served in the war; is a man of very wide experience and very large capacity and, I think, of very warm and sympathetic heart. He has given very careful personal attention to all of these matters. In view of the statements that have been made in the past about the insufficiency of the food and the character of it the committee made inquiries concerning it, and he assured the committee from his own personal investigation and his own statements that there was no question that the food was ample. There was placed in the RECORD—and it is available for Members—a statement of the menu in these various homes.

Mr. Wadsworth said that he thought the best proof of the character of food furnished was the fact that 75 per cent of the men who entered the homes gained in weight after spending a very short time there. I have here the bill of fare, which I shall be very glad to put in the RECORD, and which is as follows:

BILL OF FARE, GENERAL DINING HALL, FOR QUARTER ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1910.

Sunday.—Breakfast: Baked pork and beans, graham and white bread, oleo, coffee. Dinner: Roast beef, baked potatoes, macaroni and cheese, brown gravy, bread, coffee. Supper: Cold meat, stewed fruit, bread, oleo, coffee.

Monday.—Breakfast: Fried bacon, mashed potatoes, fruit, bread, oleo, coffee. Dinner: Roast chicken, browned potatoes, creamed onions, giblet gravy, sage dressing, pickles, bread, oleo, coffee. Supper: Cold meat, sago pudding, fruit, ginger cake, bread, oleo, coffee.

Tuesday.—Breakfast: Beef fricassee, steamed potatoes, bread, oleo, coffee. Dinner: Boiled corned beef, creamed potatoes, boiled navy beans, catsup, rice pudding, bread, oleo, coffee. Supper: Cold meat, mush and sirup, stewed fruit, bread, oleo, coffee.

Wednesday.—Breakfast: Fried pork sausage, mashed potatoes, brown gravy, bread, coffee. Dinner: Roast beef, steamed potatoes, tomatoes, rice, tapioca, pudding, bread, oleo, coffee. Supper: Cold meat, creamed lima beans, fruit, bread, oleo, coffee.

Thursday.—Breakfast: Corned-beef hash, stewed fruit, bread, oleo, coffee. Dinner: Roast beef, mashed potatoes, creamed onions, hot corn bread, bread, oleo, coffee. Supper: Cold meat, mush and sirup, stewed fruit, bread, oleo, coffee.

Friday.—Breakfast: Boiled eggs, fried bacon, creamed potatoes, bread, oleo, coffee. Dinner: Roast beef, creamed codfish, pork rashers, steamed potatoes, bread pudding with raisins, bread, oleo, coffee. Supper: Cold meat, creamed rice, pie and cheese, bread, oleo, coffee.

Saturday.—Breakfast: Corned-beef hash, stewed fruit, bread, oleo, coffee. Dinner: Boiled shoulder, lima beans, steamed potatoes, cream gravy, catsup, bread, coffee. Supper: Cold meat, stewed fruit, bread, oleo, coffee.

Changes are made in the general dining-hall bill of fare by the commissary of subsistence and chief cook, in consultation with the governor and surgeon.

The hospital bill of fare is prescribed by the surgeon.

It is prepared with a knowledge of the fact that most of these men are well advanced in years, and they require a different dietary from younger men.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from New York recommend a diet of oleomargarine for old men of 75 years of age who are suffering from indigestion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Everybody who is at all familiar with the matter knows that oleomargarine is much more wholesome than butter.

Mr. ANTHONY. We do not agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is furnished to them for that reason, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] himself would not be able to tell whether he was eating oleomargarine or butter unless he were eating renovated butter; and in that instance he might be quite certain that he was eating butter.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me make a statement here in regard to the use of oleomargarine. It is not only served three times a day in most of the homes, but it is used as flavoring for cooking. They flavor the potatoes with it in the big steam kettle where they are cooked. It is put in their mush and in everything until every article of food has a flavor of rancid beef fat when it is cooked. I have been there and tasted it and I know. I know it makes those old soldiers sick at the stomachs to have to go up against oleomargarine three times a day, and I want to make an effort here, and I want to ask this House to cut out that imitation of a pure food and give those old men as good food to eat as every American workingman has on his board three times a day, especially a good article of pure butter. I am informed that at some of the homes they get pure butter, they do not get oleomargarine. It is only at certain homes that it is served, and I think it ought to be cut out entirely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman bases his objection to the food furnished to these men upon the fact that they are furnished oleomargarine instead of butter, he has very little justification for any complaint.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, one moment. We should not waste our time here discussing this matter. There is nothing before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If objection is made, the Chair will recognize some one else.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is something going to be before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, let it come before the committee now.

Mr. ANTHONY. In due time I will offer it to the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman proposes an amendment, let us have it before the committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well, I will submit the following amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, line 16, insert:

"For subsistence: For the purchase of milk, butter, eggs, and fresh fruits, $250,000, to be apportioned pro rata among the several homes according to membership: Provided, That no part of the appropriation for subsistence in this bill shall be available for the purchase of oleomargarine, butterine, or other imitations of butter."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order. This provision restricts the discretion which under the law is vested in the board as to the distribution of expenditures of funds for subsistence in these homes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman makes the point of order, I would ask unanimous consent to divide my amendment and have the proviso come in as a second amendment, which I will offer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can offer another amendment if this amendment is defeated.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman from New York think that Congress has a right to restrict——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; Congress has; but we are discussing what we can do under the rules upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSTER. He has the right to say that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for certain articles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a different thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment as a whole is subject to the point of order, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Chair will hold that the amendment as a whole is subject to the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to divide the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman divide it to suit himself.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 16, page 84, the following: "Provided, That no part of the appropriation for subsistence in this bill shall be available for the purchase of oleomargarine, butterine, or other imitations of butter."

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the first part of the amendment be reported properly.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence: For the purchase of milk, butter, eggs, and fresh fruits, $250,000, to be apportioned pro rata among the several homes according to membership.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that the amendment as a whole is subject to the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I divided the amendment and I took out the objectionable proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. What portion did the gentleman offer?

Mr. ANTHONY. I offered the first portion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order against the first portion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would ask the gentleman from New York on what ground he makes his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not necessary, as the Chair has sustained the point of order; I decline to furnish any information.

Mr. ANTHONY. I simply ask for information, as my amendment as offered simply provides for the purchase of subsistence stores, and names those stores.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's discussion of that is not in order, as the Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the Chair to state the grounds on which he sustained the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That it is legislation.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to hearing the gentleman for five minutes? [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, two years ago the House adopted a provision appropriating $250,000 additional for the purpose of remedying these complaints against the food served at the soldiers' homes. Although the House increased the appropriation in order to increase the quality of the food which was to go into these homes, the membership have been unable to see where a single dollar of that has been expended to increase the variety of the food served. The facts are, at the Leavenworth Home that the food served the men there to-day, while it is ample in quantity and quality, such as it is, is not a single bit better than the food served at the Federal penitentiary located at the same place. I am not exaggerating in the slightest degree when I make the statement that I believe that the capacity for the serving of proper food for men, with the more modern facilities for cooking and handling it there, are much better at the penitentiary than at the soldiers' homes, and I do hope——

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman know whether this bill of fare that is printed on page 891 of the hearings is applicable to all the soldiers' homes, or does it relate only to that one?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not informed as to that, but I think they are all about the same.

Mr. WILLIS. If that is true, the statement the gentleman made a little while ago about the use of butter at some homes and oleomargarine at others is not true, because the report shows that in every one oleomargarine is used.

Mr. ANTHONY. If I recall correctly, there was one bill of fare where they used butter.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any explanation why oleo is used in these homes?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask my friend from Kansas if the objection to oleo is not really to the name and not to the substance of the article?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman it is not. When continually used in cooking the rancid flavor of the beef fat is brought out and permeates the article of food until it becomes nauseous.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has used oleomargarine.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have never used it, but I have gone where oleomargarine has been used, and have eaten it and——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman puts himself as a single member as against the world.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman think that it is a proper ingredient to be used in cooking? I do not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I certainly do not.

Mr. WILLIS. I disagree absolutely with the gentleman from Illinois, and agree with the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman ever used it?

Mr. WILLIS. I never cooked with it, but I have been in places where it has been used.

Mr. MANN. It is from my personal knowledge.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman voices his personal opinion, and not from practical experience.

Mr. MANN. I am voicing my practical knowledge from personal experience.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

Mr. LOBECK. That will do to tell men, but will not do to tell a good cook or women.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 84, line 16, by adding at the end of the line the following: "Provided, That no part of the appropriation for subsistence in this bill shall be available for the purchase of oleomargarine, butterine, or other imitations of butter."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The point of order is that it is legislation in that it restricts the discretion now possessed in the board of managers.

Mr. ANTHONY. I insist that it is merely a limitation upon the expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The point of order is overruled, and the Chair holds the amendment is in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that this House will go on record as being in favor of feeding the brave men who went to the front in the days of 1861 and 1865 as well as they do the prisoners at the United States penitentiaries we provide for, and I want to say to this House from my own personal knowledge that if there is one reform needed, one help in the subsistence of the old soldiers' home, it is the elimination of this article of oleomargarine from the regular diet, and I hope the House will adopt the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the motion will be agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not trespass on the time of the House more than a minute or two. I do, however, want to say a word of protest against what I believe to be an unjustifiable assault on a perfectly wholesome article of food that has been discriminated against by law. If the authorities do serve rancid, unwholesome, and unfit food to the old soldiers or prisoners, it ought to be stopped, but it is not necessary——

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly, if the article becomes rancid and unwholesome when used in cooking.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is not any doubt in the world, I think my friend from Kansas must know it, that oleomargarine is a perfectly wholesome food that is used in cooking with great advantage.

The only trouble with oleomargarine to-day is that it has been unfairly discriminated against by laws passed here in the interest of a few butter makers, reserving to them the privilege of coloring their product so as to deceive the consumer and in the same breath denouncing the practice on the part of the makers of oleomargarine as a crime.

Mr. GARNER. And if you used old and rancid butter the same effect would be had?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes. Their stomachs would revolt at it just as much, and probably more.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] makes the statement that oleomargarine has been discriminated against. It occurs to me that the trouble with oleomargarine and with those who manufacture it and sell it to the people is that they want to make as near like good butter as they possibly can in order to get a sale for it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What they want is the same privilege that butter has. The butter makers color white butter yellow because people are accustomed to eating either butter or oleomargarine which has been colored.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to say that no more fraud is practiced by the oleomargarine manufacturers than by the butter makers.

Mr. FOSTER. The people who make first-class butter do not object to oleomargarine being given its natural color—the color that goes with the oleomargarine.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why do the butter makers color their butter?

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble is that the oleomargarine makers buy in the country a lot of old cows, whose fat is such as to give rise to a large amount of coloring matter when it goes into the manufacture of oleomargarine. They do not get that coloring matter in the fat steer, but they get it in the old cow that comes from the country and that has been a milker. She gives the oleomargarine a higher color than can be obtained from the steer in good condition, and what they can not get in the way of color from the old cow they want to add by additional coloring matter, to make the product look like good butter.

Mr. MANN. Where does the butter come from if it does not come from the same old cow? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. The old cow no longer serves her purpose as a milk producer. And now she is made to furnish material to the oleomargarine factory and give to the oleomargarine something of the color of butter.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to ask the gentleman if the butter makers do not use coloring matter in butter?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, certainly; but that is only done in order to bring the color of the butter to the average natural color that the butter has at the time of year when grazing is the best.

Let me suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] this, that in the summer time, when the grass is green and there is plenty of it, the cow gives a richer color of butter than she does in the winter time, when she has more of dry feed. Now, in order to let the butter retain that uniform color the coloring matter is put in. It is not needed in the summer time.

What the oleomargarine manufacturers do with the oleomargarine is this: The oleomargarine has a narrow range of color, and the manufacturers try to get it up to the color of butter, also adding a certain per cent of good butter to give it the flavor, and in that way they are trying to deceive the people in reference to oleomargarine and make the people believe that it looks like butter, and tastes like butter, and is as good as butter.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then you practice a fraud in the winter months and are honest in the summer time? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. No. The butter makers give to the butter the color that is natural to the butter on account of the grass that the cow eats, and they give it that color the year round so as to keep it uniform. You are trying to get that color which does not naturally belong to the oleomargarine.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It belongs to it in the summer time, but not in the wintertime.

Mr. FOSTER. You can not get that color with all the old cows you can use without using artificial coloring matter. You use a greater amount of material in order to bring the oleomargarine up to the color that the butter naturally gets in the summer time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] that he speak of the old cows that are brought up from Texas.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is very easy to make an appeal on behalf of the old soldier, and to gain or supposedly gain credit thereby. There is nobody in this House who desires to see the old soldier treated other than in the best possible manner. But I am not willing on the testimony of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] or of the distinguished physician from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to determine the controversy between oleomargarine and butter. I do know that the Board of Managers for the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, which controls these homes, is composed of three distinguished Federal soldiers of the Civil War. One of them——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I can not yield. The gentleman has already spoken in his own time. One of those members of the board has been a Member of this House, and not only a Member, but for years the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of this House, and a man who himself has perhaps as much personal knowledge in regard to the dairy business as any other man in this country. He testified before the committee, and his testimony is borne out by the experience of hundreds of men, that the oleomargarine served at the soldiers' homes is wholesome and healthful in every way. That has been tested repeatedly all over the country.

But we have a situation in America where the dairymen have succeeded in the past in using the power of Congress to raise revenue to destroy a competitive business, and they are always anxious in every way they can to prevent competition, and they desire their particular industry to be legislated into a monopoly. This is simply along the line of the restrictive legislation that is born of the greed of dairymen to control absolutely the market and to have no competitor; and this House can not afford, under the specious guise of giving to the old soldier better treatment, to turn down the men who are giving their intelligent and skilled interest in the management of these homes. We have simply the statement of the gentleman from Kansas and of the gentleman from Illinois as a basis.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Under the law oleomargarine can not be colored. Everybody admits that it is a healthful food. It can not be colored to have the similitude of butter when it goes into consumption at the soldiers' homes or anywhere else. If it is a perfectly healthful food, why the amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. Oleomargarine may be colored under the law.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, by paying 10 cents a pound.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; it can be colored by paying a prohibitive tax.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the gentleman may ask me a question, but I am going to continue to control my time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the gentleman can not do that in my time.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Is there anything in the law now that prevents this board of managers from prescribing a diet of butter if they see fit?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not the slightest.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. They are not compelled to use oleomargarine?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. What you are asked to do is to take the offhand statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], who undertakes to say that these managers of the homes have been derelict in their duty, and that they have given to the old soldiers food that ought not to be given to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by adding the words "unless they are free from taint."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Unless these various articles mentioned are free from taint——

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that debate is out of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I submit I have the right to speak to my amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I submit that the gentleman has not.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has closed debate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for two minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wanted to help the gentleman, and I think possibly I could have done so. This is not a question of coloring; it is a question of getting cheaper food for people who are not able to pay for butter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ANTHONY) there were—ayes 37, noes 39.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. ANTHONY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For household, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $86,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for fuel oil if it shall appear to the board of managers that coal as a fuel can be procured and used more economically.

For hospital, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $50,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask what line the Clerk is reading.

The CLERK. Page 84, line 23.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I should like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lieu of the proviso in line 18, page 84——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that we have passed that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, there was so much confusion in the House that I was compelled to ask the Clerk what line he was reading on. I was endeavoring to hear, and I scarcely think the Clerk had read a line beyond the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have passed that part of the bill. What is it the gentleman wishes to do?

Mr. ANTHONY. There was a great deal of confusion. I wish to offer an amendment at the end of line 21.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. In lieu of that proviso.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he saw the gentleman from Kansas upon his feet while the Clerk was reading and rapped for order in order that the gentleman might be recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lieu of the proviso in line 18, page 84, the following:
"Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the purchase of fuel oil at the western branch when the cost of the oil equivalent of coal is greater than the cost of coal."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not believe a point of order lies against that proviso, for the reason that it is in line with the proviso that is now in the bill, and exactly similar to what has heretofore been held in order. It is a limitation having for its object economy in the expenditure of public money.

Mr. GARNER. What is the gentleman's purpose in offering this amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. It makes it a little more explicit. I understand the gentleman from New York has simply reserved his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have reserved it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a statement in regard to the amendment. The necessity for this limitation upon the bill is that a few years ago the board of managers at Leavenworth commenced to use fuel oil instead of coal. The statement was made at that time that by the installation of oil for fuel it was costing the Government a good many thousands of dollars more each year than it would if they had used coal for fuel. Since the last contracts were made, especially in the last two months, the price of fuel oil has trebled, so that now it will be an absolute impossibility for the board of managers to use oil for fuel there, unless they deliberately squander not less than $20,000 per annum of the public funds. I desire that limitation placed upon this paragraph in order to protect the Treasury to that amount.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is the coal produced right near there?

Mr. ANTHONY. The coal is immediately adjacent.

Mr. MANN. In the gentleman's district?

Mr. ANTHONY. In my district.

Mr. MANN. Is there any fuel oil produced in the gentleman's district?

Mr. ANTHONY. Fuel oil is produced at the refinery of the Standard Oil Co., 20 miles from there.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, fuel oil is produced out of the ground, in the first place.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; but it is refined in the refinery of the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. LOBECK. What of it?

Mr. ANTHONY. What of it? It is very significant when it is the Standard Oil Co., and when it would take over $13,000 more money out of the Treasury to use this by-product of the Standard Oil Co. than to use coal, the product of the labor of the miners near by who go down into the bowels of the earth and toil to produce this coal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What the gentleman states can not be done and has not been done.

Mr. ANTHONY. Nevertheless it has, and I fear it will be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not with the provision in the bill, which is the very provision offered by the gentleman himself and adopted by the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that I have here a statement from the board of managers that it is their intention to use the oil at this branch for the coming fiscal year in spite of the fact of the statement that goes with it that oil costs $13,000 more than coal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law they can not do that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Nevertheless they are going to do it, and justify it on the ground that it will compel some kind of a change in the steam plant. They expended $10,000 three years ago when they changed the boilers from steam to oil, and now they claim that it will offset the increase in the price of oil if they have to spend a few hundred dollars to change it back.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman have read the letter for the benefit of the committee? Let us see what the board of managers say.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I would like to know something about the history of this provision that is in the bill. As it appears in the bill, does the gentleman know at whose suggestion it was put originally in the appropriation bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. The present provision was inserted on my motion two years ago and adopted by the House, but it has failed so far to attain the object desired.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman from Kansas undertake to say that they have, in violation of this provision, ordered fuel oil when coal could be used more economically?

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe it has been done in the past, taking into consideration the other expenses, and I know by figures furnished by the home authorities that if they continue it it will cost during the next year $13,000 more than coal. That is shown by figures over the signature of the quartermaster of the home.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state what the quartermaster says?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a long statement. This is from Capt. Pearsall, quartermaster of the home. He speaks of the fact that the price of fuel oil has advanced lately to 2.68 a gallon, instead of 1.8, as it was last year. He gives the price at which coal can be purchased, and he says if a modern coal equipment was installed and the use of coal is resumed they could use slack or mine run. The chief engineer is of the opinion that it would be more economical for use under the boilers than screened lump, and that the foregoing estimate shows that it would be $5,800 cheaper than screened lump per annum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That statement is that certain things would be cheaper if some kind of a modern equipment was installed for mine-run coal. The gentleman has not stated all that is in the letter. Let us have all the facts in there.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will give the gentleman the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ANTHONY was given five minutes more.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, this controversy between the use of oil and coal as a fuel has gone on several years. Figures making comparisons have been given by the officials, but the comparisons between oil and coal have been made based on the use of coal three years ago under the old worn-out boilers and under the old system of heat radiation. Three years ago they adopted oil for fuel and they immediately made improvements in the boilers, changing the method in radiation in the home, making a saving of 20 per cent. Then they took the cost of the fuel under the new system and compared it with the cost of the coal under the old worn-out system—an unfair comparison. Now that the price of oil has nearly trebled in value, the statement is made over the official signature of the quartermaster of the home that it is going to cost $13,000 a year more to use oil, as compared with coal. I desire to secure justice for the coal miners of that district, as against the Standard Oil Co., who are trying to sell their by-product to the Government.

[Extract from report made to Board of Managers, showing comparison of coal and oil for fuel for use during the next year, made by Charles M. Pearsoll, quartermaster of the Western Branch.]

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS, WESTERN BRANCH,
June 7, 1912.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of letter of the president of the Board of Managers, dated June 3, 1912, with your indorsement dated June 5, 1912, instructing that I proceed without unnecessary delay to make investigations relative to the cost of fuel oil and bituminous coal and report in detail regarding same. In reply, beg leave to submit the following report:

Transmitted herewith is a copy of boiler tests of fuel oil and coal, made by the Lincoln Traction Co., Lincoln, Nebr. The statements contained therein have been substantiated by the Metropolitan Street Railway Co., Kansas City, Mo., and the R. A. Long 20-story building at Kansas City. The Lincoln Traction Co. and Metropolitan Street Railway Co. are burning both oil and coal and have made very accurate and elaborate tests to determine the economies of each, and I therefore feel that the statement transmitted can be relied upon. These tests show the relative values of oil and coal to be 1 pound of oil equals 1.8 pounds of coal, therefore oil at $2.68 per 100 gallons equals in evaporating qualities coal at $4.06 per ton. This price of $4.06 per ton must include all cost of handling coal, ashes, operation, and maintaining. The result of the investigations of the chief engineer and myself are therefore an opinion that coal can be used at the home more economically than fuel oil at the advanced price, provided modern and economical methods were installed for the burning of coal.

The quality of coal formerly used by the home was screened lump, which can now be purchased for $2.54 per ton, delivered in the bins. I find that we can purchase slack or modified mine run (or screenings) for approximately $2.25 per ton, delivered in the bins. According to the tests of the Lincoln Traction Co., substantiated by others, it requires 13.3 pounds of coal to equal 1 gallon of oil. On this basis it would require approximately 14,630 tons of coal to equal the amount of oil it is estimated will be required for the fiscal year 1913, viz, 2,200,000 gallons. However, the tests of the Lincoln Traction Co. and others was made on southern Kansas coal, which is much higher in heat units than Leavenworth coal. I would, therefore, estimate we would require 20,000 tons of coal for the fiscal year 1913, if used under modern conditions. From this I draw the following comparisons:

2,200,000 gallons fuel oil, at $.0268 per gallon	$58,960
20,000 tons slack or modified mine-run coal, $2.25 per ton	45,000
Saving in use of coal	13,960
2,200,000 gallons fuel oil, at $.0268 per gallon	58,960
20,000 tons screned lump coal, at $2.54 per ton	50,800
Saving in use of screened lump coal	8,160

If modern equipment were installed I would recommend, if the use of coal were resumed, that we used slack or modified mine run.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the gentleman, his contention is that in case his amendment is adopted it will save the Government $13,000 a year?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will.

Mr. GARNER. If it was adopted, could you reduce the appropriation from $87,000 to $74,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. That appropriation could be so reduced, but I will say to the gentleman that it will cost some money to change the steam plant and the boilers over from oil to coal, but in the long run that would be an economy.

Mr. LOBECK. How much would that cost?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not over $1,000.

Mr. LOBECK. You could reduce the appropriation $10,000, then, and save money?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. This provision in the bill provides that they shall use coal if it is cheaper than oil. Does the gentleman say that the board of managers, in spite of an act of Congress, propose to use oil anyway when it is more expensive?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is my information.

Mr. BARTLETT. What is the use of a law if the board of managers are going to defy it?

Mr. ANTHONY. The proviso in the bill is not explicit enough.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is for men who want to obey the law.

Mr. ANTHONY. Where I say that the oil equivalent must not cost over the coal equivalent the board of managers, then, could not say as an excuse that it will cost so many thousand dollars to change the plant back for the use of coal.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the gentleman said that it would not cost over $1,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. They say that it will cost more; they want to put in new boilers and complete new equipment. They have a lot of smokestacks, and so forth, and a long string of figures that would scare the House to death. But the figures are buncombe.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman's amendment makes it mandatory to use coal?

Mr. ANTHONY. To use the cheapest fuel.

Mr. MANN. With which kind of fuel does it cost the most to feed the fire; with oil or with coal?

Mr. ANTHONY. To feed coal.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment does not contemplate that feature, does it?

Mr. ANTHONY. I said that there are incidental expenses in the use of coal, but taking into account all of them there would be a net saving to the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, this amendment of the gentleman from Kansas does not seem to me to mean any more than the wording of the bill. But it does seem that its ultimate result would be to restrict the managers of the home in the purchase of coal and probably to the purchase of coal from the interests in the city of Leavenworth. There are three mines in the city of Leavenworth that produce a fair grade of coal, but, as compared with other coals produced in the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys, it is an inferior grade of coal. For all of the Government institutions located in Leavenworth—the soldiers' home, the penitentiary, and others—the coal produced in Leavenworth has a natural advantage in securing the contract, because of the fact of the low cost per ton, as it does not have any freight rate to pay. However, when measured by the heat producing power of the coal it can be competed with by coal or other fuel from the outside.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, let me interrupt the gentleman there.

Mr. BORLAND. For a question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not a fact that the adoption of the British thermal unit system in determining the value of the coal, such as the Government now uses, has eliminated all of this difference?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. So that the Government buys only the heat units under any circumstances.

Mr. BORLAND. That is what I was going to say. Heretofore they have been buying coal from the Leavenworth mines because the price per ton was lower than the price per ton of coal that could be shipped in there or oil that could be shipped in there, but now, since the creation of the Bureau of Mines, the Government has adopted the British thermal unit system, by which it tests the value of fuel according to the heat-producing power. Under this British thermal unit system there are a number of coals from territory extending as far east as Illinois that can be put into the Leavenworth Government institutions at a cheaper price, considering the value as a heat producer, than the coal in Leavenworth. This provision in the bill is ample to permit the managers of the home to do that very thing. It says:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for fuel oil if it shall appear to the board of managers that coal as a fuel can be procured and used more economically.

The words "more economically" must mean more economically according to the heat value of the coal.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman will admit that there is no restriction that only the local coal shall be used there. It is any coal. That would be a matter to be determined.

Mr. BORLAND. If there is any difference between the gentleman's language and the language of the bill, I will point it out now. The language of his amendment is:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the purchase of fuel oil at the Western Branch when the cost of the oil equivalent of coal is greater than the cost of coal.

If the gentleman's language means anything different from the present language of the bill, it means that the net price per ton of the coal, regardless of its heat value, is to be taken as the equivalent of oil.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let the gentleman strike out the words "equivalent of coal." I will be glad to accept any amendment in order to clear it up.

Mr. BORLAND. I think what the gentleman wants is entirely covered by the bill. The board of managers have the right to say which of these particular fuels is more economical, taking into consideration the manner under which it is burned and the heat value after it is burned.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that I do not think he will attain that object under the old language, because under the old language the board of managers was able to bring in a whole lot of other incidental expenses and then make a statement that on account of those expenses they can not use coal to advantage. I want to pin it right down to the absolute fuel equivalent of the British thermal unit system, or any system under which the Government can get one more unit of heat. That is what I want.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know whether the gentleman is aware of it, but I have been fighting for the British thermal unit system for years before the departments, for the reason that the coal from mines located in the towns where the Government institutions are located has a natural advantage over all other coal when it is measured by the price per ton, but when you come to measure the heat unit producing value it does not have that advantage. The Government ought to adopt the same modern method that business men do, and buy its fuel according to its heat-producing value.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I would like to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas to ask a question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if it is not a fact under the Government's present system purchases are made only under the thermal unit system?

Mr. BORLAND. That has been only very recent.

Mr. ANTHONY. So that there is no discrimination in favor of freight rates.

Mr. BORLAND. It is only very recently that the Government has adopted that. The Government penitentiary contract which was let in October or September of last year was let in defiance of the thermal unit system.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say that all Government contracts are now let under that system.

Mr. BORLAND. The last contract let by a public institution in Leavenworth was let in defiance of that system.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted, and I base my opposition very largely upon the letter which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] used in support of his amendment. Under date of June 7 the quartermaster of the western branch of the National Soldiers' Home, in response to directions forwarded by the board of managers of soldiers' homes, made an investigation and inquiry as to the relative cost of heating this home by oil and gas. Some years ago the home, as I recall, was equipped to heat with coal, and the cost of heating it by coal, because of the conditions in the locality where the local dealers fixed the price to suit themselves, induced Congress to equip the home with oil-heating apparatus. Now, apparently the price of oil has gone up some, and in this letter the matter is gone into thoroughly, and it appears that out of the saving of $13,960 a year which the gentleman states would be made by this change there must be deducted $6,518, the cost of eight additional employees that will be required if coal is used. In addition to that it will require an expenditure of $59,000 to permanently equip the home to use coal, and if it is to use it temporarily it necessitates an expenditure of $16,000——

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman is quoting from the papers I handed you——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not yield at the present time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to have those papers back.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will give the gentleman the papers. I will not yield now. And the quartermaster of the home makes the statement that he would not recommend to the board the introduction of a makeshift equipment in order to temporarily use coal unless there were assurances that the $59,000 additional required for equipment be furnished. Now, it may not please the gentleman to have me quote the facts which I asked him to state to the House——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When I finish this statement, and not before——

Mr. ANTHONY. All right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman was basing his statement upon this letter, and as it has never been called to the attention of the committee, as the same provision was continued in this bill that was inserted on the motion of the gentleman himself, I believed the committee at least was entitled to all the information furnished by the quartermaster of the home, and upon that communication this committee would not be justified in making this change in compelling, as it is the intention there, the use of coal and necessitating this additional expenditure, regardless of what might afterwards be necessary. As it appears from this communication, the quartermaster suggested—I am not quoting accurately, and if I do not the gentleman can correct me; I would, if I had the letter, read what he said—the desirability of waiting until the entire matter could be submitted to Congress. Now I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. The quartermaster makes this statement in this letter: That the net saving on coal used during the coming year, compared with oil, will be thirteen thousand and some odd hundred——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Out of which must be deducted the $6,500 for additional employees which the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not permit the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. ANTHONY. I trust the gentleman will do me the courtesy to allow me to complete my question, and I think the House will agree with my opinion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will not permit the gentleman to make the remarks I wish to make. I stated that the gentleman overlooked the $6,500 which was stated had to be deducted from the $13,000, because additional employees would be required; and if the gentleman had been franker with the House when he purported to furnish information contained in that letter, and stated the facts as they were, it would not have been necessary now for him to take the time to furnish the information he suggests when I am making this statement. Mr. Chairman, it appears very clearly that, instead of a saving next year, it would involve a very large expenditure not now contemplated and not provided. The gentlemen in charge of these soldiers' homes, wherever conditions have made it desirable, have presented the facts to Congress showing where economies could be effected, and Congress has never hesitated to authorize the expenditures necessary. In view of these facts, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas ought not to be adopted because the language used in the bill is the only sensible language which could be used in reference to the administration of any institution on business principles. If the amendment were adopted in the exact language as I caught it when it was read, if it is adopted, I say, during the few months that the price of coal would be high it would necessitate by a construction of this amendment that you would have to go back to oil. It would necessitate the maintaining of both an oil and a fuel plant. Is not that the amendment of the gentleman?

Mr. ANTHONY. Contracts are made for one year.

Mr. SISSON. If you take the exact language of your proviso it would mean that at any time when coal was cheaper than oil that coal should be used, and that if oil should be cheaper, vice versa. In other words, it means that you should maintain both an oil plant and a coal plant and you would have to keep and maintain a parity between the two all the time when a contract went in.

Mr. ANTHONY. All the large manufacturing institutions in our country do that.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. Now, under the language of this bill, taking all matters into consideration, the management of the homes are presumed to be honest, presumed to do that which is best, presumed to use the money that the Government has given them in order to obtain the very best possible results and the most economical results. Now, they are compelled to do that under this bill as it is drawn; but if you take the gentleman's amendment it would deprive them entirely of any sort of discretion as to the use of fuel, provided the thermal unit cost would be cheaper in one instance than in the other. And as the thermal unit cost would vary you would have to vary the use of fuel which would necessitate the maintenance of both an oil plant and a fuel plant, and for that reason the committee thought it was wise to leave it just as the language in the bill now is, because we believe by that we will obtain the greatest amount of economy, irrespective of where the fuel might be purchased, irrespective of whom it might be purchased, because the Government wants to get the greatest amount of use out of the number of dollars it expends for the home.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think the statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi is quite correct. It is true under that construction the Government might be required to change from oil to coal and from coal to oil, but let me say that every big manufacturing plant in that part of the country has duplicate coal and oil plants, and when they can manufacture steam cheaper by the use of oil they use oil, and vice versa with coal. Therefore it is good business that the Government should install the same kind of a duplicate plant, so that either oil or coal can be used, whichever happens to be the most economical.

Now, I want to say just a word in regard to the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in relation to the cost of these fuels. I made the statement that if coal were used it would be $13,000 cheaper the coming year. The quartermaster of the home makes the same statement, and also makes the statement that it will be necessary to expend $59,000 to improve the steam plant for the use of coal, and I want to leave it to this House if it is not a good proposition to expend $59,000 to make an annual saving of $13,000. The Government gets a net profit of 20 per cent per annum on the investment, and that is the way to administer the business of the Government.

Now, I do not really believe that it is necessary to spend this $59,000 to improve the steam plant. I believe that it is a straw put in by the men who are advocating the use of oil in order to block the use of coal. I do not think it is necessary to spend more than $1,000 to change the boilers in that institution for the temporary use of coal. I hope the House will go on record for economy.

Mr. SIMS. Why not read that entire statement to the House, so that we can have the whole?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. But we want to hear it before we vote.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman object to having that letter printed in full in the RECORD?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I will put it in.

Mr. SIMS. The trouble is that we ought to hear it before we vote. It will be too late after it is printed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, if we read everything we will not reach a vote on this bill until September.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have made a charge on the floor of this House that representatives of the Standard Oil Co. originally induced the change from coal to oil in that home. I want to read the statement from the man who was engineer at the home at the time that change was made. That gentleman says:

In 1892 we put stokers under the boilers at the home, and these same stokers worked with good results up to about 1903, when from constant use and hard service they became worn out and burnt, which caused a loss of coal through the grate bars.

In making up my estimate of supplies for 1904, I included in it castings to renew the grates, etc., but either the quartermaster or the governor cut it down to mere nothing, and I had to do the best I could with what was allowed.

In making up my estimate for 1905, I again included castings and repairs for the furnaces, but it was again cut so that I could not do much toward repairing furnaces that had been in use for 13 years.

In making up my estimate for coal this year, I estimated for 18,000 tons, but the governor insisted upon the quartermaster increasing it to 22,000 tons. I protested against this increase and requested that the tonnage be cut and the difference be put in repairs to the plant, but the quartermaster said if we did not use the coal we could use the money otherwise. As I considered this illegal, I still protested, but it went in at 22,000 tons. During this year we consumed about 18,000 tons.

When the board of managers saw the enormous amount of coal estimated for, they decided to make an inquiry into the matter, so they engaged an expert to make some tests.

This expert came to the home on Saturday about noon. All that afternoon he did nothing but walk over the grounds. The next day, Sunday, we spent at Forth Leavenworth sight-seeing, etc. Monday morning about 9 o'clock he came to my office and for several hours we discussed the needs of the plant again. In the afternoon we went over the plant together, and I informed him of a number of improvements I wanted to make in the plant. About 4 o'clock he packed up and we came to Leavenworth to catch a train, but missed it, and we went to the Elks' Club and played pool until the next train, about 8 o'clock p. m.

Before he left the home he picked a bottle of coal from the pile in front of the boilers, and I noticed he was very anxious to select only the worst samples.

During all his conversation his idea seemed to be to recommend that the board expend about $100,000 on the plant, as he said he wanted to make $5,000 out of the job. I insisted that the improvements actually necessary could be done for one-quarter of the amount he proposed to recommend. He appeared to be very much displeased at my remark and said I ought to get all I could.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. By whom was the inspector appointed?

Mr. ANTHONY. This was an inspector appointed by the board of managers. He was sent there to lay the grounds for changing from coal to oil.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does he give his name?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; he does not give his name. There was only one inspector ever sent there, that I know of, employed by the board.

Mr. BARTLETT. Only one?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Did the gentleman ever complain to the board of managers about this inspector? Does the board of managers know of the imperfect way in which the inspector has inspected that situation?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they accepted the report of this inspector at par value.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Was he regularly employed, or was he a special inspector?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think he was a special inspector. This statement proceeds:

When his report was made there was not one recommendation except those that I had made to him.

In his report he intimated that the plant could not consume the amount of coal purchased. This was investigated by the inspector general and every ton of coal accounted for.

He claimed to have tested the coal, and his report gave the heat units considerable less than other Government tests; in fact, his aim seemed to be to condemn Leavenworth coal, and make $5,000 out of the job of preparing plans for improving the plant. In his conversation with me he said he considered I was doing extraordinary well with such an old plant.

This expert charged the home $50 per day for 10 days, and the only thing in his report that I had not already reported to the local officers was his condemnation of the Leavenworth coal.

There was nothing done in this matter for about six months, when the plan of using oil as fuel was taken up and its use finally adopted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe there are ample grounds for this House taking action and limiting this paragraph in the appropriation, so that the cheapest fuel to the Government shall be used in that institution. I hope the House will stand for its record for economy by putting that limitation on the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have heard the affidavit, if it is an affidavit, read by the gentleman——

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a statement——

Mr. MANN. And I should say it bears upon its face the imprint of a liar. Is the gentleman who made that affidavit now in the employ of the Government or has he been discharged?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is not now in the employ of the Government, or he undoubtedly would not make the statement. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely unwarranted in imputing the word "liar" to any man mentioned in debate on the floor of this House. It is entirely unbecoming his leadership in this body to stand here and make use of that word.

Mr. MANN. I think the affidavit bears on its face the imprint of exactly what I said, made by a discharged employee. My friend from Kansas has repeatedly, upon the floor of the House, in reference to the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, assaulted the board of managers. Whether or not there are any personal feelings involved I do not know, and whether or not his charges are true I do not know.

Mr. ANTHONY. What does the gentleman mean by the word "assaulted"?

Mr. MANN. Exactly what I say.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it the business of a Member to criticize when he finds ground for criticism?

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly proper.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the function I assume in this House.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly proper. I did not criticize the gentleman for criticizing the board of managers from his point of view.

I do not believe that the assaults have been justified. Usually these things come from some personal feeling. Whether that is the reason in this case I do not know. Sometimes they come because Members are not permitted to control appointments in places in their districts. I do not know that that is the fact in this case; but the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has repeatedly, on this and former occasions, made charges against the board of managers which if true ought to have caused the removal of the board of managers; and which if not correct ought not to be made on the floor of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is not a paragraph in this bill that seeks to remove a large part of the board of managers by cutting down the board membership?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not that afford ample ground for the assumption——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not remove anybody from the board of managers.

Mr. MANN. No; it does not afford ample ground. The paragraph in the bill is for the purpose of reducing the number of managers as vacancies occur, not on the ground of incompetent management, but on the ground that there is no necessity for so many men on the board of managers.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that ample ground exists, and if he wants the ground given here, I can give him the real reason for the reduction in the number of the board of managers. It may reflect on some of his friends from Illinois. I do not desire to be as personal in referring to the friends of the gentleman from Illinois as he has been to my Kansas friends.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not hesitate on my account.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have got the goods.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not think he will trouble me by naming anyone.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have got the goods on the gentleman from Illinois's member of the board.

Mr. MANN. Produce the goods. I do not even know who the gentleman is on the board of managers. You can not frighten me. I say that in my judgment the assaults which the gentleman has made repeatedly on the floor of the House in reference to the soldiers' home there are entirely unjustified by any evidence which he has produced to the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that one of the motives which actuated the Committee on Appropriations in reducing the membership of the board was the misconduct of some of the members of that board.

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I do not know what the motives of the Committee on Appropriations may be or may have been.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there was no such motive or intention. The reduction was made because the statement was made that it would be more desirable and more effective to have a board of five men than to have the present board of nine men. There was no reflection intended on any member of the board. If the committee had believed what the gentleman from Kansas states, it would have abolished all the board to get rid of those men. It would not have hesitated——

Mr. MANN. So far as the administrative features of it are concerned, if I had my way I would completely abolish that board and every other board that has administrative functions under the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farm, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $6,120.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 88, after line 11, by inserting:
"For combined chapel and memorial hall, $37,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not authorized by law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment I want to bring to the attention of the committee what the board of managers of the soldiers' homes have said relative to this appropriation. The item was transmitted in a supplemental estimate by the Secretary of the Treasury under date of January 2, 1912, and with reference to it is a statement from the president of the board of managers, who has been referred to and eulogized here to-day by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD], and also by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], a man who was not only for a great many years a Member of this House, but for a long time was chairman of a very important committee, the Committee on Agriculture. That gentleman, Mr. Wadsworth, states as follows:

Referring to section 4 of act approved June 22, 1906, I have the honor to state that this item was omitted from the regular estimate for the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year 1913, forwarded August 8, 1911, for the reason that at that time the urgent necessity for the building was not fully apparent. The number of members present at the sanitarium August 8, 1911, the date that the regular estimate was forwarded, was 296. On December 10, 1911, it was 430, an increase of 134. The chapel and the amusement hall are now located in sanitarium buildings and the space thus occupied is urgently needed for the increased number of patients requiring treatment.

The appropriation is believed to be imperatively necessary to carry out the purpose for which the sanitarium was established.

In the hearing before the committee with reference to this home and this item it appears in the testimony of Mr. Wadsworth that in submitting the estimates for 1913 the board reduced the amount $58,122 below the amount appropriated last year for the same purposes. Maj. Harris, another member of the board, testified as to the necessity for this additional appropriation, and I will read a portion of what he stated:

The original plan for the sanitarium as approved did not provide for a chapel. When the necessity for some place in which religious services might be held became evident a room which had been designed as a dormitory for employees was devoted to the purpose. This room is small and inconvenient, as regards location and shape. It is also important that there should be some place in which convalescent patients and those whose ailments do not confine them to their beds can assemble for entertainments. This building is designed to supply these urgent needs. It will also permit the room in which chapel services are now held to be used for the purpose for which it was designed, and for which it is much needed. Gen. Barry is fully conversant with this matter.

A very distinguished member of the board, a gentleman residing in the State of Nebraska, and selected for the position by the present Congress, was before the committee. I refer to Gen. Barry, and he stated:

This building is really a necessity, and it is believed that it will enable us to accomodate 100 more patients. By removing the amusement hall in the basement we think it will accommodate 100 more patients without any increase of cost.

Then he goes on further and states that this additional room will make it possible for the convalescent men to have a quiet place where they may read. Then he says:

This institution has grown to a large membership, because it is peculiarly adapted to the treatment of old men's complaints. It is well adapted to the treatment of bladder troubles, to which old men are subject. This building is really a necessity, and it is believed that it will enable us to accommodate 100 more patients. By removing the amusement hall in the basement, we think it will accommodate 100 more patients without any increase of cost. The same medical staff can care for them. At the present time orders for admission are extended by reason of the crowded condition of the sanitarium. If we had this additional building, we could take care of 100 more men. The library is in the rear of the chapel. We need the room the chapel occupies for a mess room for the civilian employees, numbering about 72, who now dine in the mess hall for members of the home. If we had this room that the chapel occupies now, it would enable us to feed the civilian employees in a mess hall and remove them from the main mess hall. I suppose we will use a part of this building for a library and reading room. The convalescent men should have a quiet place there to read. There is a great deal of reading done there, because these men go there for treatment, and they have to occupy their time in one way or another. Some of them amuse themselves in the amusement hall, but a great percentage of them are readers. The institution has grown a great deal during the last two years, and they cared for in the past year 750 members. The percentage of the improved is 81 and the unimproved is 9 per cent. The sanitarium is a credit to the Government and is doing good work. I think the building asked for is very much needed, and will supply something that is very much required in that institution. At the present time the chapel is unable to accommodate the men who attend divine services there. For that reason we ask this appropriation for the building.

As to what the results have been upon old soldiers that have been in this sanitarium, I want to say that the reports show:

Number of members present July 1, 1910		264
Gained by admission, readmission, and transfer to Mar. 24, 1911		425
Total number cared for from July 1, 1910, to Mar. 24, 1911		689

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of economy. I am in sympathy with the Committee on Appropriations in their endeavor to keep appropriations down to the lowest possible point, but I do not believe that we ought, in the name of economy, embarrass and cripple an institution that is doing the work that this institution is doing and has done, for the purpose of saving a few dollars, especially when the expenditure of the amount will contribute to the welfare and comfort mostly of survivors of the Civil War.

All of the testimony from those who have been before the committee is in favor of the appropriation, and I hope that the distinguished gentleman who has reserved the point of order will not make it, but that he will permit the amendment to be inserted in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the action of the committee is not only easily explained, but it is justifiable. The testimony was to the effect that the attendance at the soldiers' homes will fall off very rapidly in the immediate future. One of the arguments made in favor of the increased pension bill was that if men could have a little larger pension they would prefer to live at home rather than in the soldiers' homes. The general attendance at the homes during the last year has been less than the year previous. Congress within a year or two will be facing the necessity of determining what disposition to make of some of these homes. In view of these facts and that the necessity for this particular chapel did not appeal to the board of managers when making up the estimates, and in one other home where a request was made for a chapel, the committee thought it would not be advisable at this time to add any further buildings at any of these homes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman is aware of the fact that this is a sanitarium, and that its attendants come from all soldiers' homes throughout the country, and that it will have inmates just as long as there are homes anywhere in the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows that it is in a bleak, cold place. It never would have been put there at all if it had not been for the presence of certain supposedly beneficial springs. It is used now largely as a sanitarium for old soldiers afflicted with tuberculosis, but it is not nearly as desirable or advantageous for that purpose, from the information that the committee has, as the home at Johnson City, Tenn.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that I think it has been fully demonstrated that every claim that has ever been made has been fully justified by the records of the recoveries of those who have been sent there for treatment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purpose of the amusement hall and chapel is to provide additional accommodations, to enlarge that particular home, when at present there is ample accommodation even for tuberculosis patients.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The hearings do not sustain that contention.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that is the fact.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How are we going to ascertain the facts except from the hearings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman read the portion of the hearings that stated that the building of a combined chapel and amusement hall would furnish accommodations for 100 additional persons, and that the place now utilized for that purpose would be used for other purposes.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, the home at Hot Springs, S. Dak., is one of the later homes. It is where men go to have treated diseases peculiar to old men. They come from all over the West and from all parts of the country. It has been a healthful place to those seeking to regain health. It is not a bleak place, as stated by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York probably has never been there. The recoveries and improvement in health, as shown by the hearings, amount to 81 per cent.

I have known Hot Springs, S. Dak., since it was first opened up as a resort for health, when people had to go 100 miles by stage from the railroad to get there. It has been a resort that is health-giving to all people suffering from disease, and especially beneficial to the old soldiers who go there. It is shown by the hearings here and from what Gen. Barry said, that by erecting a chapel room would be given for 100 more inmates at the sanatorium, and there has been a large increase of patients in the last two years. Any man familiar with the country, with the health-giving properties of the springs, knows that it is a place that men would like to go. The veterans need more room.

I had a letter from Gen. Barry stating the necessity for a chapel; he has had experience for over 20 years with the soldier veterans in Nebraska, holding the position of adjutant general for years. He is a man whose word is good everywhere; he is an old soldier—a battle-scarred veteran of the Civil War. He was twice wounded severely in battle, losing his arm in the defense of the flag, and he is asking for this improvement, this new chapel, for the comfort and the good of the veterans and old soldiers who come to the home for treatment. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter vacancies existing or vacancies occurring in the membership of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall not be filled until the whole number of members of such board is reduced to five, and thereafter the number of members constituting said board shall not exceed five.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, lines 12 to 17, page 89, that it is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RODDENBERY). Will the gentleman state his point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is legislation changing existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is legislation; but I insist that it is in order under the rule because it retrenches expenditures and reduces the compensation of officers paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. ANTHONY. How much salary do these gentlemen get?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They get nothing, but each has an allowance for clerical service, and the abolition of the place discontinues the clerical service also.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is there any reduction in the appropriation in the bill for the expenses of the managers of the soldiers' home by reason of this paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule does not require a reduction on the face of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am not asking that. I am asking if there is any reduction in the bill on account of this paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; because the committee did not want to assume that any of these places would be vacated next year either for unanticipated or natural cause.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that these members receive no salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but in line 5, on the same page, the clerical service for the various managers is provided for at $4,500. By the reduction of the number of managers the compensation of the clerical services must necessarily be reduced.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is an assumption to say that the clerical services will be reduced. You will have the same organization; you will have a treasurer; you will have a secretary and have the same force that you have at the present time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Each member is allowed $500 for clerk hire, and a reduction of the membership by four reduces it $2,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The clerical services for the managers in this bill is $4,500. If there were three, they would have $1,500 apiece, and if there were five they would have $900 apiece. I do not think there is anything on the face of the paragraph which reduces expenses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman is clearly mistaken about that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will ask the gentleman if he can tell how many members there are on the board at the present time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the number of members authorized is nine.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Are there nine members at present?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then there are only seven on the board at the present time, so that they would receive more than $500 a member. If there are only seven members on the board and this item was put in the bill, why was the appropriation for this purpose not made $3,500 instead of $4,500?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because under the law, unless the law be changed, those vacancies might probably be filled.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But evidently the gentleman expected to put in an item providing for the nine members. Why did he not reduce the appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman thinks that is desirable, we would be very glad to do it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There is an appropriation, I believe, providing for traveling expenses of this board of managers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; there is an appropriation for traveling expenses.

Mr. MANN. Do they all travel now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Every one of them. The result of this provision is not only to reduce the expenditures for clerical services, but, as I have called to the attention of the Chair, it also reduces the expenditure for traveling of the board.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman what retrenchment, outside of the item of $16,000, in line 8, page 89, it is the gentleman's contention this would work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is the traveling expense of the board. They are all allowed traveling expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the item of $16,000, is it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Lines 5, 6, 7, and 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to be heard further upon the point of order?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not. I think it is legislation, and I do not think that you can assume that it will reduce the expenditure. The expenditures may be more.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair on the point of order, the Chair taking cognizance of what the existing law is touching the expense of the board of managers, and as it appears in this bill, it appearing that a reduction in the number of the members of the board of managers would carry necessarily a reduction of expenditures to that extent, being measured by the extent to which the number might be reduced, the point of order is not well taken, and it is therefore overruled.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in lieu of line 12, page 89, up to and including line 17, the following:

"That upon January 1, 1913, after the passage of this act, the powers heretofore vested in the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be vested in the Secretary of War, and the administration of the laws providing for the operation and regulation of said home shall be under the jurisdiction of the War Department. The Adjutant General, Inspector General, Quartermaster General, Commissary General, and Surgeon General, each, under the direction of the Secretary of War, shall perform such portion of the work of administration as shall appropriately fall to the respective bureaus of the War Department; that upon January 1, 1913, after the passage of this act, the terms of office of the various members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall cease and all title to property and authority heretofore vested in said board shall pass to the Government of the United States; that such provisions of existing law as are in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. In the first place, it is not germane to the provision in the bill. In the second place, one of the earliest rulings made under the Holman rule was that a provision transferring authority from one officer to another was in conflict with the rule. I refer to the proposed transfer of the work of the Indian Office to the War Department. That decision was made a great many years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I believe that if the provision which has just been ruled in order reducing the membership of the board to five members is in order, then the provision which I have offered is also in order. If the previous provision is in order under the Holman rule as effecting an economy of not more than a few hundred dollars, I submit that my amendment which makes an apparent economy at once of $62,500 must be in order under the Holman rule. The objection made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I do not believe to be pertinent. The reference to the previous ruling is upon a transfer of authority from the Indian department to the War Department. That was a transfer from one department of the Government to another. This is a transfer from one bureau of the War Department to another, because the Secretary of War is now an ex officio member of the present Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order the reference of the gentleman from New York was not a happy one. The fact is that it was ruled in order to transfer the Indian Office to the War Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to argue with the gentleman about that, but I have both rulings in my hand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the Chair has the ruling.

Mr. MANN. I doubt whether the Chair has. A section was offered that the management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations be and the same is hereby transferred from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, and was placed under the Secretary of War agreeable to such regulations as the President may prescribe, and so forth. That amendment was held out of order under the Holman rule, but in the same Congress, a new amendment having been prepared, was held in order:

That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished and the salary heretofore paid to such officer shall cease, and the offices of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employees of the Indian Bureau are hereby abolished and the salary heretofore paid to such officers, respectively, shall cease; and the duties now intrusted to and performed by said officers of every kind and description shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employees of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War, and they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed thus transferred to them, etc.

In the one case it was held that the mere transfer of the duties from one office to another, the management of Indian affairs from the Indian Office to the War Department, contemplated additional officers in the War Department, and there was no pretense that it might not cost as much in the War Department as in the Indian Office, but in the other the officers of the Indian Office were abolished, the duties were placed upon the Secretary of War and the War Department, and it was held that the amendment was in order. I do not care to detain the House. I have quite a lot of these precedents here, which I keep for handy reference.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think this point of order is well taken. The National Soldiers' Home is authorized under law. The board of managers serve without compensation. I do not care to discuss the merits of this amendment if it were in order, but it transfers this service to the War Department. That is legislation, and it does not appear that it reduces expenditures. On the contrary, if it were to enter into the domain of argument it would greatly increase expenditures.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman admit on the face of the proposition that you save the entire expense of the present board of managers——

Mr. CANNON. The entire expense——

Mr. ANTHONY. Amounting to $62,500?

Mr. CANNON. The entire expense of the present board of managers, as the gentleman states, amounts to $62,500; but what is the entire expense, if you transfer it to the War Department, with its extraordinary allowance for travel pay, with its largely increased clerical services? It does not seem upon the face that it will retrench expenditures, and it does change existing law.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, may I say one word on the question of retrenchment of expenditures to bring it within the rule? It is apparent to all that the abolishment of the board of managers would save every cent of the appropriation for the expenses of the maintenance of this board, the amount carried in this bill being $62,500. My contention is that the work now being done by the board of managers is administrative in its character; that that administrative work could be done by the Secretary of War and his bureau officers without an additional dollar of expense on the part of the Government. For instance, the quartermaster's work of the soldiers' home will be taken up by the Quartermaster General's Department; the Inspector General of the Army would have his share of the work; the Commissary Department would have its share of the work; the Surgeon General's Department would have its share of the work; so there is no question but what there is a marked economy effected under this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas shows a most serious objection relating to its germaneness. In addition to that the Chair is unable to ascertain upon the face of the amendment that it would retrench expenditures. It is clearly new legislation, and unless it can be brought under the provision for the retrenchment of expenditures it would necessarily go out although it might be germane. The Chair finds it does not come within the terms of the Holman rule and that it is further subject to the infirmity of not being germane. Therefore, the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Repairs of buildings, Interior Department: For repairs of Interior Department and Pension Buildings, and of the old Post Office Department Building, occupied by the Interior Department, including preservation and repair of steam-heating and electric-lighting plants and elevators, $30,000, of which sum not exceeding $7,500 may be expended for day labor, except for work done by contract.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In connection with this subject, although the matter of appropriation for unfinished public buildings, and so forth, has passed by in reading the bill, I trust I may be permitted at this time to present to the membership of the House some figures I have compiled as a result of my examination of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury made within the past two weeks in answer to the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which report seems to me throws a flood of light upon extravagances that we are permitting in the erection of Federal buildings in places not at all justified by conditions. I am not going to name any specific places enumerated in this bill. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury just referred to, setting forth with much completeness this information, has already been incorporated in the RECORD, and those interested can make reference thereto. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has just told me that the United States Government to-day is paying for rentals for buildings used under the Department of the Interior about $60,000 a year, and that the total amount of rentals to-day paid for buildings the Government does not own is upward of $600,000 per annum in the city of Washington alone.

Now, it seems to me, gentlemen, that, if we are paying this vast sum of $600,000 per annum in rentals for buildings that the Government ought to own, it is worth our while to turn our attention to the situation so as to provide buildings for our use in the city of Washington, or elsewhere, instead of spending eight or ten millions of dollars per year where they are not justified or needed. Many years ago a distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, who came from the district I have the honor to represent, is quoted as having made a remark with reference to the feasibility of the resumption of specie payments that the way to resume was to resume, and I might say that it occurs to me that the way to economize is to economize. I listened a while ago with considerable interest to nearly one hour's discussion on this floor of an insignificant item which involved a possible net saving of $6,000 a year. That is worth while; and I have no criticism of the gentleman who offered that amendment. It is certainly worth while to save even that amount of money, but it seems to me that if we should turn our attention earnestly and with a full desire to bring about a real economy in the administration of our Government we could easily find a place where we might properly save, not $6,000 a year, not $600,000 a year, but $10,000,000 a year—the upkeep of which amounts to at least $1,000,000 and——

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHARP. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Is it or is it not a fact that here the Government makes long leases and provides, perhaps, contracts running into a number of years? As to that, myself, I do not know.

Mr. SHARP. I will refer the gentleman to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is more familiar with that than I am.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In one or two cases we have authorized five-year contracts, but in other instances the contracts run from year to year.

Mr. MANN. They are authorized to make leases for 10 years in the Post Office Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is in the postal service. I mean outside of the postal service.

Mr. SIMS. There is a new building now going up right beside the building occupied by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I am informed, unofficially, that it has been leased for a number of years for the use of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I was curious to know if we had the right to contract for the erection of private buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no authority to contract for the lease of that building for more than one year at a time.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, it is an incorrect rumor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may say that in one or two instances in this city authority has been given to lease buildings for four or five years, where the Government has obtained reasonable terms. In more advanced conditions it might be advisable to adopt that plan.

Mr. SHARP. I have no feeling of sectionalism at all in this matter, Mr. Chairman, because, in looking over these different items, I find that they come from almost every section of the United States. I have heard but one argument in favor of the erection of this very large number of public buildings in the class of towns to which I refer. It is the only argument outside of a purely selfish motive that has ever been presented to me which may have some merit in it. I have heard this great expenditure justified on the ground that it inspires patriotism; that it furnishes an object of patriotic devotion to our country to find in these small towns throughout the country a public building flying the American flag, maintained by the Government and built at the public expense.

That has some merit in it, sentimentally considered, but I do not know but that, if the argument was based purely on the ground of patriotism, if the American flag should always be placed over our post offices in rented buildings, the same degree of patriotism would be inspired. We certainly would not then have all the time the accompanying thought of the willful, extravagant waste of the public money in expending from three to four times as much a year in each one of these places as we could rent accommodations for almost equally as good.

In looking over and epitomizing the result, I find in the present bill that there are 34 towns having a population of under 5,000 each, of which 19 towns have a population under 4,000 and 11 have a population under 3,000 each. But 2 towns out of the 34 have receipts in excess of $20,000 per annum, while 11 have less than $10,000 receipts per annum.

I may say further, as affecting the fixed charges that the Government has to pay, that I have compiled a brief statement, in which I think the figures are underestimated rather than overestimated. I have made the following estimates, assuming that in all these smaller towns the amount of money expended runs from $65,000 to $75,000. I believe the figures in this very complete statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, covering the last 8 or 10 years, will substantiate what I say, that the average amount of money so invested runs from $65,000 to $70,000. I have included 3 per cent interest on that sum, which amounts substantially, in round figures, to $2,000 per annum. I have allowed $800 for fuel and light; for janitor and other help, $1,200; and for repairs, a thousand dollars. The statement of the Treasury Department estimates a depreciation of 2 per cent, which would make it $1,300 or $1,400 per year. That makes a total expenditure for maintenance, in round figures, of $5,000 per year.

I have a table here showing the present amount of rentals paid by the Government for these different accommodations throughout the country, and where I have charged against the building, as in my estimate, $5,000, the Government is at present paying about $900 or $1,000 a year rental, which in many cases includes light, heat, and janitor care; making, in other words, a loss of nearly $4,000 a year for each building of that kind.

In looking over the statement itself, covering a period of the past eight years, and including the items in the present bill, I find that there are about 300 different towns having a population under 6,000 people each. I find, in addition to that, that there are 70 whose post-office receipts are under $10,000 a year.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the arguments upon this bill in debate, as they pertain to the public building appropriations. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] expressed a desire to see a system adopted, as he put it, that would justify the Government in constructing these buildings—that is, a system based either on sufficient receipts or on adequate population. I have given this subject considerable thought and consideration, although I am not a member of that committee, because it has always impressed me as an extremely unwarranted waste of public money. According to the figures before us we shall have approximately 1,000 of these projects at the end of another term of Congress. We have about 900 finished or under way now. I do not know what would be a proper standard to establish. It is hard to determine. I know of my own personal knowledge that there is in my district a town of less than 10,000 people that has over $100,000 annual postal receipts.

The statement of the Treasury Department shows that there are many other towns of 30,000 or 40,000 people which do not have receipts as large. It is very hard to fix a satisfactory criterion, it seems to me, by which the committee can be guided. I understand there is no statute fixing it, but it is a sort of a rule established by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds as to the places at which public buildings may be erected, based upon annual post-office receipts of not less than $10,000.

We all know how that is done. I charge no favoritism. I think that committee has been actuated by a sense of justice and fairness. I find that this condition, as it pertains to Federal buildings in small towns, exists all over the country, more especially, of course, in those parts of the United States where the population is less dense. But it does seem to me an appropriate suggestion that if we, as representatives of the American people, really desire to effect a substantial, a big economy, we can with wisdom and good cause save not less than $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 a year by raising our limit not only as to population, but as to post-office receipts, far in excess of the present requirement. That is my view of it. I may be mistaken. I may have a misconception of the importance of these marble-fronted buildings with which we have presented so many towns, some of which, according to this statement, have less than 2,000 people and have post-office receipts of less than $3,500 a year. I remember of receiving one day a letter from some official of a town in the far Southwest asking for my vote—we all get such requests—in favor of a proposition for a Government building at that place on the ground that it had finally reached a point where its post office was doing a business of $10,000 a year. At that moment I had in my pocket a telegram from the postmaster in one of my home towns having no Federal building, in which he informed me that the postal receipts for the preceding month alone at his post office were in excess of $11,000.

Mr. SIMS. Are post-office buildings erected for the use of post offices alone in towns where the postal receipts are not over $3,500 a year?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a beautiful speech, but are we proceeding under the hour rule, or the five-minute rule?

Mr. SHARP. I do not think it is my fault, nor do I think the gentleman can ascribe any blame to me. I will take all the time that is given me.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman if there are any buildings erected by the Government for post-office purposes alone where the postal receipts are only $3,500 a year?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. SHARP. I am very grateful to the Committee of the Whole House for listening to me beyond my allotted time. If I may have two minutes I should like to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHARP. I have one place noted here—I will not give the name of the town, but it is in Kentucky—where they have 1,638 population.

Mr. SIMS. What are the receipts?

Mr. SHARP. The postal receipts that year were $3,903.

Mr. SIMS. Was the building used for anything except a post office?

Mr. SHARP. The post office, United States court, internal-revenue collector, and so on.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman think the United States ought to furnish a building in which to hold the Federal court?

Mr. SHARP. I will give the name of the town, so that gentlemen may know all about it.

Mr. GARNER. I want to get the gentleman's opinion whether or not, when the Congress establishes a Federal court in a town and requires people to come to that town to attend court, it is the duty of the Government to furnish an adequate building for the purpose of holding court and conducting the public business?

Mr. SHARP. That may be. In answer to that question, I wish to say that I am unable to determine from this statement whether the rented accommodations before the public building was erected there were sufficient to enable them to hold court or not, but the rental was only $234 a year, whereas the upkeep of the new building was $2,836.

Mr. SHERLEY. What was the town?

Mr. SHARP. London, Ky.

Mr. GARNER. That may be a case where the county had issued bonds and gone to the expense of building a courthouse, and then as a matter of courtesy had permitted the United States to hold court in that courthouse and had permitted the clerk to occupy an office in the courthouse building.

Mr. SHARP. That may be.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman believe the Federal Government ought to continue to impose on the county to that extent—to use the county property free of charge?

Mr. SHARP. I believe not; but I wish to say, in answer to the gentleman's question, that in a large number of these cases the public buildings are used for post-office purposes only.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman fully that wherever a case of that kind is shown, then the Congress ought not to have appropriated the money and the public building ought not to have been constructed; but I wish to suggest to the gentleman that wherever a court has been established it has been the policy in every State in the Union, of every county and every State in the Union, to build a house adequate for the transaction of the business of the court.

Mr. SHERLEY. They get the court established for the purpose of getting the courthouse.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Enlarging the Capitol Grounds: To continue the acquisition of the land described in the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and as authorized and prescribed in said act, for enlarging the Capitol Grounds, $500,000: Provided, That in addition to the persons named in the said sundry civil act the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be a member of the commission constituted to acquire said land, and hereafter any three members thereof shall constitute a quorum and be competent to transact the duties devolving on them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that paragraph just read may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves a point of order, and the gentleman from Kentucky asks that the paragraph be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. For what reason?

Mr. SHERLEY. The chairman of the committee is now absent for a few minutes, and he made the request that it be passed, as it is the desire to make some change in the language.

Mr. MANN. Is it to be taken up later in this day?

Mr. SHERLEY. It will go over until to-morrow, I think. There will be no desire to take anybody by surprise.

Mr. MANN. Of course not, and I am frank to say that my only object of inquiry is to ascertain whether we can get through the bill to-morrow.

Mr. SHERLEY. In my judgment, we can not get through the bill by to-morrow, but the chairman is hopeful that we may.

Mr. MANN. And as to controverted matters, as far as we can, I prefer to have them disposed of this week rather than next week.

Mr. SHERLEY. I prefer to, too.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the right to object. I want to state for the benefit of the House that I have been opposed to this item. I was opposed to it when it passed the House originally two years ago, after being put in the bill by the Senate. I have no objection to its going over, but I would like to have, if we can, a time agreed upon when the matter will be taken up, because sometimes Members may be out of the House temporarily.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will simply say to the gentleman from Mississippi that we will see to it that when it is taken up he shall have notice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. SHERLEY. I stated there would be no attempt to call the matter up during the absence of the gentleman from Mississippi, and I ask that the item may be passed without prejudice, with the understanding that it will come up to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Kentucky is that the matter be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. With the point of order reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has notice that the point of order is reserved by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the amendment that I offered to the bill for a new building at the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC LANDS SERVICE.

Salaries and commissions of registers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, $280,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 93, strike out lines 17 to 19 and insert:

"Salaries and commissions of registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, $560,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the discussion of my amendment may go over until the next paragraph is read, as I desire to make a point of order on that paragraph, and that I may discuss my amendment after the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. SHERLEY. I see no reason why we should not dispose of the gentleman's amendment now.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair should hold that the following paragraph was subject to a point of order——

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not conceive of the Chair so holding.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not particular, but it seems to me that that is the logical thing to do, to dispose of the point of order first. It is entirely immaterial to me.

Mr. MANN. They are all part and parcel of the same proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the logical way to dispose of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me one depends upon the other, and I do not see any objection to considering them both together.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand from the gentleman from Wyoming that if the Chair should overrule the point of order as to the matter which he considers new matter, the gentleman would then desire to press his amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. He might desire to move to strike out the matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. It seems to me, if we are to have the fight, we might as well have it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There may be a different situation arise. If the succeeding paragraph be taken out of the bill either upon a point of order or upon motion, of necessity I would be obliged to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment increasing the appropriation in the paragraph just read and providing for receivers.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming has offered such an amendment and asked to have it passed for the present.

Mr. MONDELL. Until the point of order could be disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. It is perfectly plain. If the next paragraph is agreed to, then this paragraph is to stand as it is, but if it is not agreed to it should be amended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it becomes necessary, the committee itself will wish to do what the gentleman has asked to do.

Mr. MONDELL. Then there would be no objection to my request.

Mr. MANN. Any one person might object. It is the orderly way to dispose of the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think anybody would object.

Mr. MANN. Then there is no occasion for discussing and voting upon it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. What is the use taking up time now until we dispose of the other section?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph commencing on line 7 and ending on line 9 be passed temporarily.

Mr. MONDELL. Passed until the succeeding paragraph is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The office of receiver of public moneys for land districts, from and after the 30th day of June, 1912, is abolished, and all the powers, duties, obligations, and penalties at that time lawfully imposed upon such receivers and upon registers of land offices shall, from and after that date, be exercised by and imposed upon such registers; and such registers shall, in addition to the duties thus imposed, have charge of and attend to the sale of public and Indian lands within their respective districts, as provided by law and official regulation, and shall be accountable under their official bonds for the proceeds of such sales, and for all fees, commissions, and other moneys received by them under any provision of law or official regulation. Instead of the office of receiver of public moneys hereby and herein abolished, the Secretary of the Interior may appoint or designate a chief clerk for any land office, who shall receive such salary, not exceeding $2,000 per annum, payable from the appropriation for contingent expenses of land offices, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may authorize, and such chief clerk shall perform such duties as may be directed by the register of the land office for which he is appointed, or by official regulations, including the receipt of moneys, and he shall, during the absence of such register, or in case of a vacancy in the office of such register, exercise all the powers, perform all the duties, and be subject to all the obligations and penalties imposed upon such register by law or official regulation; but such clerk shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, execute to the United States a bond in such penal sum as the said Secretary may prescribe, with approved security, for the faithful performance of his official duties; and such clerk shall be accountable under his official bond for such proceeds arising from the sale of public or Indian lands within his district, and for such fees, commissions, and other moneys as may come into his hands under any law or official regulation or direction: Provided, That all the fees and commissions now allowed by law to both such registers and such receivers shall, after the 30th day of June, 1912, be paid to and accounted for by such registers, in the manner prescribed by law and departmental regulations, and in like amounts in which they are now required to be paid to and accounted for by such receivers, but the compensation of such registers shall in no case exceed $3,000 per annum, as now provided by law.

Mr. HAWLEY and Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph just read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I asked that the matter go over in order that I might make the point of order. I ask that I be recognized to make the point of order, as I made the request under which it was possible to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Oregon has already been recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the Chair that it was at my suggestion that we passed over the preceding paragraph, and I then announced that I intended to make the point of order to the paragraph when it was reached. I was on my feet and addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Oregon had already done the same thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Oregon did not ask unanimous consent to have the matter passed in order that a point of order might be made, and I did request to have the preceding paragraph passed in order that I might make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph proposes to reorganize the local land offices throughout the country by eliminating one of the positions in them that has been in existence for nearly half a century, namely, the office of receiver, and substituting in lieu of the receiver another official and providing a salary for this new official. It proposes, in addition to that, on page 93, from lines 16 to 23, to add to the duties of registers of the Land Office. That matter is clearly new legislation and has no reference apparently on the face of it to any appropriation contained in this act, and under the Holman rule I think it has been held that the legislation must relate to the appropriation contained in the act in which it appears for the year for which the appropriation is made.

In abolishing the office of receiver these facts should be noted by the Chair:

Under the law, Revised Statutes, paragraph 2237, the salary of the receiver is fixed at $500 per year; and under paragraph 2240 and the preceding paragraphs it is provided that certain commissions and fees may be received by the receiver as a part of his compensation up to the total of $3,000, the law further providing that he shall not receive more than $750 for any quarter.

But the salary of the receiver is fixed at $500 per year in the law. These commissions are varying amounts that may amount in the total for the year to $3,000 or may make his salary amount to $800 or $1,000, depending upon the state of the public business and the activity at the local land office. It is proposed to abolish the office of receiver and to substitute an entirely new official. There is no such official provided for in the law, in the local land office, as a chief clerk, as is contemplated in this bill. It can not be maintained that there are in the Department of the Interior such chief clerks as may be appointed to these places. Every subdivision of the Department of the Interior contains a chief clerk; there is one in the General Land Office, one in the Indian Office, and in the Reclamation Office, and so forth. These are designated in the law to do certain specific work in these subdivisions of the Department of the Interior. It can not be maintained that they are available to be sent to the local land offices. It must then follow that there must be appointed new officials to fill the vacancies caused by taking out of the law this provision respecting receivers, and that, I submit, is new legislation, making a new appropriation and expending additional public funds.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is the description about new officers?

Mr. HAWLEY. It begins, line 22, on page 93:

Instead of the office of receiver of public moneys, hereby and herein abolished, the Secretary of the Interior may appoint or designate a chief clerk for any land office, who shall receive such salary, not exceeding $2,000 per annum, payable from the appropriation for contingent expenses of land offices, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may authorize.

Now, this chief clerk is to be appointed at a salary of not exceeding $2,000, and under the civil service he would under no circumstances receive as low as $500, and in the grade of clerk, from which this officer would be taken, he would receive not less than $1,600 or $1,800, and probably more, so that makes a distinct addition to the fixed legal or statutory salary paid to the officer charged with the duty of receiving moneys at a local land office. But in addition to that, at the beginning of line 4 and proceeding down to line 20 on page 94, it proceeds to specially describe the duties of this chief clerk. It provides that he shall perform such duties as the register may direct him to perform, and goes on further to specify that in the case of a vacancy in the office of register, or in the absence of said register, he shall not only perform the duties of the new office created for him, but the duties of the present register in the office in which any particular proposed chief clerk is at work. That is new legislation.

In the first place, there is no chief clerk in any of these offices in the contemplation of the law as described here; and, in the second place, there is no clerk that has any such relation to the law as is described here. It is entirely new law. Nor does it not diminish the pay of officers of the United States. It does not diminish the expenditure, because that depends on how much the actual salary received by the present receivers may be, and no showing is made by the provision under discussion that indicates a reduction. The minimum salary of the present receiver is $500, and under the civil-service regulations and law the minimum salary of the chief clerk to be appointed could not be less than $1,600 or $1,800. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this provision is obnoxious to the rule on three grounds—that it does not reduce expenditures even temporarily, on the face of the bill; that it does not decrease officers of the United States, because it substitutes one officer for another; that it contains new legislation creating a new office; and not only adding a new office here with new powers, but it is new legislation in the part already recited in the preceding page of the bill defining the duties of the present registers of the local land offices and adding new duties to those now provided in the law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, paragraph 815 of the rules provides that no part of the appropriation——

The CHAIRMAN. What page?

Mr. MONDELL. Page 400, down about the center of the paragraph:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by a reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment in question does not come within the rule, because, while it does reduce the number of a certain class of officers who only receive $500 per annum in salary under the law, it creates an equal number of officers who receive $2,000 per annum as provided in the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to repeat that.

Mr. MONDELL. While it does reduce the number of officers—that is, it strikes out the office of receiver of the land office, and there are approximately 105 of such officers, one in each local land office—it abolishes that position, but it also in lieu of these officers provides a chief clerk, and if the Chair will read at the bottom of page 93 and top of page 94 of the bill he will see provision is made for a salary for such new clerks of not to exceed $2,000 per annum.

The paragraph, therefore, dispenses with the services of approximately 105 officials who, under the law, receive $500 per annum; and I call the attention of the Chair to chapter 2, page 302, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, section 2237, "each register and receiver shall be allowed an annual salary of $500," so that in lieu of officers receiving $500 in salary we are providing officers who may receive $2,000 in salary. I think that one fact makes it very clear the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not wish to leave the impression that $500 is the maximum salary of receivers and registers of land offices?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I do not desire to leave that impression. There are registers and receivers who receive more in commissions and fees, but we are talking of salaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The very next section of the Revised Statutes provides that in addition to the salary mentioned they shall receive certain compensation in the way of fees.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but the Chair can not be expected to investigate as to whether or no these officials receiving a certain fixed salary may or may not also in addition to that, as a matter of fact, receive some commissions. There are some receivers who do not receive any commissions at all who serve for $500 per annum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman knows that if these receivers are reinstated in the bill it necessitates the adoption of the amendment which the gentleman himself offered increasing one item in this bill by $280,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Section 2240 of the Revised Statutes provides that the compensation of registers and receivers, including salaries, fees, and commissions, shall in no case exceed in the aggregate $3,000 a year.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have the attention of the Chair on that point, if the Chair considers it of any importance. Of course, if these officials are restored, their salaries must be added to the bill. The next paragraph carries an appropriation to pay the new officers provided for by this new legislation, and if my amendment restoring the receivers and their salaries is adopted I shall offer another amendment reducing the appropriation in the next paragraph for clerks. The gentleman certainly——

Mr. FITZGERALD. By how much?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will know when I offer the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will not the gentleman now state it?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman certainly will not contend that by simply reducing the amount in an appropriation bill, leaving the public service without adequate funds, he would thereby come within the Holman rule, because the necessity for the expenditure is still there, and the amendment might simply be made for the purpose of attempting to show a reduction of expenditures when as a matter of fact no such reduction was provided for.

The bare question before the Chair is this: This is new legislation wiping out certain offices and creating certain other offices. What are the salaries provided by law for these respective offices? The Revised Statutes give the officer who is deprived of his office, and whose office ceases under the amendment, $500. The amendment gives the officer who takes his place a salary not to exceed $2,000. No one will contend that by reducing Federal officers, on the one hand, by a given number and creating new Federal officers, on the other hand, an equal number with a higher salary, you come within the Holman rule, although there may be another item somewhere else in the bill, not in this paragraph—because this paragraph carries no appropriation at all—there may be an item somewhere in another paragraph which is modified or changed in some way.

But this paragraph carries no appropriation. It is pure legislation. It does not decrease, and does not purport or pretend to decrease, the appropriation, because there is no appropriation carried in this paragraph, and on its face it increases the appropriation, for it provides for Federal officials who will receive $2,000 in lieu of Federal officials whose salary is $500.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. MONDELL. Gladly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the paragraph also enlarges the duties of the register to a very great extent, and that would undoubedly necessitate the employment of additional clerical force other than what is employed under the present system.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. I think the points I have made will be quite sufficient to justify the Chair in holding that the amendment is not in order. But if the Chair will bear with me I will call his attention to the fact that here are two pages of new legislation, changing radically the duties of public officials, wiping out a certain position which has existed since the creation of the Land Office and creating a new position and transferring duties. No one knows what the effect of that transfer may be. In my opinion the transfer of the duty of the receiver to the chief clerk can have no other effect than to compel further clerical service for the register, upon whom the duties now performed by the receiver are largely placed. So that, in whatever way you view it, this paragraph can not come under the Holman rule, and therefore is subject to a point of order.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized to say a few words on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] is recognized.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to suggest that this is very important legislation. That is the reason why it should be seriously considered. In the first place, the proposition in the amendment abolishes the office of a receiver of the local United States land office.

The CHAIRMAN. By "the amendment" does the gentleman mean the section in the bill?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes. By this proposed provision for abolishing the office of receiver you necessarily create a situation under which you are compelled to create other officers.

The other officers provided for here are chief clerks of the United States land offices, officers which do not exist at the present time. It is a fact, of which the Chair will take judicial notice, that many receivers throughout the Western States at the present time are not receiving the maximum which they may receive of $3,000 per year. Many of these receivers are not taking in over $1,200 at the present time. Some of them, I know within my own knowledge, when the fees and commissions run down to a certain point, resign their offices, and they get other people to fill them. Therefore it is an open question as to whether or not this proposed legislation would not result in an expenditure of more money than is now being expended. And, if I may be pardoned for saying so, Mr. Chairman, these receivers are local officials. They are appointed from among those within the neighborhood or within the State where these public lands are to be administered. On the other hand, these officers who are to take their places are detailed from Washington, D. C., by the Secretary of the Interior, as here provided, and we are to have saddled upon us in the West some more of these gentlemen who go back and forth across the continent, riding in Pullman palace cars, and telling our people where to head in at. I am in favor of home rule in the matter of administration of public lands in the West as much as my brethren here from the South are in favor of home rule in the South.

I say this is an important matter, and, while I am not so familiar with parliamentary law as these other gentlemen who have spoken, I trust the Chairman will give the subject his best consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Oregon, I will say that this is a very important matter, and has been recommended for three years by the present administration. The Commissioner of the General Land Office states in his report for 1911—

> The recommendation made in the report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910, in regard to the abolishment of the office of receiver is renewed. A far better organization at less expense could be perfected——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman discussing the point of order or the merits of the proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am discussing the point of order. One of the grounds upon which I base the contention that this provision is in order is that it effects reductions in the amounts carried by the bill, and I intend to demonstrate it, not only from the action of the gentleman himself, but from the recommendations of those who have charge of the service.

Mr. MONDELL. We can see how pertinent they were——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, I can finish what I have to say more quickly. The Commissioner of the General Land Office stated:

> The recommendation made in the report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910, in regard to the abolishment of the office of receiver is renewed. A far better organization at less expense could be perfected. There is no business reason to be advanced for the retention of the present organization of local land offices. It originated in the era of sale, when the money value of the land disposed of was the paramount idea; it was retained without any real reason through the era of development; the coming era should see it abolished. The recommendation last year was as follows:
> "The organization of the local land offices should be changed and a great deal of money saved and better administration secured by the abolition of the positions of register and receiver and the creation of one position in lieu of the two. The positions of registers and receivers were created under the original organization when the duties were those of sales agent and recording officer. By additional legislation, as stated above, the duties of local officers have been changed. Under this dual system there is a divided responsibility. The register and receiver have to sign decisions, and they are responsible together for the work of the office. This divided responsibility is not a successful method of management for any office. Experience has shown that there are frequent clashes between the two officers. The simplest organization would be the creation of a new office and the placing of one man in charge of all the work of the local office, and substituting for the receiver a bonded clerk. This bonded clerk could be secured for the work to be performed at a salary ranging from $1,500 to $2,000 a year, and the difference between that and the salary now paid to receivers would amount in saving to the Government, in round numbers, to about $150,000 a year. Better administration would be secured, and the Government would save a considerable sum."

This provision, Mr. Chairman, proposes to abolish the office of receiver in the local land offices. Under the law the receivers of local land offices——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand whether the proposed abolishment applies to more than one office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it abolishes the receivers in all the local land offices. There are a number.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not at first understand whether the gentleman was using the plural or the singular.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are 105 local land offices in the United States. This provision proposes to abolish the receiver in each of these offices.

The receiver in a local land office, under section 2237 of the Revised Statutes, is allowed an annual salary of $500. By section 2238, in addition to their salaries, they are allowed certain fees and commissions, and the fees and commissions are set forth. Then, by section 2240, the compensation of the receiver, including salary, fees, and commissions, is limited to $3,000. By the abolishment of these offices and the transfer of their duties to clerks in the office of the register, a saving of $110,000 is effected annually, and that appears from this bill itself.

The paragraph just passed provided for salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices at not exceeding $3,000 per annum, $280,000. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] proposes to reinsert in that paragraph the provision for the compensation of the receivers of the land offices and to increase the appropriation to $560,000. On page 95, under the contingent expenses of the land offices, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] proposes to offer an amendment, should this provision be eliminated, to reduce the appropriation on page 95, line 7, from $490,000 to $320,000, a reduction of $170,000.

This provision does not authorize any new offices. It provides for the transfer of duties from the receivers, who are abolished, to clerks in the respective land offices. There is very ample authority at present for the discontinuance and transfer of these various offices, and under section 2255 of the Revised Statutes the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make a reasonable allowance for office rent for the consolidated land offices, and when satisfied of the necessity therefor, to approve the employment by the register of one or more clerks at reasonable per diem compensation for such time as such clerical force is absolutely necessary to keep up the current public business, which clerical force shall be paid out of the surplus fees authorized to be charged by section 2239, if any, and if no surplus exists, then out of the appropriation for incidental expenses of district land offices; but no clerk shall be so paid unless his employment has been first sanctioned by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, the fixing of a limitation upon the compensation of these clerks upon whom the duties of the receiver devolve, is fixing a limitation upon compensation which under the law at present is limited only by the determination of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. In every case where a chief clerk exists in a department, if I am not in error, he is mentioned specifically in the statute, and now to appoint chief clerks in the general land offices would be to create new offices, because the positions of chief clerks have been recognized in all cases as being offices created by statute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken. The word "chief" does not affect the matter at all. One of these clerks in the office would be considered or designated as of a higher rank or in charge of the other clerks. This was merely a devolving of the duties of the receiver upon the clerk of the highest grade in the office.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understand the gentleman, he says that under this provision there is no new position created, but that there would be a transfer of duties to a clerk in the office. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to line 24, on page 93, in which it says:

> The Secretary of the Interior may appoint or designate a chief clerk for any land office.

That certainly is creating a position that does not exist at the present time, and does create a position.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. I doubt if there is any difference in meaning. The Secretary of the Interior now, within the limits of the appropriation, has authority to provide such clerical force in these different offices of register and receiver of the land offices as he sees fit. He fixes the limit of the compensation. In the transfer of the duties now devolving by statute on the receiver, it is provided that they shall devolve upon the most important clerk, or the person who properly would be designated or characterized as the chief or head clerk of the office.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. How many of these receivers are now receiving the maximum of $3,000 a year? I understand there is a number that receives a great deal less. Many officers are not maximum officers; very few. Some of them only receive $500.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know how many are receiving the maximum salary, but the average compensation is over $2,100.

Mr. STEENERSON. The saving would only be $100 for one office then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is very much mistaken; the saving under this reorganization is $101,000 annually.

Mr. STEENERSON. Besides the $2,000 salary they would have to pay them for traveling expenses, and there would be no saving at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to question the gentleman's arithmetic. As I understood, he said the average register and receiver's compensation was about $2,100 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is more than that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That would amount to $4,200 for the two places.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I was speaking of the receivers alone.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The receivers and registers get substantially the same compensation. Now the gentleman proposes to have a chief clerk at $2,000 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken; there are only two or three of the chief clerks who would get the maximum compensation. The great mass of them are not to receive in excess of $1,600.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is an assumption.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The statement in the hearings is that in 1911 there was paid the receivers the sum of $274,047.71. That would make an average salary of $2,600 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thank the gentleman for the statement. That shows conclusively that this would effect a reduction, as I stated.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the point of order made by the gentleman from Wyoming is not being discussed. It is the merits of the proposition that is being discussed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Colorado is mistaken. One of the grounds upon which it is insisted, Mr. Chairman, that this provision is in order, is that it effects a reduction in the amount carried by this bill. It is impossible to discuss that question without going into the question of compensation and the amounts that would be necessitated if this provision was eliminated from the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman from New York will pardon me further, I want to say that the commissioner states that the total compensation to be paid to bonded clerks under this arrangement would amount to $172,600, leaving a balance of $101,447 as the estimated saving.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the statement I recall that was made; that under this reorganization that saving would be effected. Mr. Chairman, I think the question of order is simple. Here are certain offices established with authority of the Secretary of the Interior to appoint clerical services in these offices. This provision proposes to abolish certain officers and transfer the duties to the clerks now authorized, and to put a limitation upon the maximum that can be paid to the clerks, there being no maximum fixed at present. The result is a saving in this bill of $101,000. It seems to me that under these conditions this provision is clearly in order under the rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the Chair bear with me a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to emphasize the fact that the paragraph against which I made the point of order carries no appropriation whatever. Therefore it does not come under the Holman rule on the ground that it provides for a reduction in the appropriation. It does not come under the Holman rule, further, because while it is new legislation and creates new offices it does not reduce the number of officers under the Government. It wipes out one set of offices and creates another equal in number, so that it does not decrease the number of offices.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The paragraph to which the gentleman has made the point of order does abolish the office of receiver and substitutes therefor appointed clerks at $2,000. Does not the gentleman think it is perfectly proper and necessary that the Chair shall look to the bill to see what these receivers will receive under the bill, if retained, in order to determine whether or not it properly comes under the Holman rule?

Mr. MONDELL. The Chair could not go through the entire sundry civil bill to find some reason for supporting this amendment. The amendment must stand or fall by what it says; what it says and what it does, and it does not reduce appropriations. It does not decrease the number of officers; it does not reduce expenditures directly, nor does it reduce them indirectly, because it dispenses with one class of officers the salary of which is $500 per annum, and provides for another class of officers at not to exceed $2,000 per annum.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some suggestions that bear upon the point of order. The first is this: Does not the conferring of the functions of the abolished office of receiver upon the office of clerk created as a substitute make it conclusive that a new office is created? I think that can not be successfully gainsaid.

Now, the second inquiry, which I regard as legitimate for consideration of the chairman on the point of order, is: It is not a legitimate solution of the question of the increase of expenditure in the expenditures that may possibly be made by taking statistics, taking the information which the Department of the Interior has furnished as to the expenditures last year and for previous years. This question is not to be determined by speculation. It is not to be determined upon the fluctuations of one year when it was high and another year when it was low, not upon what may possibly occur, but upon what is essentially certain.

The statute provides that the salary of the receiver shall be $500 a year. In the proposed legislation it is certain that the salary of the clerk must be much greater than that. This question must be solved upon the certainties—and I contend that it is not legitimate to decide it upon speculation, upon uncertainties of what the fees may amount to one year or what they will amount to the next year. I anticipate that the enactment of the three-year residence homestead act will make the fees larger next year than last year. That, however, is speculation, and is not a legitimate consideration. A reliable criterion must be furnished. I contend it must be made to affirmatively appear that retrenchment will result. But, sir, it is only shown to be problematical, and assuredly that will not do.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer one additional consideration in reply to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the distinguished chairman of the committee, wherein he maintained that this was not a new office. There is no such office as chief clerk in any of the local land offices at the present time. All the statutes making appropriations with reference to a chief clerk in any division of the governmental service have appropriations for a chief clerk by the designation of such office, so making him a statutory officer. It is proposed in this paragraph to make a statutory officer and appropriate for him. That must create a new office. In so creating a new office the amendment, if for no other reason, would be obnoxious to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Before ruling the Chair will invite the attention of the committee again to that portion of the rule read by the gentleman from Wyoming, which is as follows:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and the salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

For the purpose of retrenching expenditures the Chair holds that the House unquestionably has the right to legislate through an appropriation bill. In the second line of the rule above quoted we find the expression, "changing existing law." Existing law can not be changed without new legislation. The Chair therefore holds, as just stated, that an appropriation bill can change existing law; and if there is the right to change existing law there must, of necessity, be the right to legislate. That right to legislate, however, is limited by what follows in the rule, and there is real ambiguity in what follows:

The gentleman from Wyoming has said that the section to which the point of order has been raised contains no appropriation. That looks in the direction of retrenchment of expenditures because it does not contain an appropriation. Under the Holman rule an appropriation bill can contain such legislative matter as abolishes an office. The right to abolish an office is unquestioned. Now comes the question of the right of an appropriation bill to contain a provision creating an office. If the abolishment of one office and the creation of another works retrenchment in expenditures, the Chair is of opinion that this can be done, because it is still within the limit provided under the Holman rule of "changing existing law."

The question, therefore, that is uppermost in the mind of the Chair is whether there is at last a retrenchment of expenditures under the paragraph under consideration. Being in doubt, the Chair feels constrained to give some weight to the report made by the Commissioner General of the Land Office to the effect that it is a retrenchment of expenditures. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which originated this bill, makes the positive statement that $105,000 will be saved by this paragraph. He makes that statement after his own research into the matter and upon the statement of the head of the department or bureau, whichever it may be, which has charge of these affairs, and this statement has gone practically unchallenged.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph on page 93, beginning with line 10, down to and including line 4 on page 95.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend pages 93, 94, and 95 by striking out the paragraph beginning with line 10 on page 93 and ending with line 4 on page 95.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to see if we can agree upon some time for discussion?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a very important matter and I should like to have 15 minutes myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, we can not consent to that, with the other body in this Congress having served notice on the country that no business is going to be done for two weeks.

Mr. MONDELL. But we had a speech here 20 minutes in length a short time ago in regard to a matter not relating to the bill at all. Here is a proposition to abolish 105 offices.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close at 4 o'clock.

Mr. MONDELL. I think we could conclude the debate under this amendment in one hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. We have already discussed the matter for half an hour or more.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this affects every settler on the public lands, and I think if the gentleman had been in the West and had to do with the settlers he would be willing to grant an hour.

Mr. MONDELL. I think we should go on this evening with the business and dispose of the bill, and I think the chairman ought to give us a fair amount of time.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will remind the chairman of the committee that while there are many Members who are vitally interested in this matter, their advice or suggestion was never requested in regard to the matter, and this is the only opportunity they will have to present their views in regard to the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I suggest to close debate in 40 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it ought to be made an hour if possible.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I can not get an agreement to close debate at the end of 40 minutes——

Mr. MANN. Make it 4.20.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that it be closed at 4 o'clock——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I suggest to the gentleman that he will not make any time by doing that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Make it 4.20.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will make it 4.20.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I suggest to the gentleman that I want to know something about the division of time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Well, I am in this position in this House——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can protect himself from assault under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado (continuing). In that I am against both propositions, and therefore I do not want to give away what time I desire. I want five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can get his five minutes. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close at 4.20.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there are at least a half dozen gentlemen on this side who want to discuss this matter, and we ought to have at least 40 minutes on this side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will serve notice that at 20 minutes after 4 I shall move to close debate, and gentlemen can regulate their conduct accordingly.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman desire considerable time on his side in favor of the proposition? Does the gentleman expect to consume half the time in favor of the proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not; probably 10 or 15 minutes; I would like to have 5 minutes. I do not think there will be any trouble; very little time will be occupied on this side, and we are willing to give the gentlemen opposed to it some of our time.

Mr. MONDELL. I want 10 minutes, at least; but I do not want to deprive gentlemen on this side of an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe more than 10 minutes will be asked on this side of the House against the proposition of the gentleman. I am willing the gentleman's side shall have 40 minutes in favor of the gentleman's motion.

Mr. MONDELL. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close at 20 minutes after 4 o'clock, 40 minutes of the time to be occupied by those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there are many reasons why this provision should be stricken out. There are many reasons why the office of register should be retained. I propose to discuss first the question of economy. The chairman of the committee has been grievously misled in the matter. I am willing to admit for the sake of argument that there is a bare possibility that a little money may be saved to the Government, but I think I can prove beyond controversy that the saving even under the most favorable conditions will not be more than one-fourth or one-third of that suggested by the commissioner or by the chairman of the committee. There has been a curious difference of opinion as to how much was to be saved by this legislation. A year ago we heard that the abolition of these offices would save upward of $200,000. This year in transmitting the estimates suggestion was made that there would be a saving of $150,000. When the commissioner appeared before the committee he suggested they might save $101,000, and the committee evidently estimate $110,000 as the net amount of saving in the two items of the appropriations relating to this matter. Now, the facts are these: There are 105 land offices. Last year in 61 of those offices the registers and receivers received the maximum salary and therefore those 61 offices cost $6,000, $3,000 to each officer, and in these 61 offices, assuming that the business continues this year as it was last year and there would be a saving of $61,000 under this bill, assuming that the clerks all receive $2,000, as they undoubtedly will, as to 16 of these offices the salaries and fees and commissions last year of register and receiver were between $5,000 and $6,000, but all above $5,000, and the saving in the 16 offices would be $7,767.65, so that in 77 offices there would be, on the basis of last year's business, under the new provision a saving of $68,766, providing no additional clerical help should be required. We all know that at least one additional clerk will be required, in addition to the chief clerk, in all of these offices when a chief clerk is provided.

But there are 25 land offices where last year the registers and receivers together received much less than $5,000. For instance, the register and receiver at Nome—and I ask the attention of the gentlemen of the committee to this extraordinary condition of affairs—the register and receiver at Nome last year received the magnificent sum of $136, and under your legislation next year the Nome office might cost $2,136.44. There are a large number of offices, 25 as I have said, in which the expenditures were much less than they would be under the provisions of this bill for this reason: Registers and receivers receive salaries of $500 and fees up to $3,000 a year, and therefore if the receipts in fees in a given office are only $3,000 a year they are divided between the register and receiver and they receive $1,500 each, but if you abolish one office under the terms of your legislation you double the salary of the remaining officer——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to encroach upon the time of others, but I suggest that I asked for 10 minutes when the limitation of time was agreed upon, and I now ask that I may proceed for 5 minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore as to these 25 offices the new policy proposed increases the pay of the register, for it gives him all the fees up to $2,500. In lieu of the receiver, who in many instances only receives from five to fifteen hundred dollars, you provide a chief clerk who is to receive $2,000. I have figured out the matter very carefully on every office in the country and assuming that business shall continue as it was last year and assuming that no additional clerical help will be required, and that is a violent assumption, assuming all these things, the largest possible saving under this arrangement is $38,712.92. The average cost of offices last year for registers and receivers was $5,306.50. The average cost of offices under the provisions of the bill will be $5,000, and on that basis the saving would be only $32,711 even though no additional expenditure was required.

Mr. PAGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I must hurry along.

Mr. PAGE. Just one question. The gentleman in his figures evidently places the salary of all these chief clerks at the maximum sum that is mentioned, whereas as a matter of fact the record shows a majority of these men would receive very much less than that.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the record does not show anything, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. PAGE. I mean the testimony taken by the committee from the officers of the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman suggests that the commissioner stated that they might not pay all these clerks $2,000 a year. They have the right to pay them all $2,000 a year; and in all probability they will in a year or two, if they do not, in the first instance, pay them all that they are allowed to pay them under the law, and then we will have this condition: A chief clerk in a land office in the West receiving $2,000, sitting beside an appointee of the President who may be receiving all the way from $500 to $1,500 or $1,800.

The following statement shows the situation as regards the land offices under the policy proposed by the committee:

Fiscal year 1911, 105 land offices, cost, salaries and commissions, $557,183. Average, $5,306.50 each. If new bill made the cost $5,000, the saving would be $32,711.

Now, even though all the sums suggested by anyone were to be saved by this legislation, it should not be enacted, because it is not in the interest of the settler on the public domain nor is it in the interest of the body of the people.

The register and receiver sit in judgment on land cases. They are familiar with local conditions. They are charged with the responsibility of passing upon all the questions of law, of fact, and of equity arising under the public-land laws. It is now proposed to dispense with one of those officials and send a civil-service clerk out there to sit in the place of one of them. And, more than that, the provision which my amendment would strike out gives this clerk the right to exercise all the authority and all of the jurisdiction that is now exercised by both the register and receiver.

Under that condition of affairs what would happen? From the very initiation of an entryman's right to the last judgment in the Secretary's office no individual will pass upon it who is familiar with the country, who is familiar with the conditions, who is in a position to understand the equities of the entryman. Civil-service clerks, from the initiation to the close of the case, are to pass upon the right of American citizens to acquire homes on the public domain under the laws of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to strike this provision from the bill, first, because I do not believe that legislation as important as this legislation should be incorporated in an appropriation bill.

It has been suggested that this provision is in order under the Holman rule because it would save expense. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it will not save one dollar in the expenses incurred in connection with the administration of the land offices of the country.

I remember only a few years ago when it was proposed by the Interior Department to discontinue the Indian agents, and to consolidate the position of the school superintendent and the agent in one position, and we were assured if that was done we would save a large sum of money.

Mr. Chairman, we did discontinue agents and substituted the school superintendents, but the experience has been it has not saved expense, but simply has put into the classified service positions that theretofore were filled by appointments made by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and we now have at the Indian agencies of the country agents who are charged with great responsibility, who are in some instances clerks sent out from the Indian Office, who never had seen an Indian until they left the District of Columbia and never had had any practical experience in dealing with Indians.

If this provision remains in this bill and becomes a law we will have, as the gentleman from Wyoming states, a clerk detailed or designated and sent to the local land offices from the General Land Office to pass upon questions of great importance.

Under existing law the registers and receivers are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They are offices of a good deal of responsibility, and as a general rule they are filled by men of a large caliber, men who have had experience, and usually one of them is an experienced lawyer.

Among the duties that they have to perform, as has been stated by the gentleman from Wyoming, is the duty of passing upon questions involving the rights of those who settle upon the public domain, and, in the case of a homesteader who may have a contest filed against his entry, a hearing is had. Before whom? The register and receiver, and they join in a decision and determine whether or not that entryman is to have his land and is to be permitted to keep his home, or whether his entry is to be canceled.

What does this bill do? It not only abolishes one of these places, but it provides that in the absence of the register, or in the case of a vacancy in the office of register, a clerk, who they say may receive much less than $2,000 a year, is going to have the power and authority to pass upon these important questions—questions, as I say, determining property rights, and in many instances rights that are of great value.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is only another suggestion that comes from a bureau of the Government to extend the classified service. We have already by legislation made these various bureaus so that they are to-day close corporations, and this is an effort to make them still closer and give them greater power and authority than they now possess. If we get rid of the receivers, it will not be long until it will be proposed to do away with the registers also and fill their places with a civil-service clerk. You might just as well say that we might do away with the positions that we hold here and let the duty devolve upon our clerks, or do away with the Commissioner of the General Land Office and let the duties that he now performs be performed by the chief clerk of that particular bureau.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that from every standpoint, and particularly in view of the fact that the entrymen who file upon the public domain are bound by the decisions of the department and have no right to go into any court, we ought at least to permit them to have men of high character, men of wide experience, and men capable of determining judicial questions, and to have two, as we have heretofore had, to pass upon questions that involve their property rights instead of leaving it to one, and possibly that one a mere clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I sent up to the desk heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by adding the following: "All the public domain now undisposed of, or not applied for under applications now pending, shall be turned over to the respective States wherein the same are situated."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been quite indifferent about this battle as it has raged around the question of the cost of these receiverships, being a good deal like the sulking Henry the Sixth, who retired upon his mound living upon the frugal curds of his herd and watching the mother sheep to suckle the lamb and with equanimity witness his queen and her advisers upon the opposite mound carry on the battle, because from my point of view it is a matter of indifference to the country if the proper legislation is enacted. Again, because I realize the fact that neither one of these factions know exactly what they are contending for. If I had my memorandum here that I had before the public-land States' convention that met in Denver a year ago, where my friend MONDELL was the chairman, I could demonstrate to you that whatever amount you expend here toward the disposition of the public domain, whether it be by way of receivers or by way of extra clerks, is so much money thrown away, because the United States, every day that it maintains these establishments, is losing money. It is topheavy now, and therefore I am against both the retention of the receivers and the employment of clerks in their places.

If you will disabuse your minds once of the idea that the great West is going to produce revenue enough to run this Government, and that you can fix your tariff rates just as you please, and that it does not make any difference, because the West is going to produce enough revenue anyway, if you will disabuse your minds of that idea, then we can discuss these questions intellectually. Here is the concrete fact. It can be demonstrated that the Government is running behind every day that it maintains these offices to dispose of the public lands. The public land should be turned over to the States, just as it was to a majority of the States in the earlier settlement and building up of the great Commonwealths of this country. Those States had the benefit of the public domain, and though it might be a burden to us for a while, at the same time it would relieve the Government of this vast expense of carrying on these offices and receiving not a dollar of revenue in return.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman does not mean to say that the original 13 States ever got any land from the Government?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. They not only got their land, but they gave away all the balance of the great public domain.

Mr. BARTLETT. Virginia and Georgia gave their land to the Government instead of getting anything from the Government.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. They did not give to the Government what they themselves retained. They did give away all the balance of the country—all that was west of them.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Government never had any public land in Georgia or Virginia.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It had no public land because it was then all private land, but when the public-land service came in you had already taken your part, and now you ask to participate in what is remaining in the western country.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have not taken our part from the Government, because the Government never had any part of the land in Georgia or Virginia.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. To whom did it belong? It belonged to somebody.

Mr. BARTLETT. It belonged to the people of those States.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And the purpose of my amendment is to give to the States the public lands within their borders. And then you should disabuse your minds of the idea that you are going to run this Government upon the great unrevealed resources of the West. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is a well-known fact that the registers and receivers of the United States land offices are now receiving a very modest compensation, considering the character of the men who are required to fill those places, the ability that they must have, and the part that they must have played in the upbuilding of the communities before they are permitted to receive appointments of this kind. The maximum compensation is only $3,000 each, and it has been provided that if the business of the office does not keep up, so as to justify that amount of compensation, it shall be cut down accordingly; and for that reason we find here this afternoon that many registers and receivers are receiving less than the maximum, and some are receiving only $500. Now, the practical working out of this matter is this: When the homesteader from the South or East goes to Oregon, Washington, California, or any of the other public-land States, the first thing he does when he gets off the train with his three or four children and the old boxes and baskets that they have carried along with them to eat from during their long and arduous trip, what is the first thing that the homesteader does? Remember, gentlemen, that on their journey across the country they do not eat in the dining car as you and I do. They travel in the tourist cars, and they eat out of a box, and they carry their food with them from their homes in the East. When they arrive at their destination the first thing they do is to go to the office of the register and receiver of the United States land office and ask them for advice as to where the best place is to find a homestead within the land district. Then when they are ready to prove up they come back to those officers who are supposed to be acquainted with local conditions and who have probably been over the land. They make their final proofs, and those two officials pass upon the sufficiency of their acts of residence, improvement, and cultivation.

It is said that we will save $101,000 a year by substituting for the local receivers special agents designated from Washington to go out and sit in their places. If as a result of that change you cancel the homesteads of 1,000 men every year whose homesteads would not otherwise have been canceled, and damage those men and their families $1,000 a piece, the $100,000 saved on the one end will be lost in cash by certain of your fellow citizens upon the other, and in addition the loss in patriotism and love of country will amount to as many millions of dollars. In fact, it can not be measured by any money standard. I say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that you must give to every part of the United States home rule. You must give justice and a square deal to every quarter of this Republic if it is to go on through the centuries as it has for 136 years. We must not consider the saving of a few dollars. We must not be picayunish when it comes to dealing with those who go upon the public domain.

I have had experience along this line, and that is why I take five minutes to address you on the subject. I know that when I was in the General Land Office seven years ago, preparing to be sent to Oregon as a special agent, that I heard from the lips of the bureaucrats that all registers and receivers ought to be appointed from the General Land Office, that these special agents ought to be appointed, and that the time would soon come when they would be. That is why they have slipped in the sundry civil bill a provision to abolish the receivers and put in these special agents, because they are the men that will be designated. You will not save anything.

Mr. PAGE. What does the gentleman mean by "slipped in?"

Mr. LAFFERTY. Because the Commissioner of the General Land Office before the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. PAGE. It was not slipped in; it was put in.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The commissioner succeeded by gum-shoe methods in having this put on when the Members of the House knew nothing about it until it was reported and on the calendar.

Mr. PAGE. Did the gentleman from Oregon address the committee or make any request of the Appropriations Committee to be heard?

Mr. LAFFERTY. I would have had I known that there was a proposition of this kind.

Mr. PAGE. This item has been proposed time and time again, and the gentleman ought to have expected it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. But it has been so uniformly turned down that I did not think that they could fool the Committee on Appropriations at this late date. [Laughter and applause.] Now, it is said that it will save $10,000 a year. When the chief clerk is appointed at Washington and sent to Oregon or the State of Washington he is sent in grand style, in a Pullman car. I know many that travel in a stateroom and have a typewriting machine along with them and a lot of records. All that expense has to be paid. The transportation, the expense of the dining car, and all that sort of thing, has to be paid, and by the time you send your chief clerk to Alaska his expenses will be over $1,000. Then he may be transferred to some other land office at the end of the year and that expense of transfer gone over again. Now, you will not save very much in cash.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the argument in support of this provision in the bill is solely a question of economy. After hearing the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair said he was in doubt as to whether or not there was any saving. In fact, I am convinced that it will increase the expenditures of the Government. The gentleman from Wyoming based his calculation on the fact that the business of the Land Office would remain as it was last year, but in the event that the public lands should not be disposed of at the ratio that they were last year or the year before, the expenditures of the department for receivers and registers would decrease. In many instances their salaries would only be $500, so that in the event that there is a decrease, which is very likely to occur, then this provision will result in an increased expenditure instead of a decrease.

But the question of expenditure is not the one which we ought to chiefly take into consideration. I have lived in the West all of my life and am familiar with the conditions of a new country. I know what functions the register and receiver of the land office perform. I know that they have contributed very largely to the upbuilding of the West. They are, as has been stated, men of responsibility, men recommended by Senators and Congressmen, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and under heavy bonds. They are men usually not only experts in business, but in most cases men learned in the law, and especially in land law. They are able to give advice to intending settlers that desire to take up land. They stand between the settler and the special agents or detectives that are sent out by the Government to see if the settler has complied with the law.

Now, if you turn all these functions over to the detectives, to these special clerks, you simply have the ambition of the detective to make out cases against the settler with no impartial man to stand between him and the Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why is it that the register in the land office could not perform that particular service?

Mr. STEENERSON. The register does perform it a part of the time, but it needs two.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not understand that it needs two men to give advice.

Mr. STEENERSON. But somebody has got to sit in the office and do the office work. They have to decide cases and read evidence. I have tried cases in the land office for weeks and never saw but one of them; the other was attending to the settlers at the window who wanted to know if there were new lands opened up in another township. He was attending to that while we were trying the case before the receiver who was the judge to pass on the evidence and rule on the objections. They are constantly employed and render high and valuable services.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say that the Commissioner of the Land Office stated that by reason of this dual activity shown by the register and receiver together, it frequently created confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is a mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, those who have spoken have already brought out in the brief time at their disposal the reasons why it is inadvisable to abolish the office of receiver in our public-land offices. There is one observation further, however, that I would make. If I had it in my power I would establish land courts throughout all the public-land States. I would have the land problems as they concern the rights of settlers and the application of the law applied in those courts. However, that is not possible at this time, but the retention of the office of receiver makes it possible for a nearer approach to the condition that I suggest than if the office shall be abolished.

To-day the register and receiver preside over land contests between individuals or between the Government and the individual. The register and receiver consider the evidence submitted and apply the law to the evidence. They join in rendering the decisions, and I say that the weaknesses of our land laws and of their application arise largely through the administration of the laws by those who are not in such close association with local conditions as are the register and receiver of the public-land offices.

It is well that we retain the office of receiver, so that an officer in addition to the register may, in the first instance, hear the evidence, have opportunity to see the witnesses, and apply the law in determining the case.

Of course, under our present system appeal lies to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and from him to the Secretary. These officers are located in Washington. Only in rare instances can they see or hear testify the applicant for public land, and I submit that they should be guided by the judgment in large part of responsible officials in the local land offices scattered throughout the United States. I submit that the judgment of two officials in the first hearing and trial of every case is better than the judgment of one alone. It is suggested that possibly the Government would save a few dollars by following out the policy proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. That the Government would save by this policy is emphatically denied by others. At any rate, if the Government should save it would be at the expense of the applicant for public land, and it would mean the determination of his interests in larger degree than at present upon ex parte evidence. I am opposed to the proposition advanced by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of the homestead sections of the United States, and I think in the interests of economy of administration also, I protest against the proposed legislation in the pending bill. I think it is a mistake. I do not think that any economy will be realized by the change contemplated by the legislation that is attempted to be passed by the provision. Therefore, for that reason alone, I should be in favor of the amendment.

Besides this, Mr. Chairman, I think it ill advised after the long-established system of the administration of the homestead law to now interrupt it, to overthrow it and inaugurate a new and untried plan.

Now, it is true that each of these officers exercises judicial as well as administrative and ministerial functions, but they are both required; there is a necessity for each exercising these same judicial functions. As instanced by the gentleman from Minnesota, it is frequently the case that one is to hear contests and will be employed continuously for a week hearing one contest when the other officer must at the same time pass in a judicial way upon filings which are offered.

I am opposed to the legislation because it is against our republican institutions. It is against local autonomy in the administration of our laws. The receiver, as well as the register, is chosen from the people in the States, in the land-office district usually where he officiates. He understands the homestead law. He has lived in the homesteading atmosphere and knows how to apply the law. I think if any mistake has been made in the selection of special agents to go out and inspect how entrymen are complying with the laws, whether they are complying with it, it is due to the fact that they have been chosen from sections of our country where they have not been afforded an opportunity to learn in a practical way anything about homesteading and what might resonably be expected of a homesteader in compliance with the homestead laws. Mr. Chairman, who is asking for this legislation?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman has had wide experience in public-land matters. Does he not think there is a tinge of duplication in the register and the receivership? And is it not true that either the register or the receiver in the trial of land-office cases invariably sits alone to hear the case?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Oh, no. In hearing a contest, Mr. Chairman, there is so much work to do that one rarely sits alone. They may sit alone, but they will both review the testimony when it is written out.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And join in the decision.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have had some experience before the Land Office myself. I practiced for six or eight years in the land office in my own town.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. But, Mr. Chairman, when my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], asked me to yield I was propounding the question, Who is asking for this legislation? I am sure our constituents have not asked for it. I am sure they do not wish it. I have great respect for the views of the experienced and very capable officials of the Department of the Interior about these administrative matters, but my belief is that the people in homesteading sections are in general very much attached to the present organization of district land offices, and that they would regard it as a deprivation to their important interests—the interests of their homes, to which they are seeking to perfect title—that the change in contemplation be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not leave any time for those who are opposed to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, has the time been exhausted in favor of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. During the pendency of the discussion agreeing upon 40 minutes being granted to one side and 10 minutes to the other 4 minutes were consumed. When it was finally agreed that debate cease at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes, four minutes of that time had already been consumed, so that if those opposed to the amendment consume the time allotted to them there will be only six minutes remaining to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I desire only to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve five minutes on this side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman can not, because it is all gone.

Mr. MONDELL. I think we have five minutes remaining, as I understand it, at the close of the time of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this provision is to improve the efficiency of the land office and at the same time effect a very considerable economy. This recommendation has been made now for three different years by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and it has been recommended and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. In the estimates for the fiscal year 1912 there is found this note accompanying the estimates for the salaries of registers and receivers:

> There is no need for two officers of coordinate rank and authority in a United States land office, and it was not contemplated when the office of receiver of public moneys was created that that position should be anything more than that of a fiscal officer. All of the functions strictly pertaining to the office of receiver could be better performed by a bonded cashier or financial clerk under the supervision of one officer as the administrative head of a United States land office. The performance of judicial and quasi judicial functions by receivers has resulted in the unsatisfactory administration of many of the land offices. The joint exercise of judicial duties by both the register and receiver results in many cases in conflicting decisions by them, and the fact that all of the decisions of local land officers are subject to review on appeal by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior would safeguard all the rights of any parties interested. Quite often there is a lack of harmony, amounting to friction, between the register and receiver, which has resulted in a demoralization of the office in which such condition obtains. The existence of a dual responsibility as to the conduct of an office between the register and receiver tends to prejudice of the conduct of the office, inasmuch as in cases of irregularities or errors in the running of the office each officer attempts to relieve himself of the responsibility therefor and shift the same to the other officer. In addition to this it is a fact, long patent to the General Land Office, that approximately only 75 per cent of receivers personally perform the duties of their office, the remainder leaving the work thereof to a subordinate, thus entailing an unnecessary expense in the conduct of their offices. Further, on account of the limited tenure in office, the receiver does not familiarize himself as fully as he should with the laws and regulations pertaining to his work, with the result that in a great many cases the accounts of receivers of public moneys are so inefficiently handled that the result is an immense burden upon the General Land Office and upon the field service in attempting to correct the numerous errors made. It frequently happens that the changes in personnel of receivers causes much confusion in their accounts for a considerable period until a new officer is acquainted to a certain extent with the duties of his office.

Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill is to eliminate useless political officers and to substitute in their place men who are selected with regard to their qualifications for the work and to give them a tenure of office that will promote the efficiency of the administration of the public service.

In a majority of the land-office States it is a notorious fact that 75 per cent of the officials whose places are to be abolished by this provision do not personally perform the duties of their offices, but turn it over to a subordinate. In the place of such a condition it is proposed to have appointed officials selected in accordance with the civil-service laws to perform those duties. Now, some gentlemen have been complaining that an attempt was made at one period during this session to strike down the civil service of the country. Here is an attempt, based upon the recommendation of responsible officials, to place in charge of the administration of these offices competent, efficient men, who will be compelled to discharge the duties of the office and not devolve them upon subordinates, which adds to the expense of the offices. This provision will relieve the office at Washington from considerable expense and trouble, as well as the ordinary field force, and greatly advance the interest of those seeking to secure their patents through these local offices. The gentleman from Oregon, and some others, seem to imagine that the designation of chief clerk necessarily means the appointment or sending out from Washington of some officials. The purpose is to give to the clerk in the local office that title so as to differentiate them from the other clerks there. I believe the result will tend very greatly to an efficient administration of these offices, and I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 4.20 having arrived, all debate upon this subject is at an end.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado offered an amendment, and I insist upon the point of order on the amendment. It proposes to turn over to the several States the unappropriated public lands in the various States.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were—ayes 28, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to go to page 93, lines 8 and 9. The gentleman from Wyoming offered an amendment to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 93, strike out lines 7, 8, and 9, and insert "salaries and commissions, registers and receivers; for salaries and commissions of registers and receivers of district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, $560,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to impose on the patience of the House for a further discussion of this matter, but I want to say one word more. The Democratic Party has always claimed to be in favor of home rule—local self-government. I believe that the party has to a certain extent lived up to that declaration of their principles. But here is a case where they are proposing to radically depart from that policy and substitute in cases in which the people of the country are greatly interested, in cases involving the homes of settlers, for the judgment of local men, the judgment of substantial citizens familiar with conditions and in proper sympathy with the aims and aspirations and ambitions of the home builder, to substitute for the judgment of that class of men in cases that involve law and fact and equity, the judgment of a clerk, admitted to Government service through a civil-service examination, sent from the ends of the country into a region they may know nothing of, to pass upon questions that he can not in the nature of things be familiar with; to pass in judgment upon the property of home builders, upon the rights of men who are seeking to acquire the homes that Congress has provided for them on the public domain. I can not understand how that side of the House can consistently vote for such a proposition.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] very unfairly, I believe, injects into this case a proposition that is not involved. He asserts baldly and boldly that the Democratic Party insists on thrusting upon a local community officers who are not acquainted with the situation and who are not capable of understanding those conditions. The gentleman asserts that this paragraph and this amendment involves that practice. I do not so understand it. Registers and receivers of public land offices are to-day appointed by the President of the United States. Under this language they will still be appointed in Washington through the Interior Department, and I assert from my experience and personal contact with it that the Interior Department has, in fact, been appointing the registers and receivers all the time so far as the real practical side of doing that is concerned. The President of the United States acts upon their suggestion and acts upon their advice. He must of necessity do it, so there is as much bureaucracy in one method as the other. Now, one word——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. In just one moment. Now, as to the proposition that the Democratic Party is going to eternal and everlasting ruin because we voted to abolish receivers of land offices, I live in the West, and I have had some personal contact with public land matters. I have been a homesteader myself within the last 10 years, and acquired title to a tract which I still have. I had appeared before public land offices as a lawyer in my town five or six years before I came here, and I assert the rule and practice to be that either the register or receiver actually sits and tries the case while the other one does clerical duty, if anything at all. There is no question that in the last 10 years there has been no necessity whatever for keeping two coordinate officers to do one and the same thing. It has resulted invariably in two men standing side by side, each one with equal powers, and there arises invariably friction and trouble between them. One man ought to be the king bee of the land office; he ought to be a strong, fearless lawyer; and the amendment of this committee does nothing more than to say that one man will be supreme and the other shall act in conjunction with and under him, as it ought to be.

Mr. MONDELL. It does substitute civil clerks for local officials, does it not?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, unless the question of civil service is only a bubble you can not well attack that. If the gentleman wishes to assail the civil service, it is up to him to do it. If he wants to assail the civil service and say it is better to have political appointments rather than the merit system, I yield to him a monopoly of that thought, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. The Hall of the House echoed with the eloquent tones of the gentleman from Oklahoma the other day in denunciation of bureau clerks and civil-service clerks in his State. Has the gentleman entirely forgotten that?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman has wrongly stated that. My voice echoed here, if it echoed at all, at too much supervision and too many clerks, and it is echoing in the same note to-day. My position is fully consistent. It is a parallel position. I shall assume it in the future.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I regret I can not. I must proceed a moment further. I refuse to let gentlemen on that side of the aisle get up here and assail unfairly an amendment proposed by this side.

Here is the situation: Here is the case of the homesteader with a contest. He tries his case first between two coordinate officers, standing side by side, equal in power and in practice. One man tries the case while the other performs clerical services only. Only one actually tries the case. I have tried numbers of them myself as an attorney. What next? They send it here to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He again tries it. What next? They send it across the street to the Interior Department, and the Secretary of the Interior again tries it. It is the circuitous character of the whole performance that is a burden to the homesteader, and I insist that the functions in this regard of either the General Land Office or the Interior Department ought to be eliminated from the equation.

I want to say with respect to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he has not gone far enough. He ought to say that after a case is tried in the local office before the register the function of the General Land Office or the Interior Department in connection with one or the other ought to be eliminated altogether. Both of them in this regard have no mission to fulfill and no purpose to execute.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. What does the gentleman say about the proposition of doing away with all these offices and all these expenses in behalf of my amendment to the amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's amendment might seem pretty revolutionary at first blush, but there are things that are worse than that. In fact, it would not surprise me if we all come to it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Oklahoma has told us of his large experience in public-land matters and his long practice before the department.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will not be facetious about that. I have rendered the service I have referred to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am not facetious about it. The gentleman also stated that he himself had acquired a homestead under the public-land laws.

Mr. FERRIS. I did.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now if some little land inspector had reported against the gentleman's entry, as being fraudulent, then a hearing would have been had?

Mr. FERRIS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And a trial had?

Mr. FERRIS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Would the gentleman have cared to have his rights determined by a $1,200 or a $1,500 department clerk in the land office?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I did not say that, but I believe he would be as competent as most of them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman believe that he would be as competent as the register?

Mr. FERRIS. He would not pass upon it. The register would do that. The clerk would perform clerical duties and not judicial duties, as it should be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, including not exceeding $25,000 for clerical services in bringing up and making current the work of the General Land Office, instead of $250,000 made available for that purpose for the fiscal year 1912, $500,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, except when agents are employed in the District of Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $6 per day each, in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this paragraph, on line 12, by striking out "$500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 96, line 12, by striking out "$500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] is recognized.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, the paragraph just read provides for half a million dollars for the coming fiscal year for special agents of the General Land Office to go into the 10 public-land States of this Union and prevent depredations upon the timber and prevent the fraudulent entry of the public domain.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Are these land agents appointed through the civil service?

Mr. LAFFERTY. No; they are not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I should say they have recently been covered into the civil service. But they are temporary employees, depending for their existence upon the life of this appropriation. They live from one appropriation to another and no longer, and whenever the appropriation is exhausted by their expenditures and perambulations over the country they are furloughed until Congress makes another appropriation.

Now, I want to call attention to the history of the rise and progress of the special agent. We have plenty of machinery in this country for preventing frauds and for enforcing the laws in the ordinary course of human events without sending these gentlemen upon these trips of espionage into the Western States of this Union. You have in every Western State your United States district attorneys, your Federal courts, your Federal grand juries, and the registers and receivers, and United States commissioners in every county and precinct, and it is the duty of all these Federal officials to report derelictions in regard to the public-land laws to the Federal grand jury. From the time of the beginning of the disposition of the public lands at the close of the eighteenth century down to the close of the year 1878 no such thing as a special agent of the General Land Office was ever heard of. In the year 1878 the Commissioner of the General Land Office called the attention of Congress to the fact that there had been a number of depredations committed upon the public timber lands of the West, and urged that he needed to employ temporarily a few special agents at $100 a month and $3 a day for expenses to assist the Federal district attorneys in gathering testimony and in the trial of those cases.

There is where this system first sprang up. Congress made an appropriation of $12,500 for that purpose. That appropriation, in the same language, has been carried in the sundry civil bill from 1878 to the present day. It has grown year by year from $12,500 in 1878 to $1,000,000 three years ago. It had never gotten up to more than $125,000 until five years ago or six years ago, when it was raised to $250,000. Afterwards it was raised to half a million dollars, and it reached its flood tide three years ago, a million dollars for special agents.

Since that original appropriation was made all of the valuable timberlands have been placed in the forest reserves, and there is no longer any need for any special agent at all in any public-land State of this Union. Yet you propose here in this bill to continue the system, with half a million dollars for the next year. My amendment is to cut it down reasonably to $100,000, and I will say that you will never do a better day's work during any session of this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union than that which you will do by passing this amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon will not prevail. I am somewhat familiar with the history of the appropriation contained in this item. I recall very well that in a period of hysteria the appropriation for this purpose was increased very much over what, in the opinion of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, it should be. I recall that within a few days the President of the United States has pardoned a man convicted under the operation of those employed under this or a similar appropriation, because of improprieties in the conduct of the prosecution, and the charge is made that a certain force was organized so as to result in the conviction of men, regardless of the merits.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman uses the word "improprieties." Does not the gentleman think that is a rather mild word in the connection in which he used it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is acquainted with the facts; I think I should be permitted to characterize it in my own way. If the gentleman thinks it is not a sufficient characterization, he is at perfect liberty to use such language as he thinks to be properly descriptive.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman ought to characterize it properly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in presenting his estimates for the next year, pointed out that certain things had been accomplished. The great increase in this appropriation originally was for the purpose of enabling the office to make this work current. It is now contended that the volume of the work in the office is so great that this appropriation is needed for that purpose. Since the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, the results attained under this appropriation are as follows: Trespass settlements, $100,868.35 for cutting timber on public lands; recoveries through criminal and civil suits, $110,575.91; area restored to public domain through cancellation, result of special agents' reports, 498,240 acres; area restored through abatement of unlawful inclosure, 755,341 acres; area restored through suits to cancel patents through proceedings by the Department of Justice, 25,729.67 acres. In 1909–10, when the appropriation was $1,000,000, the expenditure was $995,697.26. The trespass settlements were $198,971.17; recoveries through criminal and civil suits, $150,262.84; area restored to public domain through cancellation, result of special agents' reports, 746,400 acres; area restored through abatement of unlawful inclosures, 1,764,073.82 acres; area restored through suits to cancel patents through proceedings by the Department of Justice, 12,065.61 acres.

For 1910–11 the appropriation was $750,000; the expenditure was $714,675.60. The trespass settlements were $100,099.70; recoveries through criminal and civil suits, $129,093.98; area restored to public domain through cancellation, result of special agents' reports, 703,680 acres; area restored through abatement of unlawful inclosures, 1,475,381 acres; area restored through suits to cancel patents, proceedings brought in the courts, 21,340.25 acres.

Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman to say, in response to a statement made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY], that these places under the $500,000 appropriation were controlled by the civil service. I notice in the public press the statement that the Burns Agency or some other detective agency ferreted out a lot of frauds, and that the President pardoned one of the convicted men on the ground that there had been the procurement of false testimony, or the influencing of a jury, or something of that kind. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York whether this was done under the civil service or not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Part of this fund was available for the employment of persons regardless of the civil service.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the gentleman from New York, his position is that only a part of this fund is used for the purpose of employing civil-service people, and that the other part of it is used by the W. J. Burns Detective Agency for the purpose of sending people to the penitentiary whom the President is compelled to pardon for the reason that they have been falsely imprisoned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not made any such statement, and it would require a very remarkable stretch of the imagination to place any such construction on what I said. I said part of the appropriation originally could be used in the employment of persons regardless of the civil-service regulations. I may be in error, but my information is that this money is now used for employing persons who enter the employment of the Government through the civil service. I referred to the statement, as a matter of common notoriety in the press, that Mr. Burns and his assistants had been active in ways to procure the conviction of persons regardless of the merits of the case. There has been room for criticism on both sides, criticism of those who were attempting to obtain the public domain in violation of the law, and criticism of those who in an effort to show efficient administration of the service have permitted themselves to be misled in a way that has resulted in the conviction of at least one person whom the President was convinced had been improperly convicted, and whom he pardoned within a few days.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the bill provides "$25,000 for clerical services in bringing up and making current the work of the General Land Office, instead of $250,000 made available for that purpose for the fiscal year 1912." I take it that the $25,000 is not instead of the $250,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This money was given for the purpose of enabling the department to employ persons in the field.

Mr. MANN. That is not the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am coming to what the gentleman wants. The original appropriation was $250,000, to be available for bringing the work up current. A construction was placed on it that the entire sum was available for clerical service in the department in Washington. There have been picked up in the legislative bill $29,000 for clerks put on permanently.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from New York did not catch my question. The bill says $25,000 for clerical services instead of $250,000 made available for that purpose for the fiscal year 1912. The gentleman does not intend to have the $25,000 applied to the current year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it was placed there to emphasize the situation.

Mr. MANN. But that is not what it says. Having emphasized the situation, what the gentleman means to do is to make available only $25,000. I do not know how they construe it, but you appropriate $25,000 there instead of $250,000 now available and you do not say $25,000 for the next year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the bill itself carries appropriations for the next fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. I think that ought to be stricken out.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon by making it $250,000.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I think there are three, and perhaps many more well-defined reasons why this ought to be cut down. The Sixtieth Congress passed a law known as the withdrawal bill, which gave the President full power to withdraw all kinds of timberland, all kinds of water-power sites, all kinds of lands peculiarly valuable for mineral or any purpose. Through the instrumentality of the Forestry Division and other agitation on the subject it is my belief that they have worked the thing overtime and that they have withdrawn more land than should be withdrawn.

Here we have a great raft of agents running across the country who usually know less about the situation than they ought to to carry on that class of work.

The incompetence is not the sole reason why it should be reduced. It is undeniably true that they are unnecessary. First, for the reason that the President has withdrawn the lands that are timber in character which are now in the forest reserve. He has withdrawn every sort of mineral land that is of any value for mineral purposes, leaving only lands agricultural in character, most of which are arid lands now subject to entry. The policy has always been to get into the hands of the actual settler at the earliest possible moment agricultural lands. The more circuitous you make it the less is accomplished for the homesteader or the country.

The second reason why it ought to be cut down is that it is the law to-day that if the homesteader does not comply with the law every person living in that community who knows the facts has the right to file his contest affidavit against the entryman, try and establish his case, cancel the entry, and get the land himself. Somebody may say that he would not contest his neighbor, but it does not work that way. There is a sufficient reward or incentive to make every man and every neighbor a keeper of the land and a protector of the land as well, and he by far affords superior protection to the public domain than the man who travels in the Pullman palace car across the continent trying to find something out that does not exist. Smelling around, causing trouble to the homesteaders, expense to the Government, and bringing criticism on the Government.

Now, the three reasons, as I have said, are that the timber land is in the forest reserve, the fact that the land of a mineral character has been withdrawn by the President under the bill passed by the Sixtieth Congress, and the further reason, the fact that every citizen can contest his neighbor if he does not comply with the law. With these three restraints, with these three protections afforded him, there is no use sending from one end of the country to another a lot of useless propaganda-smelling agents that have a retarding effect instead of a wholesome effect.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish the House to understand that the Government ought not to have any agent who can visit the property and gather the facts that must be gathered by somebody?

Mr. FERRIS. In every community they have the full quota of officers in the land office. This and the restraints referred to, particularly the right to contest, is fully sufficient.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman says that the whole thing ought to be cut out next year.

Mr. FERRIS. The land office has a register and receiver and a land office force that has the matter in charge, and that is all that is necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. But those men can not go out on the ground.

Mr. FERRIS. They do not have to go out, the contest is brought before them, and they do just what a court would do and decide it. The contestant who is seeking to acquire the land will marshal the facts before the register.

Mr. MADDEN. But the Government of the United States ought to have some agent from whom the Government can get information upon which to base some action as to whether the laws have been complied with or not.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, this amendment provides $250,000 for that purpose. That is plenty and probably too much.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman says that they ought to have no appropriation after this year.

Mr. FERRIS. I did say that, and I believe it. I think next year we ought to eliminate it altogether. Let this be notice to them.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman advocates doing away with every agent of the Government to give the facts to the Government upon which the Government may base its action.

Mr. FERRIS. That only applies to the smelling field agents. I say that every one of the field agents that go around over the country should be done away with. The local force of the bureau and the neighbors to make the contests is everything that is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care for it, unless the gentleman desires to ask me a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated this proposition, that there was no need for any other protection than the opportunity which might be afforded by the contest which a settler's neighbor might file, did he not?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, that was sufficient for 100 years, and I think, now that the land is practically all taken up, it is still sufficient.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I asked the gentleman from New York with reference to information concerning public reports, reports in the newspapers, with reference to the conviction of a gentleman under this provision of law respecting frauds in the public lands, the President being compelled, after thorough investigation, to pardon him because of a miscarriage of justice. I also asked him with reference to the civil service applying to this appropriation, and I understood him to tell the gentleman from Oregon that it did apply, but he qualified that later on by saying that it applied to only a part of it. I would like the gentleman from Oklahoma to tell the committee how the civil service can apply to a part of this appropriation and not apply to all. In addition to that, I want to know if the gentleman knows what is the largest salary paid to any agent or detective agency that undertakes to enforce the law under this provision?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can give the gentleman the best evidence there is upon that, and I therefore do not care to attempt to give anything on the subject. I do not have the hearings before me. Perhaps the gentleman from New York, who is in charge of the bill, can afford the gentleman the information.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman tell the committee how many cases were investigated in the last fiscal year?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the facts before me.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Can the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York, tell the committee how many cases were investigated last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commissioner of the General Land Office said:

> Last October, for instance, I remember seeing that we had 35,000 cases, and while we have 22,000, we might six months from now have 30,000. It depends very largely on the work that may be presented.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is it not true that about 25,000 cases were investigated?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I quote from the Commissioner of the General Land Office:

> Mr. DENNETT. Here is a little summary of the cases reported on by months: December, 1910, 30,000 odd; January, 1911, 35,000; February, 36,000; March, 39,000; April, 37,000; May, 39,000; June, 42,000; July, 42,000; August, 40,000; September, 40,000; October, 39,000; and November, 35,000. These figures are all odd. That is for 1911. Just at present we have 22,000 cases, in round numbers.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is pending cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the time of the hearings he said he had 22,000 cases, in round numbers.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is it not a fact that they investigated something like 25,000 cases and clear listed about 16,000 of those?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I think that is about right.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Therefore, the extent of the money we appropriate in investigating 16,000 cases that they clear listed because there was no grounds for it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much gratified during this session of Congress at the efforts of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to reduce expenditures, and I am a little bit surprised in this instance, when there is a proposition to reduce a lump-sum appropriation of $500,000 to $250,000, that the gentleman from New York should oppose it, especially when the gentleman from New York is unable to give any good reason why this appropriation should not be reduced to $250,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the very greatest pressure was exerted upon the committee to give $650,000, the same amount as the current year; and after looking very thoroughly into the matter, knowing the agitation that there has been about the matter, realizing how members of the Committee on Appropriations have been denounced in the uplift magazines for their attempt to hold this appropriation down, and the way the House has invariably run over them, the Committee on Appropriations did not feel justified in flying in the face of the inevitable, and we gave what we believed under the showing made was required.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to know that the gentleman has made this appropriation against his own judgment and at the behest of the uplift magazines.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I did not say that.

Mr. GARNER. I realize, if the gentleman from New York states a fact, that he would be perfectly willing and delighted if the committee should agree with him and his Committee on Appropriations that this appropriation should be cut from $500,000 to $250,000, and I hope that the Committee of the Whole will agree with the gentleman from New York and cut the appropriation from $500,000 to $250,000.

Mr. Chairman, it has developed here in the discussion of this amendment that there is no civil service applying to this appropriation, and I want to say in this connection that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has my highest respect. I believe he is one of the best employees in the service of the Government, from what I have been led to understand concerning his office, but I do contend that when you make a lump appropriation of $500,000, without any limit of salary, without any condition as to who is to be employed, that the Committee on Appropriations ought to be able to tell the committee how much of this appropriation has been expended for the purpose of employing private detectives, what the rate of salary has been, what the active members have done, and what the result of their work is. I submit to the committee that the gentleman from New York or any member of his committee has been unable, so far, to point out to the committee the details of the expenditure of the $500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he is talking about information about a number of matters that nobody intimated was desired and which probably it might be possible to furnish if anybody suggested he desired it. The gentleman asked one question about the civil service and it was answered. He should not complain now that information about other matters was not volunteered when nobody had requested it.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from New York how much of this appropriation is utilized for the purpose of employing men under civil-service rules?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My information is that all of this appropriation is utilized for that purpose. The gentleman is confusing the expenditures made at another time and under different circumstances, not with the conditions that exist at present.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I can answer the question the gentleman from Texas propounds to the gentleman from New York, of which he is so very oblivious. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that in these investigations and criminal prosecutions concerning these land entries that it has cost the Government $10 where it has covered into the Treasury of the United States $1, and the records will show it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt that the statement of the gentleman from Colorado is correct. I thought the strongest argument with reference to the protection of the public domain that could possibly be made, from my experience with public lands in Texas, was made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]; that is to say, that the neighbors of a homesteader have the right to contest his location, to contest his right to that ground by virtue of his continued citizenship on the land, and it always has occurred to me that in each instance there is some one who is willing to take his place because he has not complied with the law.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Not necessarily that, I understand the contestor has the right; it is not the neighbors who are going to investigate that question, but it is the man who comes along and wants the land, and there is a contest which goes up fairly before the register and receiver.

Mr. GARNER. But, Mr. Chairman, usually you find some neighbor who is willing to take the contest for this land; that is to say, he is willing to contest, and, as has been suggested by my friend from Oklahoma, there is a reward for some one who detects a fraud and there is some one competing for that reward.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The so-called Cunningham claims were investigated and the spoliation of the public domain in Alaska was prevented under this appropriation. I do not know of any neighbors up in Alaska or anybody else in Alaska——

Mr. GARNER. Oh, that was a mineral location and coal lands.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, that is all out of this appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. While I am not familiar with reference to——

Mr. FERRIS. And it was withdrawn.

Mr. GARNER. It was withdrawn.

Mr. FERRIS. Withdrawn as a result of this investigation.

Mr. GARNER. I do know that it has developed here that the gentleman from New York or any member of this committee, not only of the Committee on Appropriations, but any Member of this House, has been unable to give the committee any information as to how much has been expended out of this to any one person, detective, or what the salary was. It is simply a lump appropriation on which there is no limit. You can employ a man at $10,000 a year or $20,000, and I do not like that kind of an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this item in the bill is for the purpose of protecting the public lands from unlawful and fraudulent entry or appropriation. We all know that the public domain has been robbed right and left in the past, that efforts will continue to be made in the future to rob the public domain. As long as human nature is as it is and the public domain is of value men will endeavor to acquire it without complying with the provisions of the law. They have endeavored to rob the coal lands, they have endeavored to rob the timberlands, they are endeavoring now to obtain possession of the phosphate lands and other valuable lands and the only protection the Government has is the investigations made under the provisions of this appropriation. It is somewhat surprising to me that gentlemen representing public-domain States claim on the one hand that all entries are made in good faith and are valid and on the other hand are objecting to the investigations. Gentlemen say all the timberlands are covered in the forest reserves. They know that is not the case. They say that all the mineral lands are covered. They know that in many cases that requires an investigation to determine the fact. We withdrew phosphate lands or gave the President the authority a few years ago and many claims are pending made before the withdrawal. The phosphate lands are of great value. Men claim that they are agricultural lands on the one side and it is for the Government to determine through its investigators whether the lands are agricultural or whether they are valuable for phosphate; whether we will turn over to private individuals phosphate veins of immense value or whether they will be reserved for the common good. We know if it had not been for the investigations under this appropriation that the Cunningham coal claims would probably have been allowed, of more value to the Government than this appropriation would be for many years. Not only that, when those claims came up in many cases the complaint was made a few years ago that men could not obtain patent to their lands because they were held up pending investigation. They are still being held up pending investigation. If no investigation is made do gentlemen think the Land Office will assume that all of those claims are valid when there is a question, when there ought to be a question, and when there ought to be an investigation?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question? The gentleman will not ignore the fact that there must be a publication made always when one seeks to enter a piece of the public domain.

Mr. MANN. I do not ignore that fact, but what has the fact got to do with the question? The gentleman knows that has been the law for many years, and the gentleman knows that in many of these States men have acquired title to vast areas of land when they were not entitled to any of the land.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Then the gentleman must impeach the officers who must give the title to this land.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not impeach the officers. I impeach the men who made the claim.

Mr. GARNER. They ought to fire those fellows who saved the Cunningham claims.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that is a very unfair statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to discuss this item in the bill. I have discussed it at considerable length at other times, and I have managed to get myself very much disliked in certain quarters because of the criticisms I have made of the manner in which this fund was expended; and I should have said nothing on this occasion, because of the fact that the committee has reduced the appropriation considerably, if it had not been for the remarks made by certain gentlemen during the debate. While I doubt the propriety under existing conditions of reducing the item to the amount proposed by the amendment, because it would be difficult to adjust the force to the sudden reduction, still I am thoroughly in sympathy with the gentlemen who favor the reduction.

The gentleman from Illinois suggests that we of the West are afraid of investigations. We are not. We never have been afraid of any fair investigation. But there have been things developed within the last few days with regard to men convicted of offenses against the public-land laws which ought to bring the blush of shame to the cheek of any American citizen. [Applause.] Jury packing with Federal money and men sent to the penitentiary for crimes that they never committed. And there is much that might be said that has not been said in regard to that matter.

Now, we do not claim that there have not been frauds upon the public domain. There have been, and, to a certain extent, there always will be. But they have been exaggerated more than any other class of offenses that I ever heard of under Heaven.

The gentleman says the appropriation must be large, else the cases will not be passed upon. I have called the attention of this House time and time again to the fact that the more money we appropriated the more cases were made [applause]—not cleaned up, but manufactured. I called the attention of the House several years ago to hundreds of cases made out of the whole cloth and without rhyme or reason at one time. There was no justification for them. They were thrown into the special-service division, a great class of cases, where nobody ever claimed there was any fraud, and where no investigation was necessary; but they all counted as cases.

Why, we have a law under which a man may relinquish all claim to the coal that may be contained in the land that he files upon, and, in many cases, men take advantage of that law to relinquish all claim to the coal, even where there is no coal in the land. You would imagine that that would settle that sort of a case, but such has not always been the fact.

The man's proof is perfect. He relinquishes all right or claim to the only thing that the Government proposes to retain a hold upon. That ought to close the case and bring him a patent. But no. In many of these cases special agents were sent hundreds of miles to investigate the question as to whether the land really did contain coal. If they did not relinquish any claim to the coal the Government said was in the land, no patent would issue, and if they did relinquish no patent would issue until good Government money was spent to ascertain if the thing relinquished existed.

Cases of another class came to my attention the other day. Under a provision by which land may be withdrawn for power purposes—about the biggest fake under Heaven [laughter]—the law provides that if a man is a homesteader on the land in good faith, the withdrawal does not affect his homestead. And yet every homestead settler who resides upon those lands has to wait for a patent until there can be an investigation, after final proof. What can such an investigation develop? The land is withdrawn. The law says the withdrawal shall not affect him. His proof is regular. It is simply an opportunity to spend some public money.

Now, I am glad to be able to say that there has been less of this sort of thing in the recent past than there was some years ago; that the present Commissioner of the General Land Office is endeavoring, honestly and faithfully, to use this organization in a helpful and a useful way, rather than in a way that retards the issuance of patents and makes difficult the acquisition of title to the lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. And because the commissioner is making that earnest and honest effort, I shall not vote to reduce the amount below the amount carried in the bill, although I am in hearty sympathy with all those who have proposed a further reduction. This bill reduces the present appropriation $150,000. That is perhaps enough for one year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I thought the gentleman had completed his remarks.

Mr. MONDELL. No. Mr. Chairman, we need a larger sum for legitimate purposes under this item than we did years ago, but we do not need the amount we have been appropriating for the past four or five years. Conditions have arisen requiring further investigation and more detailed investigation than was required at one time.

And yet I am frank to say that if everything were done that ought to be done to protect the public domain this appropriation could be reduced, and ought to be reduced, each year for several years as much as it has been reduced this year, to one-half what it is in this bill.

I hope I shall see the time when this service shall be reduced to about half the present appropriation. Then there will cease to be the temptation to make cases. There will cease to be the temptation to hold up patents simply because the holding up of patents gives the opportunity to send special agents to the field to make examinations that are in many cases absolutely purposeless and that would not serve any useful purpose, no matter what the conditions were found to be.

This last year they have cleaned up a few more cases than they have made, so there is hope for the future, and I trust that the coming year will show a still further decrease in the number of cases pending and a very considerable reduction in the number of cases made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, we have made many mistakes in regard to our public lands, but we have never made any in the direction of too much zeal in protecting them from land thieves, and I for one am not willing to lend my vote to aid such people. Gentlemen may talk all they please about land having been covered in and land not open for entry and about there being no need for the expenditure of this fund, but I say to you that in my judgment no man can read the testimony that came before our committee or make himself familiar with the history of the Land Office for the last few years without realizing that we need to be constantly on guard against the land thieves who are seeking every opportunity to steal what the law does not entitle them to, and the statements that are made here that this money has been wasted are statements that are not borne out by the facts.

It has been true that some abuses have grown up in the past. Secretary Garfield testified some years ago before our committee that one of the things he did in reorganizing the service was to get rid of a lot of detectives who he did not think would know anything about any real question at issue, and to substitute for them men who were trained in the work that they were to perform, and there is not now any such abuse in the Land Office as would warrant this committee in striking down this appropriation.

The testimony shows some very interesting things. It shows that for 1910–11 the appropriation was $750,000, the expenditure $714,675.60. The trespass settlements were $100,099.70. That is not a question of entry, but a question of trespass on Federal lands.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; not now. I want to put this statement into the RECORD.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that those items——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky declines to yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. The recoveries through criminal and civil suits were $129,093.98. The area restored to the public domain through cancellation, as the result of special agents' reports, was 703,680 acres; the area restored through abatement of unlawful inclosures was 1,475,381 acres. The area restored through suits to cancel patents, through proceedings brought in the courts, was 21,340.25 acres.

Now, I want to read to the committee the difference between the management of the Land Office now and at a time when the public domain was being plundered with impunity:

Act of June 4, 1897 (forest lieu selections).

OLD SYSTEM.	PRESENT SYSTEM.
Under the old method of procedure only a small per cent of this class of cases were examined by special agents, such cases as contained some evidence or suspicion of fraud.	At present about 75 per cent are examined by special agents, because of the fraudulent character of many of this class of cases and because of insufficient data in the Geological Survey in some cases as to the coal, oil, or power-site possibilities of the land.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman know that Congress repealed the lieu-land law a number of years ago, and that there are practically no more lieu-land selections, except in very rare cases?

Mr. SHERLEY. I know that there are fraudulent cases under that act which are now under investigation, and others which resulted in recovery of land.

Mr. MANN. And there are many State lieu-land cases yet.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know that.

Mr. MONDELL. Where are they?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not tell the gentleman offhand, but I know, and the gentleman knows, that there are recoveries being made every day as the result of those investigations.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that there are very few lieu-land locations now anywhere.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let me continue, please. The gentleman has made his speech.

Scrip, preemption, and town-site cases.

OLD SYSTEM.	PRESENT SYSTEM.
Under the old method only a very few cases belonging to these classes were examined by special agents.	At present many of these cases are examined in the field as to fraud and coal, oil, and power-site possibilities. It would be difficult to determine the exact per cent of such cases, but it will probably reach 15 or 20 per cent.

Timber and stone entries. Under the old system no appraisal was made. And let me in passing say this: It developed during some testimony that was taken at the time of the conservation commission, of which I happened to be a member, that the department for many years construed the land law so as to make what was stated in the law as the minimum price at which public land could be sold the maximum price; and for years, without regard to the fact that the land was worth many times the minimum price stated in the act, the department so construed it as to make that the maximum price that should be paid in any instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Is the gentleman aware that section 4 of the so-called timber and stone act provided that in all cases where citizens had trespassed upon Government land they could, by coming into court and paying $2.50 an acre, settle up all their trespasses?

Mr. SHERLEY. What of it?

Mr. LAFFERTY. The point is that Congress never intended that more than $2.50 an acre should be charged for any land——

Mr. SHERLEY. O Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The gentleman will not allow me to ask him three or four more questions?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the gentleman is going to do what every other Member does, and that is to occupy his own time as he wishes, which no other Member deserving courtesy will try to prevent.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I dare say that my prediction will come true, and that the gentleman from Kentucky will not dare allow me to ask him three or four questions.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's prediction will come more than true; the gentleman from Kentucky will not yield to anyone so lacking in the courtesy of debate as the gentleman from Oregon has shown himself to be.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I knew that the gentleman would not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, returning to my remarks under the timber and stone act, I will continue:

Timber and stone entries.

OLD SYSTEM.	PRESENT SYSTEM.
No appraisal made.	Under instructions of November 30, 1908, the lands embraced in all these applications must be cruised to determine the amount and value of the timber thereon, or examined to determine the amount and value of stone thereon, as the case may be.

Inspection of local land offices.

Formerly made by special inspectors of the department.	Under present practice periodical inspections are made by members of the field force.

Isolated tracts.

Investigated only where special reasons made same desirable.	Under departmental instructions of January 19, 1912, all applications for sale must be investigated to determine the value of the land, so that the Government may receive adequate consideration therefor, and for the further purpose of preventing agreements to refrain from competitive bidding.

The work of investigation made necessary by the present policy of the department to carefully investigate projects under the so-called Carey Act and various acts amendatory thereof, to the end that the settler who relies upon the approval of the Government may be as fully protected as possible, as well as for the purpose of minimizing the segregation of Government lands for speculative purposes, has been materially increased, not only because of the more careful and painstaking investigation of the various projects but because of the large increase in the number of segregation lists and lists for patent predicated on such segregation lists.

Various phases of the Carey Act (act of Mar. 15, 1910, withdrawals).

OLD SYSTEM.	PRESENT SYSTEM.
No examinations were made.	Examinations are now made of all lists where it appears that such examinations are necessary or desirable. At the present time eight lists are being carefully investigated as to all phases of the cases.

Carey Act segregations.

Examination as to desert character of the land only by ordinary special agent or departmental inspector.	Complete and careful engineer's report, comprising— 1. Desert or nondesert character of the land. 2. Sufficiency of the water supply, including full abstract of prior appropriations, stream measurements, if any, precipitation records and run-off, area of watershed, and all other pertinent features. 3. Feasibility of the system, including full and careful description of the proposed works, specifications of dams, canals, laterals, etc., suggestions and recommendations, etc. 4. Financial responsibility of the proposing contractors with the States. This examination is as full and careful as may be, to the end that speculative and "wildcat" segregations be reduced to a minimum. 5. Any other information touching upon the project or its bona fides.

Carey Act lists for patent upon alleged reclamation of the land.

No investigation was made, the certificate of the State engineer that the land was reclaimed being deemed sufficient.	1. Where the segregation list upon which the list for patent is predicated has not been investigated under the present system the engineer is expected to investigate and report upon the same, as in Carey Act segregations above shown, as to sufficiency of water supply and feasibility of the system, in addition to which he reports fully as to whether or not the irrigation works have been completed in a good and workmanlike manner and according to specifications; whether the ditches and laterals have been completed so that water can be turned upon the land at any time required; what portion of each smallest legal subdivision is irrigable under the system and what portion is above ditches; and also as to whether any portion of the nonirrigable acreage is susceptible of irrigation from any other known sources. This report is required to be very full and complete, and upon it is based the patenting of the lands.

Railroad land grants.

Investigations were only made when the office had reason to believe that the lands were mineral in character.	Investigations are now made as to the mineral or nonmineral character of all selected lands before patent is issued.

Individual lieu selections.

No investigations were formerly made of individual lieu selections, nonmineral affidavits by the selectors being considered as sufficient.	Investigations are now made of all individual lieu selections, whether under the act of 1898 or 1899, and upon the reports received the lands are either clear-listed for patent or appropriate action taken.

Right-of-way applications under act of March 3, 1891.

Few, if any, investigations were made except where actual fraud was charged.	Because of the increasing scarcity of water in the Western States many investigations are ordered either by this office or the department touching the available water supply and the feasibility of projects right of way for which application has been made.

Forfeited right-of-way applications under the acts of March 3, 1891, and February 15, 1901.

No investigations were made.	During the past year a large number of approved rights of way of five years' (or over) standing have been investigated, to the end that if the projected works had not been built suit might be recommended to declare the easement forfeited, and thus clear the records. Upon such reports a large number of suits have been commenced and many easements either judicially declared forfeited or relinquished. During the coming year the number of such investigations which should be made will double, if not treble, that of last year.

Railroad rights of way under the act of March 3, 1875 (forfeited under various forfeiture acts).

No examinations made.	It is the intention, if the force of special agents will admit of the work, to investigate this year all approved right-of-way applications over 5 years old and to clear the record of such as have not been constructed.

Power sites, act of February 15, 1901.

No examination.	Owing to the increasing value of water power in the West it is necessary to make careful investigation of many applications asked for under the act of March 3, 1891, but which it is suspected are to be used for power purposes and not irrigation purposes, and should therefore be granted by permit under the act of 1901. It is, further, the duty of all special agents to report to this office any matters relative to power development where it is found that the system is being constructed or construction is contemplated without first obtaining permission from the Government. A number of such reports have been received and have resulted in cessation of the work until application was filed and favorably considered by the department.

Lands withdrawn from power sites.

No examination.	Now all entries upon lands withdrawn for power sites are carefully examined in order that the value of the lands for power purposes, as well as the bona fides of the applicant, may be determined. The area now withdrawn for power sites is 1,515,423 acres.

Until about the middle of last year the work of investigation under the "small-holders" act of April 28, 1904, has been merely superficial. This work has increased very largely during the latter part of the past year, with every evidence of a large increase during the coming year. The special agent is expected to visit and carefully examine both the base and selected lands, which may be hundreds of miles apart, and, after careful investigation, to report whether or not they are of the same quality. One investigation of this character involving a 160-acre tract will often take more time than a straight investigation of a couple thousands of acres which is in a compact body.

Relative to the Carey Act, information received leads to the belief that the State of Arizona will, at the first opportunity, adopt the act and that at least a dozen projects in that State are only awaiting legislative action to file their lists. New Mexico is also in line for aggressive Carey Act work, and from the older Carey Act States lists for patent are now coming in rapidly, which, in view of the old system of meager investigation, means a double investigation before the lists for patent can be approved. In this connection it may be noted that, inasmuch as Carey Act projects are of a quasi public nature, prompt action must be given them, even at the expense of some other public interests.

State selections.

OLD PRACTICE.	PRESENT PRACTICE.
Practically no examination.	Examination of all lands selected by States. Approximately 1,500,000 acres awaiting examination.

Indian allotments.

Practically no examination.	By order of April 4, 1911, all Indian allotments made on public lands are required to be examined and report made as to settlement of Indian and character and value of his improvements; also as to character of land with respect to timber, mineral, coal, phosphate, oil, power-site possibilities, etc. There are about 4,500 of these allotments pending, involving 720,000 acres.

Water companies.

No examination.	Under instructions contained in paragraph 18 of circular dated September 30, 1910 (39 L. D., 253), an investigation and technical report is required to be made of water companies in cases of desert entries where, on annual proof, expenditures for stock or interest in any such company, through which water is to be secured for irrigating the land, is alleged. To date approximately 125 companies have been investigated and reported upon. The reports so far obtained are of material value also in adjudication of desert-land entries upon which final proofs have been made. The office examiners are brought more closely in touch with field conditions, and thus can act more intelligently on the final proofs submitted.

The truth of the business is that there has been in this country an awakening of the public conscience, an awakening that demands efficiency in the public service, particularly in regard to the lands that belong as a heritage to all the people and are not simply the property of the States in which they lie. I am tired of the attitude of men who represent States in which the public lands are situated lecturing Congress because it does not see fit to turn the lands over to them to be used by them as they see fit; and judging by the past history of America in regard to public lands, to be despoiled by men who have no title to them.

If we make any mistake, we make it in lack of vigilance in regard to the public-land service and not in too many safeguards over it. I, for one, would hate to see this appropriation cut a dollar. The committee went to the extreme limit, I think, of conservatism in reducing the estimate asked by the department, $650,000, to $500,000. The testimony before us by those in a position to know and those who talk for the benefit of the Government and not for the benefit of any special or private interest was that this sum was necessary. The gentleman from Wyoming passed an encomium upon the Land Commissioner, Mr. Dennett. If that means anything, it ought to go to the extent of making the commissioner's judgment as to the amount of money that can be honestly spent considered by this Congress and not disregarded.

I agree with all that has been said of these acts that have recently come to public light. I have supreme contempt for the man who under the guise of any law will tamper with justice or with a juryman. But the fact that there have been men in the Government service that have prostituted that service is no reason why we should let down the bars and take away the safeguards, so as to leave looters outside of the service an opportunity to continue their work. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois how much time he wishes.

Mr. CANNON. About five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will pardon me, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, I want to offer an amendment, and I will not exceed one minute in talking about it.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection, if I can be recognized afterwards, to the gentleman from South Dakota offering his amendment now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make it 12 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the request be in this form: That there be 12 minutes' debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto, and that debate close on the pending amendment in 10 minutes, and then that I may offer my amendment and have 2 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for the service for the current year is $650,000. The estimates for this year are $650,000. I did intend to offer an amendment increasing this appropriation recommended in the bill to the amount of the estimate, making it $650,000 instead of $500,000.

I listened to the examination when this bill was being prepared. I have no business in the Public Land Office except to run an errand once in a while for somebody that has gone west from Illinois or some other State. I know but little of the personnel, but I was very greatly interested and very greatly impressed with the presentation that was made touching this appropriation by the Commissioner, Mr. Dennett, of the General Land Office. I am very glad indeed to hear the tribute given to him for efficiency and integrity by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Now let me read from the hearings:

Mr. DENNETT. I had hoped to get down to $500,000, but I can not recommend to you gentlemen to cut the appropriation to $500,000 this year. I do not believe it will get down to $250,000 for a good many years. The way in which that work accumulated and the big frauds which existed were because that force was not big enough to watch the work. The Commissioner of the Land Office, as you know, is several thousand miles from most of this work. He must have a sufficient force of representatives on the ground who can see exactly what is being done. The registers and receivers do not go out of their offices. The proofs are submitted to them. They have little more local knowledge, of course, than the Commissioner of the Land Office, but they have not this specific knowledge, and the agents have to supply that to the office.

This appropriation also investigates the entries of lands that are alleged to have been made and are proven to have been made in California that were mineral lands, and the entries made by railway companies. The statement is made that very important investigations are being made in Colorado touching the fraudulent entry of coal lands. I do not know anything about it, but all agree that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is a painstaking, honorable, honest, and efficient man, and he not only wants $500,000, but he asks for $650,000. I shall vote against the amendment reducing it below $500,000.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, when the sundry civil appropriation bill was reported to the House in 1910 and was under consideration and this item was reached, an appropriation of $750,000 was carried for the purpose of protecting the public lands. I offered an amendment reducing the amount to $500,000. In the Committee of the Whole the amendment prevailed, but when the bill was reported to the House and a separate vote was taken upon that amendment upon a roll call the original provision of the bill was reinstated and it carried the $750,000.

Serving on another committee of this House just prior to that time I had occasion to investigate some expenditures in the Land Office in its various departments and I found what I supposed at that time, and I believe yet to be, some abuses as to the expenditure of this particular appropriation. For that reason I undertook then to reduce the amount carried in the bill. I believe from the investigation that I made at that time, from the testimony that from time to time has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, that there is necessity for the appropriation in the amount that is carried in this bill, namely, $500,000 for the protection of the public lands in the Western States. I know that these gentlemen who represent the territory in which this land is situated are extremely anxious to have the land taken up. Sometimes their anxiety has appeared to some of us to be so great that they were not very particular as to how it was taken up, and it is a matter of importance not only to them—that is, the proper administration of the land laws—but to the entire citizenship of the country, because they are our land as well as their lands, and they are a source of considerable revenue to the Government. As was stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but for this appropriation carried for the protection of these public lands the Government would have lost immeasurably—not this sum, but this sum a hundred times over in the loss of its public domain by fraudulent entries of public lands.

So far as I am aware I was the first man in this House who made an effort to reduce what I thought was an extravagant amount to be expended for this purpose. I want to say to the committee that I believe to-day that this amount is absolutely necessary to a proper enforcement of the laws against trespass on the public lands, and I hope that the Committee of the Whole will sustain the Committee on Appropriations in the recommendation that it has made with respect to this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary situation is this: The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] offered an amendment to reduce the appropriation from $500,000 to $100,000. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] offers an amendment to that, to reduce the sum to $250,000. The gentleman from Oregon has indicated his willingness to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

The question now recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 12, after the figures "$500,000," insert:
"Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended in the investigation of any homestead entry where final proof has been submitted and patent has been issued for a period of two years, unless charges of fraud have been filed against the entry prior to the expiration of that period."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the item is subject to a point of order, but I want to say just a word. I do not think any gentleman who is in favor of large appropriations for this special-agent service will contend that any great showing has been made, so far as fraud is concerned, in connection with the public domain, where it has been acquired under the homestead laws.

I am in favor of the most liberal appropriations for this service, so far as the mineral lands, timberlands, and so forth, are concerned, but I do say, so far as the homesteader is concerned, that there ought to be some time after which he will not be annoyed or harassed by an inspector of the General Land Office, and this limitation simply provides that in the case of a homestead entryman who has submitted final proof and has had his patent for a period of two years, in the absence of a charge of fraud against that entry it shall not be investigated by a special agent. In other words, no part of this appropriation may be used in the investigation of a case of that character, and gentlemen from the West know that it has been the practice to investigate cases three, four, and five years after patent has issued, when there were cases where the patent was being withheld under the excuse that they did not have special agents enough to investigate the entry, and therefore the entryman had to wait in an uncertainty of knowing whether he was going to get his patent while the agent was investigating a case that had been patented for three or four or five years. This simply limits the period to two years after patent has issued, in the absence of a charge of fraud, and it is a proper and reasonable limitation, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I do not believe we should attempt to interfere in this way with the administration of the General Land Office, which is endeavoring to protect the public domain from being despoiled.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman wants to humiliate us in the West just as much as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 15, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reproducing plats of surveys: To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys on file, and other plats constituting a part of the records of said office, to furnish local land offices with the same, and for reproducing by photolithography original plats of surveys prepared in the offices of surveyors general, $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph following the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows

Insert as a new paragraph on page 97, after line 7, the following: "For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to issue two editions per annum of maps showing the lands designated under the enlarged homestead laws during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, $1,300."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is not subject to the point of order. It provides for the issuance of a map. A similar provision has been heretofore carried in the sundry civil bill, and it is almost identical with the paragraph that it follows.

The CHAIRMAN. Because an item has been in the bill heretofore for a number of years does not mean that it is permanent, and the Chair therefore holds it is new legislation and is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no authority for the edition of two of these maps.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed appropriation is without authorization.

Mr. MANN. I think there is authority, and that is the question.

Mr. MONDELL. The Land Office is publishing maps all the time. It published two editions of these very maps last year, and it published one edition of the maps this year, but it so happens, for some reason or other, the item was not in the estimates. The item has been carried in this bill, and the last map was published not over three or four months ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say the original appropriation, although carried in an appropriation heretofore a number of times, is still subject to the point of order, because there has never been any authorization for it.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say there is an authorization for the issuance of maps; they are being issued all the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not produce the law to sustain his position.

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the committee knows very well I can not put my hand on the law at this moment. This is an official publication of the Land Office, showing certain lands, and that office is constantly issuing publications showing locations of public lands. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations certainly——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wyoming that the Chair has ruled.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming, in relation to this matter being omitted by the department, that if he had called attention in time in the past week it might have been possible to have ascertained the facts. He proposes here, without any knowledge of the law, something, and I have to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Restoration of lands in forest reserves: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to meet the expenses of advertising the restoration to the public domain of lands in forest reserves, or of lands temporarily withdrawn for forest-reserve purposes, $2,000: Provided, That the notice required by section 1 of the act of June 11, 1906, shall not hereafter be published.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I also reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the proviso proposes to repeal the notice required in the law which permits land chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes located in forest reserves to be settled upon. Now, anyone who takes that law and reads it will find that the notice has to be published. He, I think, would have the right to assume that that is the law. Here comes in the sundry civil bill and in another place repeals the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois please repeat that part in regard to the law?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is patent it is subject to the point of order. The proviso provides for the repeal of the law as to the publication of notices required by the act of June 11, 1906.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if it does not reduce expenses?

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference if it did reduce expenses. I am making the application on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commissioner of the General Land Office made this statement: This law was enacted in 1906, at a time when very large withdrawals had taken place, and they thought it advisable that the restoration to the public domain should be advertised. That existing condition has practically passed away, and there is no benefit whatever derived from the advertising of the restoration; that it was intended to give some person who might have had a claim notice, and it simply resulted in an unnecessary expenditure of $12,000 or $15,000 a year in advertising, which, in the opinion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, served no useful purpose.

Mr. MANN. Now, I will say to the gentleman I have been looking up this matter, not in connection with proposed legislation being before the House, but particularly on the agricultural appropriation bill. Under the existing law, where they propose to say that certain land in a forest reserve is chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes and thereby throw it open for homestead entry, a notice is required to be published, so that anyone has possession of that knowledge if they watch the papers in the county in which the land is located, but without that notice they do not have an opportunity to know whether this land has been declared subject to homestead entry, although that is not the point I particularly insisted upon. But there is a good deal of this land being taken up in forest reserves. The person has knowledge of the law of June, 1906. He sees in that law a provision that notice shall be published and relies upon it. Along comes the sundry civil bill, which amends the law, the man does not have any notice, no one reads the sundry civil bill, yet that bill says there shall be no notice. and the man who relies upon the notice finds out that somebody else gets his property.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose it is amended in any other bill?

Mr. MANN. If it was amended in some other bill, it would be an amendment to that section of the law and be published by the department, probably——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department publishes this as well as any other. This was inserted in accordance with the view of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that it served no useful purpose.

Mr. MANN. Now, the Senate inserted in the agricultural appropriation bill an item which would probably throw open the forest reservations to agricultural settlement and homestead entry, and when that was disagreed to in conference the Senate rejected the conference report because of that fact and the bill is now back in conference. If that item should go into the bill and become a law, any land in a forest reserve which can be said to be suitable for agricultural purposes, although it might now be timberland with great value of forest upon it, would be thrown open to homestead entry. Certainly if that would be the case there ought to be a publication and notice in regard to it. I do not know what disposition is going to be made of the bill at present. I think, therefore, I shall insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Opening Indian reservations (reimbursable): To meet the expenses pertaining to the opening to entry and settlement of such Indian reservation lands as may be opened during the fiscal year 1913: Provided, That the expenses pertaining to the opening of each of such reservations and paid for out of this appropriation shall be reimbursed to the United States from the money received from the sale of the lands embraced in said reservations, respectively, $20,000.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of saying a word in reference to the timber and stone act that was discussed by the able gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] a few minutes ago.

The timber and stone act was passed June 3, 1878, and in section 1 it provided that timber lands that were unfit for agriculture, unappropriated, and unreserved might thereafter be sold to the citizens of the United States in tracts not exceeding 160 acres to any one citizen, for the minimum price of $2.50 per acre. The bill went on to provide that any person now being prosecuted in any court of the United States for trespass upon the public lands might absolve himself from further prosecution by coming into court and paying $2.50 an acre and buy all lands by him cut over.

That is one of the reasons why the Secretary of the Interior construed that law to mean that Congress contemplated that the lands should be sold to citizens at $2.50 an acre.

Other reasons were these: For a hundred years lands had been sold by cash entry. They had been sold under various preemption laws for the minimum price of $1.25 an acre, and all the land laws had referred to acts of sale at the minimum price or double the minimum price of $2.50.

Now, here was a proposition to sell these lands at the minimum price of $2.50 an acre. Did that mean that they should be sold at $2.50, or that they should not be sold for any less than that?

There were other provisions like this, that no one citizen should be permitted to buy more than 160 acres, and that he should go in and prove by the testimony of two witnesses that he was not making the purchase for the benefit of any other person or for the purpose of speculation.

Now, by the act of November 15, 1909, as the result, I suppose, of this famous Conservation Commission of which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] was a member, the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, issued regulations providing that timberlands under the act of June 3, 1878, should not be sold thereafter to citizens of the United States except at such value as they might be appraised at by these special agents. As a result no timberlands have been sold since, because the special agents appraised them so high that nobody would buy them.

Prior to the issuing of these regulations the Secretary of the Interior had repeatedly asked Congress to repeal the timber-and-stone act of 1878. Congress has refused to do so. That act still stands upon the statute books.

But it is a dead letter there, because the Interior Department, by these recent regulations, has practically repealed it. It may be that Congress failed to do its duty and failed to provide suitable rules and regulations, as it is in duty bound to do under the Constitution, providing for the disposition of the public domain. But when, in report after report, the Secretaries of the Interior asked Congress to make this change in the law of 1878, and Congress, knowing how the courts of the land had been construing it for 30 years, declined to make that change, I say it did not lie within the legitimate jurisdiction of the Interior Department to make that change.

If Congress intended the law to be that a citizen could buy only 160 acres of timberland, and then must pay the full market value, why place that restriction upon him? He could go to the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. or any other timber company and buy all the land he wanted at the full market value. There was clearly a bounty intended to the citizens of this country who will come from Kentucky or any other State and seek to found a home on the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] saw fit a moment ago to read a lecture to the western Members of Congress in emphatic language because they dared to stand for the rights of their constituents. The gentleman is ordinarily courteous and generally parliamentary, but he was certainly not courteous and scarcely parliamentary when he impugned the motives of western Representatives in gross in the views they have expressed and the efforts they have made to amend this bill. His suggestion was that they took the position they did because they wanted their constituents to have an opportunity to loot the public domain, to rob the people of their landed heritage.

We of the West have heard that sort of thing as long as we care to hear it, and——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's statement of what I said is in no sense accurate.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman thinks it is.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not imply, and I did not intend to imply, with reference to the gentleman, a desire that he should have his constituents loot the Treasury——

Mr. MONDELL. No; the gentleman did not refer to me by name——

Mr. SHERLEY (continuing). And I regret that the gentleman feels that my remarks, so construed by him, should apply to himself.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's remarks did not worry me. I am perfectly willing to answer to my constituents for my position in these matters, and so far as I am concerned, had I been the only western Member discussing the matter, I should have said nothing.

There is a very great deal of difference between a desire to allow our constituents to loot the public domain and a desire that our constituents shall have their rights under the law. The difference is as wide as the poles are apart. All we stand for and what we insist upon is that there shall not be an administration of the public-land laws that denies to entrymen the rights that Congress has given them; that shall not prevent them from securing the opportunities that Congress expected they should secure, and that it provided for them.

We demand an administration that shall neither deny the right, in the first place, nor delay its fulfillment finally, and we know, for we live out there and we have to do with these cases, that many men have been denied their right to initiate; and having initiated, have had a long and weary road to travel before their rights were consummated. Against that sort of administration we shall continue to protest. It is very well for the department to make up lists of what has been accomplished. We favor a proper public-land service. We know how necessary and essential it is, and within proper limits we are favorable to the proper protection of the public domain. We would be the last people in the world to deny proper appropriations for the public-land service. We know that Congress, in giving larger sums in some cases than were necessary for the field service, has given opportunity for oppression and delay or denial of rights. No good purpose is served by appropriations larger than necessary for the service properly conducted.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not debate this thing all night, Mr. Chairman. I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is not involved in that controversy.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I think I am—very much.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the regular order. Debate on the amendment is closed, and if every gentleman now wishes to redebate it we shall never finish this.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the recognition of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am not so sensitive as my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is concerning the remarks of my distinguished colleague [Mr. SHERLEY], who comes from the State where both of us first saw the light of day. But indeed I am surprised that my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who was just a while ago so heartily in favor of the proposition to reduce the appropriation from $500,000 to $250,000, should have found it necessary to vote for the $500,000. I agree with everything he has said concerning the situation of the western pioneers. I remember, just after the war, when Federal inspectors went through the South. They were in Kentucky as well as other States, and I could have heard the forebears of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] declaim as eloquently against them as he now takes up for these people who are upon our backs.

I want to give an illustration in my own district. Upon three different occasions these Federal inspectors, whom the gentleman from Kentucky thinks are absolutely necessary in order to pass the title from the Government to the individual, broke open the doors and searched the cabin, broke open the trunks and searched the correspondence, to determine whether or not a man was a bona fide resident. That incident reminded me of long ago, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] can not wonder that I rebel against having a Federal inspector upon the back of one of my constituents. I agree with him fully and fairly that there have been frauds committed, but that was years ago, when the railroad companies and great corporations took up this vast domain out there, of which we have been robbed, but that robbery the Congress of the United States was responsible for. All we ask now is to be allowed to contest our rights before a tribunal that is as old as the Government itself, to determine the right between the contester and the contestee as to the piece of land which the homesteader is trying to acquire for a home.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $450,000: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890; and, second, to surveying under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States and Territories, except railroad land grants and such indemnity lands as the several States and Territories may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of. and other surveys shall include lands adapted to agriculture and lands deemed advisable to survey on account of availability for irrigation or dry farming, lines of reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations. The surveys and resurveys to be made by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, at such compensation not exceeding $200 per month as he may prescribe, except that the Secretary of the Interior may appoint not to exceed two supervisors of surveys whose compensation shall not exceed $250 per month each, and except in the District of Alaska, where a compensation not exceeding $10 per day may be allowed such surveyors and such per diem allowance, in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3, as he may prescribe, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, said per diem and traveling expenses to be allowed to all surveyors employed hereunder and to such clerks who are competent surveyors who may be detailed to make surveys, resurveys, or examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making, by such competent surveyors, fragmentary surveys, examination of unaccepted contract surveys heretofore made and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, the sum hereby appropriated to be immediately available: Provided further, That the sum of not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount hereby appropriated may be expended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of metal or other equally durable monuments to be used for public-land survey corners wherever practicable.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment at the end of line 5, on page 100.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the typographical errors at the end of lines 10 and 11, on page 99, may be corrected by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, these typographical errors will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 100, after line 5, insert the following:
"For resurveys and retracements, in Wyoming, $50,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the same kind of an amendment has always been carried in this bill from time immemorial. The gentleman can make a point of order against anything.

The CHAIRMAN. If it has not been authorized by law, it is still subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

After "$450,000," in line 11, page 98, insert the words:
"Of which sum not to exceed $50,000 may be used for resurveys and retracements in Wyoming."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order on the amendment that it is a limitation upon the discretion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in expending this money. Under the law the commissioner has the authority to expend this money for surveys and resurveys in public-land States within his discretion. This attempts to control the discretion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph as it would read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 98, after the figures "$450,000," insert as follows: "Of which sum not exceeding $50,000 may be used for resurveys and retracements in Wyoming."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that that is new legislation, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I will reoffer the amendment that I offered at the end of the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit to the Chair that the Chair has already ruled that amendment out of order, and it is not in order to offer it again.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have the attention of the Chair on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 100, after line 5, insert the following: "For resurveys and retracements in Wyoming, $50,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order again so that there will be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the item is not subject to a point of order and the gentleman from New York knows that it is not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will produce the decision to show the gentleman that he is mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is the part of the bill that provides for the survey of public lands. Nobody denies that the Commissioner of the General Land Office has authority to survey public lands so far as Congress may give him money to survey them with. This is the item in which surveys are provided for. It is not new legislation to add to this appropriation. It is not new legislation to add an appropriation applying to a specific State. It has been done repeatedly. The bill last year carried four items practically identical with this—one for surveys in Alaska, one for resurveys——

The CHAIRMAN. Were there any points of order made to those items?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know, but such amendments have been placed on the bill from time immemorial. I do not think it ever occurred to anybody that they were subject to a point of order. No one denies the general authority conferred by law for the survey of public lands, and certainly it is in order in the surveying paragraph to add to the appropriation for service in certain States.

As I said a moment ago, the last bill carried an item of $50,000 for Nebraska, $50,000 for Alaska, $50,000 for Utah, and $50,000 for Montana, four different items in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the question involved in the point of order is whether where Congress has the power to make an appropriation for surveying the land anywhere in the United States that gives it the power to make an appropriation for surveying the land in a particular place. There is no doubt about the power of making an appropriation for the survey of public lands generally. We require the surveys of public lands in all the public-land States, and requiring that, we have the power to make an appropriation to make the survey. Now, have we not then the power to make appropriations for survey in a particular State or the survey of a particular location or the survey of a particular piece of public domain as long as it is public domain? Of course, we would not have the power under the rule to make an appropriation for the survey of property which is not authorized. But a survey of this land in Wyoming is authorized by law. The law authorizes the land office to survey the land in Wyoming. Now, there being authority to survey the land, is not that authority to make an appropriation for that purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule, and in doing so will read a former ruling from volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, page 577:

On February 24, 1898, the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The paragraphs relating to the Geological Survey being read, Mr. MARCUS A. SMITH, of Arizona, proposed an amendment to provide that $5,000 of the appropriation should "be expended in the county of Yuma, Territory of Arizona."

Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, having made a point of order, after debate the Chairman ruled:

"The Chair understands that the Secretary of the Interior is given a general discretion as to how and in what localities he shall use the appropriation. This amendment would limit that discretion, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order."

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by increasing the sum of $450,000, line 11, page 98, to $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this session of Congress I introduced a bill, which was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, providing for an appropriation of $50,000 for resurveys and retracements in Wyoming. I was not given an opportunity to discuss that matter before the committee. Had I had that opportunity it might not have been necessary to take up the time of the committee to-day. I requested that opportunity in person and by letter on several occasions, but the committee was too busy to give me the time to be heard.

This appropriation for public-land surveys is $200,000 less than it was last year. The committee is very generous in giving western people the benefit of the gentlemen who travel about over the West finding fault with their entries, but is very parsimonious when it comes to surveying lands so that settlers can go upon them, so that they can tell where to establish their homes.

It is true that the committee will probably say that the department did not ask for more than this sum. It is also true that last year the general appropriation was only $450,000, but there were four specific appropriations for $50,000, making $200,000 in all, and that reduction of $200,000 by that amount reduces the total appropriation for surveys. With the reduction of $200,000 the public-land service in surveys is going to be crippled in a way that is bound to retard the settlement and development of the country. In the State I represent resurveys are constantly demanded by the people who are seeking homes on the public lands and who find it difficult to locate the boundaries of the lands they desire to settle upon.

Montana needs more surveys, also Idaho, and the settlers are clamoring for surveys all of the time. We need additional surveys and resurveys in Wyoming, and yet we are not given an opportunity to appear before the committee for a moment to discuss these matters, important to our people. Members of the committee may say, if these additional appropriations are necessary, why did not the department ask for them? In former times, when public lands were surveyed under contract, the surveyors general were charged with the duty of seeing that the survey appropriations were large enough so that the work could go on in their States, but two years ago the method of surveying the public land was changed, with the result that the initiation of the work of survey is largely with the General Land Office.

The General Land Office is not as well acquainted with the demands for surveys in the States as the surveyors general were. There is not the same pressure upon the General Land Office, and as long as their force is employed in the field they have no special incentive for insisting upon large appropriations for surveys. But we who are meeting the demand of the settlers for additional surveys feel that the committee ought at least to have given us an opportunity to be heard and to grant reasonable sums for the work.

I propose to increase this appropriation $50,000, which still leaves it $150,000 less than it was last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is incorrect in his statements. A large number of Members of the House requested hearings on various matters in which they were interested in this bill. At my direction all of those gentlemen were notified, and the committee gave several days to hearing such Members as were able to avail themselves of the invitation.

The committee has not reduced the appropriation. It has given the sum requested for surveys by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It is the same amount requested for 1911 and 1912. It is true that there were special items in the bill for the current year for the surveying of public lands. They were special items, put in as a matter of favoritism to aid certain Members of the House, who thought it desirable to have that assistance in order to assist them in their political standing with their constituents.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office was informed by the members of the Committee on Appropriations that it was his duty to render, and the committee would be pleased to have, an estimate for any additional appropriation required for public surveying, in the event that in his opinion a larger sum should have been requested. If sufficient money has not been requested, it is due to the fact that an attempt has been made to mislead the country by keeping the estimates of the public service below the amounts necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the four specific appropriations that were on the bill last year—$50,000—were not estimated for by the department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that, and the Committee on Appropriations desires to break up the practice of exercising favoritism on behalf of certain Members of the House and to make the appropriation for this service in one sum, so that it can be apportioned to the public service as the needs require, rather than to have money appropriated in order to gratify the whim or the wish or the request of some Member. There has been a ruling by the Comptroller of the Treasury that these specific appropriations made in the bill are available until expended. They do not lapse into the Treasury like a general appropriation. More than that, they can be expended in the employment of persons regardless of the civil-service laws, and it has been very desirable to have the specific appropriations for survey and resurveying in the various States made in this way. The committee gave all the money that was requested. It notified the Commissioner of the General Land Office that if additional money was required he should submit a supplemental or additional estimate, and it does not propose to be coerced into making appropriations for the surveys that are not requested by those responsible for the conduct of the service.

In no other way can the public business of the Government be properly carried on. If additional money is required, it should be estimated for in accordance with the law. We have been for many years endeavoring to put the financial operations of the Government upon such a plane that it would be possible to tell with some approximate degree of exactness the relation of the expenditures and revenues at the outset of the session of Congress. Numerous instances have been disclosed where estimates have arbitrarily been reduced at the direction of the heads of the departments against the protest of those responsible for the service, in order to keep the estimates down in being submitted to Congress. There is but one thing that the Congress can do, and that is to insist that the estimates be submitted in accordance with the law, and if those responsible for the various parts of the public service do not comply with the law, then to assume that any additional sums to those asked are really unnecessary and are simply desired in order to accommodate gentlemen either in or out of Congress. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, debate on the paragraph and amendment thereto will close in five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending. Is this an amendment to that, or is it a separate amendment?

Mr. PRAY. It is a separate amendment and is offered as a new paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that is not in order at this time as there is an amendment to the paragraph now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment which is now pending, offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from New York asked that all debate on the paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true, and it has been agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. But that does not preclude the offering of an amendment, and the gentleman from Montana is offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no decision to the effect that the gentleman from Montana is precluded from offering his amendment. The Chair has asked the gentleman if it was an amendment to the amendment or a separate amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. There is still five minutes for discussion on the paragraph.

Mr. PRAY. It is a separate paragraph at the end of the paragraph which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming will come first. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 100, after the word "practicable," in line 5, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For continuing the survey of public lands in Hill, Blaine, Choteau, Valley, Dawson, Rosebud, and Custer Counties, in the State of Montana, $150,000, of which amount the sum of not exceeding $3,000 may be expended for the necessary office work in the Surveyor General's Office in connection with this survey.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered was embodied in a bill which I introduced at the beginning of this session of Congress at the earnest solicitation of hundreds of homesteaders in my State. Later on I appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and submitted letters from the department and made a statement in support of this demand. I believed then and I believe now that I gave a sufficient reason for granting this request. I read at that time before the committee a report on my bill from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which I desire at this time to submit to this committee, showing the real necessity for an additional appropriation in the State of Montana to meet the needs of settlers in respect to surveys upon the public domain. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, January 22, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES N. PRAY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. PRAY: I am in receipt of your letter dated January 5, 1912, addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with which you inclosed a copy of a bill providing for an appropriation of $150,000 for the survey of the remaining unsurveyed lands in Chouteau, Valley, Dawson, Fergus, and Custer Counties, Mont., and request information as to the exact acreage of the unsurveyed land in the stated counties, and such other available information as is relative to this matter.

In reply, I have the honor to report that the area of the unsurveyed and unappropriated lands embraced in each of the counties named, as shown by the latest compilation, made July 1, 1911, is as follows:

	Acres.
Chouteau County	2,039,499
Valley County	3,065,787
Dawson County	3,354,710
Fergus County	1,027,360
Custer County	2,339,395
Total	11,826,751

As these counties are composed principally of farming and grazing lands, there has been a large demand for the survey of their unsurveyed areas, and therefore, with the proposed appropriation, this department will be able to meet said demands by bringing about the desired surveys as a necessary prerequisite to the substantial development of the country through entries under the homestead and other public-land laws.

The total area of unsurveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated land in the entire State of Montana is shown by said circular to be 16,746,928 acres, and the apportionment to that State from the regular appropriation for the survey and resurvey of the public lands is insufficient to meet the petitions of bona fide settlers, especially in the five counties mentioned, and the bill therefore meets with the approval of this office.

Very respectfully,

CARMI A. THOMPSON,
Acting Secretary.

Under the present system of making surveys it costs about 5 cents an acre. In other words, we now need $600,000 to complete the surveys in the counties named in this proposed amendment. The request for $150,000 additional and outside of the general appropriation carried in the bill is extremely modest, in view of the necessities of the case. All of these matters were fully presented to the Appropriations Committee, and I regret they failed to respond to the petitions of the homesteaders in the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes. This is a very important matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. PRAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to that letter I have a report here from the surveyor general of Montana, and I want to read some extracts from that report relative to this amendment. The Surveyor general says:

In relation to surveys payable from the regular appropriation made each year by Congress for surveys and resurveys of public lands, I would state that last year's apportionment for this district was totally inadequate to cover the cost of surveys applied for by actual settlers and authorized for survey by the General Land Office. The amount of said apportionment was $20,000 only.

That was the amount apportioned from the general appropriation in the year 1911.

In consequence of which 35 townships authorized and assigned for survey had to be left unsurveyed last year, as is shown in statement No. 1, although many of the townships included in the different groups were authorized for survey upon settlers' petitions two to three years ago. Petitions for the survey of nine additional townships have been filed to date and authority granted to survey same since the last assignments were made. It is expected that this number will be considerably augmented by petitions which will be filed during the coming months.

Mr. Chairman, in 1910, as the gentleman from Wyoming stated a few minutes ago during the course of his remarks, the State of Montana received an additional appropriation of $100,000, which I was fortunate enough to secure through the Committee on Appropriations, but in 1911 we received no special appropriation and only got $20,000 out of the lump-sum appropriation of $450,000. Now, I want to read you what the surveyor general says about the $100,000 additional appropriation made in 1910. He says this:

Of the $100,000 appropriated for the purpose by act of June 25, 1910, there will be on April 1, 1912, an unexpended balance of approximately $24,000, or $26,000 less than enough to care for townships now authorized for survey, as shown by statement No. 2.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is, in your State?

Mr. PRAY. In my State alone.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. As long as I am on the floor, how long has your State been admitted?

Mr. PRAY. In 1889. Now, for a moment to compare the appropriations carried in the sundry civil bill this year with 1910 and 1911. In 1910 the sundry civil bill carried $800,000 for these surveys, and in 1911 $650,000. This question of public surveys in the West to-day is one of the most important to be considered. In nearly every Western State additional sums are necessary to complete these surveys so that the land can be properly occupied by the settlers, so that settlers upon the public domain will be able to ascertain where their corners are, where the boundaries of their claims are, to enable them to make the proper entries at the various land offices and clearly establish their rights. As before stated, the appropriation for 1910 in the sundry civil bill was $800,000; it was $650,000 in 1911, and only $450,000 in the present bill. I claim that we ought to have this increase.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have only to say that since 1903 Congress has appropriated every dollar the department has requested, and if there is any failure to get funds for this purpose the responsibility is upon the department.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I fully appreciate the position of my friend from Montana, but his State has not been in the Union longer than 23 years. My State has been in the Union for 36 years, and we have got more unsurveyed land than he has got——

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Is not that because a good deal of your land is not good for anything much?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that 1 acre of our land is worth more than 10 in Georgia, and all the Georgians who have come out there will testify to that fact.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought there was a lot of mesquite and other kinds of poor land out there.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Oh, no; all will be occupied. The point I was endeavoring to make was that I was making the same complaint against this committee that the gentleman from Montana was making, and I thought really I had a case against this committee, because I got from the Secretary a letter recommending or advising me to introduce a bill for $150,000 for the survey of our unsurveyed lands.

When I got that letter I supposed, of course, I was fortified and had only to go before this committee to make them realize their dereliction of duty. But when I was faced with the proposition that the chairman here makes—and, by the way, he was in the minority on that day, so far as politics was concerned—I found that something else was necessary. The chairman had more Republicans there than he had Democrats. Otherwise, I would have thought that he was turning me down because I am a Democrat, on the ground that a Democrat had no sort of right to recognition. It did appear, as the chairman of the committee has stated, that this requisition should have been made by the department. Then when I saw myself go up against that kind of a stone wall I immediately wrote to the Secretary, asking him to tell me what he meant by advising me to introduce a bill for $150,000. I told him that it was only necessary for him to make the requisition upon the committee.

I have that letter wherein he declined to do that. It is not in my desk here; it is over in my office. In that letter, I say, he declined to do that and said I had to wait until next year. So that my friends from Montana and Colorado must wait until next year—until this requisition is made upon the committee. Until then we ought not to make any opposition to the appropriation that is here made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Completing field notes of surveys in Minnesota and North Dakota: To complete the drafting and field-note writing pertaining to the surveys in the States of Minnesota and North Dakota caused by the discontinuance of the offices of the surveyors general in those States, $2,920.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to be inserted as a separate paragraph following the figures $2,920, in line 10, of page 100.

The Clerk read as follows:

That authority is hereby granted the Secretary of the Interior to make examinations and resurveys and retracements of public-land lines in townships 10 and 11 north, range 26 east, and township 7 north, range 24 east, Montana meridian, State of Montana.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. PRAY. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves his point of order.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in perfect good faith and for the reason that while there is existing law allowing the Secretary of the Interior to make resurveys, retracements, and reexaminations, being the act of March, 1909, nevertheless the department is so bound and restricted by its regulations that it is now absolutely impossible to get orders for resurveys, retracements, or reexaminations of the public lands where the disposals in a given township by final entry, approved State school selections, and patent exceed 50 per cent of the total area thereof.

I know of no way to get this authority or to have these resurveys executed than by offering an amendment to the sundry civil bill, because the department has absolutely declined to entertain a request of that character and has referred the settlers to Congress for relief.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will show the authorization to the Chair, the ruling might be different.

Mr. PRAY. I am unable to do that, except the law already cited providing for resurveys, and so forth, which is to a great extent rendered inoperative by regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary expenses of survey, appraisal, and sale of abandoned military reservations transferred to the control of the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and any law prior thereto, including a custodian of the ruin of Casa Grande, $10,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The chairman of the committee announced a few moments ago a very extraordinary doctrine. He does not propose, as I understand——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not debating the amendment. I do not propose to have the gentleman lecture me. I am willing, however, to have him discuss the amendment.

Mr. MANN The gentleman from New York ought to be willing to accept a mild lecture once in a while. It will not hurt him any.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All right; I shall not object.

Mr. MONDELL. I assure the gentleman it will not be as severe a lecture as might properly be in view of the provocation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought it would save time. The gentleman will not accomplish anything.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a most extraordinary doctrine. His committee does not propose to listen to the mere representatives of the people. They propose to secure their advice and information and suggestions from the bureaus.

Well, I have thought for a long time that this was getting to be altogether too bureaucratic a Government, but I did not think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations had reached the point where he thought the bureau chiefs were entitled to exercise greater influence before his committee than Members of Congress.

The item we have just passed is a case in point. Several Members of Congress presented to the committee the strongest kind of claims on behalf of their people—on behalf of people seeking homes on the public domain—for additional expenditures. My voice was not joined in that demand before the committee, because the gentleman did not give me an opportunity to be heard. But he said he was going to teach Members of Congress better than to come before the Committee on Appropriations asking for appropriations for worthy objects. They must, hat in hand, go to the departments; they must ask a chief of a bureau somewhere to recommend an appropriation in which they were interested to the Committee on Appropriations. If the bureaus are for it the committee may provide it, but on the request of Members of Congress never. The representatives of the people have no standing before the committee. Their voices are not expected to be heard within the sacred confines of the committee room of the Committee on Appropriations. Our people may seek homes on the public domain and not find them, because the land is not surveyed. That does not matter to the Committee on Appropriations. If the third secretary or the subchief of some bureau has not appeared before the committee and assured the committee that the appropriation is necessary in the public service, no appropriation is recommended, none is secured; that is the policy of this Democratic Committee on Appropriations supported by the Democratic majority in the House.

Great heavens, Mr. Chairman, to what a pass have we come, when the Democratic chairman of a Democratic committee in the House of Representatives declares on the floor of the House that the representatives of the people are no longer to be heard; that the voices of the bureaus are alone potent in the councils of the high and mighty Committee on Appropriations. I am willing to leave the matter as he has left it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say, in justification of the action of the Committee on Appropriations, that it appears that on April 1, 1912, there were in the State of Wyoming public lands surveyed and unappropriated to the extent of 30,000,000 acres; and it did seem to the committee, in view of the fact that since 1909 only about 3,000,000 acres have been taken up in that State, that there was not that screaming necessity for a special appropriation for the survey of public lands in the State of Wyoming that the gentleman from Wyoming would seem to indicate.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course the gentleman from New York, by reading those three lines, receives more information with regard to the needs of the State of Wyoming in that regard than I have been able to receive in 20 years of residence in the State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be, but it shows the wisdom of the committee in not relying too much upon the representations made by a representative of the people seeking to get public funds from the Treasury to benefit his particular constituents.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the analyzing and testing of the coals, lignites, ores, and other mineral fuel substances belonging to or for the use of the United States, $135,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 103, line 12, after the word "States," insert the following: "Including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is elsewhere in the field.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the paragraph be passed and laid aside with the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing the paragraph with the point of order pending?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. After line 12, I want to offer an amendment to come in as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 12, on page 103, insert as a new paragraph the following: "Inquiries and investigations into the mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances, $50,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that item that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the original act contains this language:

The treatment of ores and other mineral substances.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Belonging to or for the use of the United States, and that is provided in the paragraph that we have just read.

Mr. FOSTER. This does not say so, if the gentleman will examine the law. Of course I realize that it was stated when we passed this bill that this was not clearly defined; but I think that under this provision of the law it could be construed as authorizing the work of treatment of ores and other mineral substances.

Mr. MANN. Can we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that in that amendment there is any limitation upon the appropriation at all. The appropriation under the mining act was, as I understood it, confined in the main to investigations of property owned by the United States, and on the public domain. This is an unlimited appropriation for inquiries concerning ores.

Mr. FOSTER. Concerning the treatment of ores and other mineral substances.

Mr. MANN. Without regard to the question of their ownership. Under that item, if it should go into the bill, the department could undertake the treatment of any person's ores, anywhere in the United States. I do not think that was contemplated by the act, and I do not think it is provided in the act. I do not think it was even covered to that extent by the bill that we passed here the other day, which the gentleman made as broad as he could make it.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a limitation in section 5 of the original act which says that the Bureau of Mines shall not have authority to investigate in connection with the inspection or supervision of mines or metallurgic plants in any State, and there is a limitation which prevents employees of the Bureau of Mines from owning stock or an interest in mines. Of course, I agree fully with my colleague [Mr. MANN] that we ought not to go into the question of examining ores belonging to private persons, but this would be spent in accordance with the authority of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois if his amendment would, by implication, repeal the other act?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so, because I think that under the provision which defines some of the functions of the Bureau of Mines, one of which is the treatment of ores and other mineral substances, that is one of the things this Bureau of Mines is expected to do, or has the authority to do. Of course, it is not intended that they shall go into any particular mine and examine the value of the ore, or anything of that kind, but it is more in a general way.

For instance, it might be determined that in certain fields where ore is found in quantities it would be necessary for some investigation and laboratory work to discover the best way to extract the metal from that particular kind of ore. I think the Chair will recognize the fact that in agriculture we do that very largely. The Government demonstrates to the people how they can raise certain crops. That is supposed to be in a general way for the benefit of every person in that particular region where these crops can be grown. That might occur in the South, which would not be of much benefit to the North, or it might occur in the West where it would not be of much benefit to the East.

Now, that is true, and true so far as ore is concerned. Then there is a question of investigating the natural gas. In the West there is great waste of gas and ignorance of the proper way to save this waste, which I think would be taken up in a general way under this provision of the law. I assure the chairman of the committee that it is not my intention, and I would be the last person to advocate going into private mines and doing this work under that provision of the law. I have the law here, which I can furnish the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair heard the gentleman read it, and there is a limitation in it. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois there is no limitation, as suggested by his colleague [Mr. MANN]. The Chair is of the opinion that if there was something in the amendment providing that there should be no conflict between the amendment and the original act by way of a limitation, that it should not go to the investigation of ores in private mines, the ruling might be different.

Mr. FOSTER. This does not say in this section of the law that the property shall belong to the United States in particular.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to read in the law a limit to the appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. The last section of the act does say that it shall not be construed as a grant to any officer employed in the bureau any right or authority in connection with the inspection of mines in any State.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think the amendment offered by him is in accord with the original act?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is, if it comes under the bill at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think that under this appropriation of $50,000, if the amendment should be agreed to, it would apply to property of private owners?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; I think this does not change the law. I think this simply authorizes an investigation in accordance with the act, and that it would be held that the Bureau of Mines could not go beyond the power granted in the original act.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this is somewhat akin to the bill which came up here the other day. I want to say to the members of this committee that we have very many contentions to face——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Colorado to address himself to the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. We have so many contentions in the West with reference to the development of our resources, and I want to say, pertaining to this special amendment, that it seems to me that it is much akin to the one that is now in the bill and that it is germane to the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not any question as to the germaneness of the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I understand the question is of authorization. I have in mind one case where the gases appeared to baffle all the resources of all the experts of Europe as well as here. The mine is known to contain within it the most precious metals, and yet they have never been able to discover any means of suppressing or overcoming the gas so as to enable it to be extracted. In this connection I want to say that in Colorado upon the same hill was first discovered radium.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Colorado that the merits of the question are not under consideration now.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will reserve what I have to say in reference to that. I think that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is germane to the provisions in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment is not subject to a point of order. I understand the point of order was made by the gentleman from New York. The amendment provides for inquiries and investigations into the mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances. It is in almost the exact language of the law which provides for investigations into the methods of mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances.

The amendment follows closely the language of the organic act conferring authority upon the bureau to do the very thing contemplated by the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that there is a conflict between the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and section 5 of the original act. The Chair is also of the opinion, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is a violation of section 5. Section 5 places a limitation which makes it necessary for the Chair to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, after line 12, insert the following:
"Inquiries and investigations into the methods of mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances, $50,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, upon that I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Is not that the identical amendment that we have just passed upon?

Mr. FOSTER. Not quite.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair invites the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that he has quoted the language in the main body of what has just been termed the original act, but it still does not come within the limitation set out in section 5. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, after line 12, insert the following:
"Inquiries and investigations into the methods of mining and treatment of ores and other mineral substances belonging to or for the use of the United States, $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, of course I thought the other amendment was in order, but I will state that within the public-land States in the West there is a great deal of land belonging to the Government and a good deal of it is mineral land. Under this provision of the appropriation bill the Bureau of Mines would be permitted to make such investigation as it deems necessary into the mineral on those lands. There is a great deal of ore and mineral substances in the public lands that belong to the United States. The Bureau of Mines would be able to make investigations into the treatment of those ores and such other investigations as would develop the mining industry of the United States. We realize that within the last few years in some sections of the country the production of the precious metals has depreciated very much. This would help to stimulate the production upon public lands. This also would give opportunity of finding out more about how to extract the metal from these ores, and I believe would be a start in the right direction. I would state that the people of the West, in the metal-producing States, have asked for a number of years that something be done for that section of the country. When this Bureau of Mines was established, it was done largely for the purpose of investigating coal mine accidents, which was proper and right, and I am glad it was made their special business to look after that feature of the work; but I think we have come to a time when there might be some enlargement of the scope of this bureau, and that we might undertake some useful work which these people in the West have asked for, for so long.

We remember that from the public lands, the mining lands of the United States, the mining industry itself has received very little benefit. The proceeds from the sale of public and mining lands has gone into the Treasury or into the reclamation fund or for agricultural purposes, and really the mining industry has not received the benefit which it ought to have received on account of its importance to the general welfare of the country. I believe the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if this matter had been called to his attention a little earlier, would have been willing to place this in the present bill, and I feel that his great desire to do everything he can for the upbuilding of this great industry will prevent him from seriously opposing the amendment. I realize that as chairman of that committee it is necessary for him to make some protest, and I feel that he can not let this go without making a protest in some way, but I feel confident that he will not seriously ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not done me full justice. He should have stated that the committee has increased by 33 per cent the appropriation available for practically the same purpose for which the gentleman offers his amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The item just preceding provides for the analyzing and testing of coals, lignites, ores, and other mineral fuel substances belonging to or for the use of the United States, and appropriates $135,000. The appropriation for the current year is $100,000, and the committee has increased it $35,000 in accordance with the estimate.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman quite sure about his figures?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that I am correct. Considering the liberality of the committee in this respect and its desire to meet the demand for this purpose, it seems that it comes with poor grace from gentlemen who have been treated so well to try and increase this appropriation further by an additional 50 per cent over the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman will realize that the $135,000 will be all taken up in the testing of coals and lignites.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the committee has acted wisely in granting this increase, and I want to compliment it for the good work it has done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman should have profited by the example of the committee and not have attempted at this time to practically repeat the appropriation for the same purpose. The Bureau of Mines has done some valuable work. The disposition of the committee is to give it that assistance that it properly should have, but in view of the fact that the gentleman was really endeavoring to obtain an appropriation for a work not authorized and was unable to do that, he should not attempt to increase far beyond the amount requested by the Bureau of Mines itself the appropriation for another purpose amply provided for.

I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for one minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be notified at the end of a minute or two minutes. This appropriation for the Bureau of Mines is apparently increased from $475,500, if my figures are correct, to $536,100, although I think those totals are not quite accurate. Now, the Bureau of Mines is doing very well. It ought to move along somewhat slowly. It can not reform the earth at once or in a minute, and if it makes haste too rapidly it will not make good progress. I do not believe there is any occasion for increasing the appropriation by $50,000, as suggested. I was sorry the gentleman did not offer his proposition to come in under the appropriation carried in the bill. If it is necessary to do that work, it can be done under the appropriation provided in the bill. There is no occasion for expending $50,000 to test metals belonging to the United States. We have them tested now in many places.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, if I have the other two minutes I want to say that the gentleman from Illinois is entirely mistaken about that. We have more unoccupied and unappropriated mineral land than is already taken, and the way the titles are obtained to-day to the mineral land is by way of inspection. We can not get our titles to the mineral land like we used to, but the inspector has to come along, and he must take his samples of our prospect holes, and he takes them to the assayer to determine whether we have a mineral claim that is worthy of obtaining a title, so therefore, as I said the other day, truly this provision is in the interest of the Government to determine whether it will part with its title, and I think, as I said also, it might be extended to the question of air and the gas, and determine about the very valuable minerals that have never been discovered before until they were discovered in the State of Colorado. I think we ought to have an additional appropriation with reference to the metalliferous mines, and it has been determined, as said by the chairman of the committee, that all of this money has been spent in the coal fields. Now let us have some of this appropriation appropriated for the development of the western metalliferous mines. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment may be adopted. I think the amendment, while it is more restricted than I wish it were, is broader and provides for other work than that covered by the items in the bill. I think it is highly important that the Bureau of Mines should have this sum of money for the purpose of investigating the minerals on the public land and minerals for the use of the Government. The money can be very profitably, properly, and usefully spent. I do not believe that the work contemplated can be carried on under the language in lines 10, 11, and 12, page 103, so that the amendment is necessary in order to have this work carried on at all. The appropriation to which the gentleman from New York referred I do not think is available for the work contemplated under the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER of Colorado) there were—ayes 19, noes 19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one mine inspector for duty in Alaska, $3,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What occasion is there for a mine inspector in Alaska?

Mr. FOSTER. I will state that we have some mines in Alaska——

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have coal mines and placer mines and other mines.

Mr. FOSTER. The great Treadwell mine is there.

Mr. MANN. I judge there is no great occasion in Alaska for anybody investigating placer mines, and I am sure for nobody investigating coal mines.

Mr. FOSTER. It is authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. No; there is no authorization of law for it at all. There was an act in 1891 authorizing two mine inspectors for Territories, who were authorized to inspect coal and other mines of the District of Alaska, but I think not at this salary, and I notice the next item. May I ask the gentleman, in connection with this item about the next item, which is for a per diem expenses of an inspector in Alaska. The per diem is $5 a day for one inspector and his traveling expenses, and carries up a total of $3,500. Of course, if he receives his per diem for every working day it would amount to considerably less than $2,000. How much sleeping-car fares can a man expend in Alaska?

Mr. HAWLEY. They sleep six months up there.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from New York can tell you about that; he can tell you how much sleeping-car fares they pay in Alaska.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know; I have never traveled on a sleeping car in Alaska.

Mr. MANN. I have reserved the point of order against the mine inspector for duty in Alaska, and in connection with that item is the other item of $3,500 to pay the per diem of $5 per day and traveling expenses, which seems like a very large sum to pay a man a salary of $3,000 and then $3,500 extra as per diem and traveling expenses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the law fixes the compensation at $3,000 for one inspector of mines in Alaska——

Mr. MANN. Where is the law that fixes the compensation at $3,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no law.

Mr. MANN. No; that is it. On the other hand, there is a law, I think, fixing the compensation of a mine inspector in the Territory at $2,500.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. Well, the appropriation last year was $2,500, $5,000 for the two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Five thousand dollars, and this man is now in the service and now doing work. We put a provision in here to prevent certain payments to him which otherwise he would receive. The statement was made that it is very essential in placer mines in Alaska to have an inspector there, more essential than in any other place, and the committee did not feel justified in refusing the appropriation necessary to continue that service.

Mr. MANN. This provision in reference to——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The last provision of $3,000 per year was provided in the last Congress.

Mr. MANN. This provision for mining inspectors in the Territories is under an act passed more than 20 years ago. At that time there was no Bureau of Mines and Mining. There was no appropriation made by Congress in reference to the subject except for two inspectors for the inspection of mines in the Territories, where we had the power. Since that time we have created the Bureau of Mines and Mining, and this bill carries over half a million dollars for the inspection of mines and work in connection with them. I can see no occasion for going back and following after the law of 1891. I supposed that the law gave the Secretary of the Interior the authority for appointing a mining inspector for Alaska. We have come to a more recent date.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have the provision extending the law to Alaska. It is in the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911. This provision is:

For salaries of two mining inspectors authorized by the act approved March 3, 1911, for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories, at $2,000 per annum each, $4,000; and said inspectors are hereby authorized to inspect coal and other mines in the District of Alaska, to which District the provisions of said act are hereby extended and made applicable.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I have the same law in my hand, and not only that law but the current law. But that does not authorize the employment of a mining inspector in Alaska at $3,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it does at $2,000.

Mr. MANN. It would authorize the employment of a mining inspector in the Territories at $2,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The compensation paid now is $3,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. I do not know under what authority that sum is being paid. There is no appropriation for it and there is no such officer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriation is made for a man in Alaska at $3,000. The one who was receiving $2,000 is no longer in the service. This is to provide for the man now in the service who has been receiving $3,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. I think they ought to be provided for out of the lump-sum appropriation that we make for the Bureau of Mines and Mining. That is where it belongs. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence at a rate not exceeding $5 per day when absent on official business from his designated headquarters, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said inspector, including necessary sleeping-car fares, $3,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph. It is in the same condition as the other one.

The CHAIRMAN. The burden is on the committee to produce the authorization for it. The committee producing none, the Chair will sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase or lease of the necessary land, where and under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, for the headquarters of five mine-rescue cars and for the construction of the necessary railway sidings on the same, $4,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept any suitable land or lands that may be donated for said purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 104, line 3, after the word "purpose," insert the words "or the donation of any land or building, or the use of any land or building, that may be suitable for experimental work of the Bureau of Mines, except that such donations shall be reported to Congress and shall involve no expenditure on the part of the Government except as may be authorized by Congress."

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. We are perfectly willing to argue it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman might have been right in making the point of order against the whole paragraph, but he can not make it now.

Mr. MANN. The item in the bill which is subject to the point of order, and to which the point of order was not made, is the item authorizing the acceptance of land for railway sidings for mine rescue-car stations. Now, it is proposed to add to that a provision authorizing the acceptance or donation of lands or buildings suitable for experimental work.

The CHAIRMAN. To what is the gentleman addressing himself? To the amendment?

Mr. MANN. The point of order to the amendment.

Mr. GARNER. No point of order was made against the paragraph.

Mr. PAGE. There was no point of order made against the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I was admitting that the paragraph was subject to the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is not admitted.

Mr. MANN. If it was not, of course the amendment is out of order. I was admitting that for the purpose of the argument. But the donation that they are authorized to accept in the paragraph which was subject to the point of order was simply land for the purpose of railway sidings in connection with mine and rescue-car stations.

Now, that does not authorize, under the rules, an amendment which covers another subject, and the amendment offered by the gentleman is the acceptance of a donation of any land or buildings for experimental stations. It is an entirely different proposition. The Chair made the ruling the other day that, although an original provision might be subject to a point of order, it did not authorize another amendment on any other subject or extending the scope of the provision.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph being subject to a point of order—the paragraph which has just been read—an amendment which otherwise would be subject to a point of order is not subject to a point of order now. Inasmuch as that point was not made to the paragraph which was not in order, I think this amendment is clearly in order.

Then, this refers to mine-rescue stations, mine-rescue cars, necessary railroad sidings, and so forth. Now, this has reference to the experimental mine stations, and has to do with the same class of work—that is, it is associated with it in that these mine-rescue stations are for the purpose of providing relief in case of mine accidents. What is sought to be obtained in this amendment is that the Government shall have the right to accept certain lands or property that may be offered for the purpose of establishing mine experimental stations in reference to mine accidents. So I think they are very intimately associated, and that for those reasons the amendment should be held in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I assume that the idea of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is a practical one, the having of this station that he contemplates as an auxiliary to the car on the siding.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Supplementing the work of the Bureau of Mines in its rescue or relief service?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; certainly. It is to make experiments along those lines. For instance, at Pittsburgh there is an experimental station. At that station they make experiments in order to determine the effect of explosions, what produces explosions, what prevents them, and so on, and that goes along with the work of the mine-rescue cars and rescue stations.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I think there can be no question but that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is germane to the paragraph and supplements it, and really has for its object the carrying out of the intention of Congress in its rescue work for the aid of miners in case of accident; and if it is proper to accept land for sidings for a rescue car, it must follow that it is just as competent to accept land for a shed or a building or a station, in which this kind of rescue work may be had, in connection with the work that is done by the rescue car on the siding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the principle that although the paragraph itself may have been subject to a point of order, an amendment perfecting it is the greatest extent to which it may go; and while the paragraph itself may be new and unauthorized legislation, additional legislation is not in order. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the Bureau of Mines, $533,100.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the figures on that line need changing, and I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals—that he make that general request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We always ask that as to all these bills, that the Clerk may have the right to correct the totals.

Mr. MANN. We might as well ask that now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that at the end of the bill the Clerk be authorized to rearrange the totals to conform to what is done.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Education in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, to provide for the education and support of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; for erection, repair, and rental of school buildings; for textbooks and industrial apparatus; for pay and necessary traveling expenses of general agent, assistant agent, superintendents, teachers, physicians, and other employees, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, $200,000; so much of which sum as may be necessary for the purchase of supplies shall be immediately available: Provided, That no person employed hereunder as special agent or inspector, or to perform any special or unusual duty in connection herewith, shall receive as compensation exceeding $200 per month, in addition to actual traveling expenses and per diem not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence, when absent on duty from his designated and actual post of duty: Provided, That of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $7,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the typographical error at the end of line 4, on page 105.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the typographical error at the end of line 4 will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yellowstone National Park: For the administration and protection of the Yellowstone National Park, $5,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph just read may be passed over for a few moments, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] wants to be heard on it, and he is temporarily absent from the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

No expenditure for construction of administration or other buildings shall hereafter be made in any national park except under express authority of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon that paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman understands that provision, I think he will favor it. I think everyone interested in the national parks will favor it. In some of the national parks the revenues are permanently appropriated for improvements. Complaint has been made that inadequate appropriations have been made for those improvements, and yet in the Yellowstone National Park it was disclosed that more than $23,000 has been accumulated from the revenues, the intention being to accumulate $50,000 to erect an administration building. The superintendent of the Yellowstone National Park at present resides in the fort with the troops. He is an Army officer. The records are all there. The desire of another department of the Government to eliminate the Army from participation in and control of these parks is responsible for the accumulation of this fund out of the revenues which are supposed to be utilized in maintaining the park, in order that the accumulated fund may be used for the construction of this administration building. At one of the other parks $7,000 or $8,000 has been accumulated for the same purpose. The most important improvements in the park are the building of roads and trails, and it being disclosed that two parks are in a position where these funds have been segregated from the purposes for which they were contemplated, for the erection of very expensive buildings, the committee thought it wise to put this limitation into the bill.

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, I agree with much or all that the gentleman has said. Yet it must be necessary in these parks sometimes to construct small buildings, outbuildings, or something of that kind, for which express authority from Congress would not be asked.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it would in this way, that the appropriation would include so much for a lodge or something of that kind. That is the only way to prevent this abuse. Here they have been for three or four years accumulating this money——

Mr. MANN. I was going to ask the gentleman whether it would not prevent the abuse if he would put a limitation upon the amount that could be expended for any building? The gentleman does not desire to make an express appropriation for the building of an outbuilding or some other structure that may cost four or five or six hundred dollars, I take it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Why not provide that no building paid for in this way shall cost to exceed $1,000 or $500?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not do much good, because I have on my desk a request for some four hundred and odd dollars, where a man made a contract with the Forestry Service for a building to cost $900, although the law was that no building should be contracted for in excess of $500.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is partly correct about that. I know about the case. There was a question whether the law governed that case or cases of that kind. The department made a contract with a man to build a building for nine hundred and odd dollars. The department believed that it had the authority to make the contract, that the $500 provision did not apply, but the comptroller ruled that the $500 limitation did apply.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The genleman knows that if there was any question about it the department, under the law, could have invited the opinion of the comptroller in advance and got a decision.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that my knowledge of the case comes from the fact that the Committee on Claims has unanimously reported a bill to pay the four hundred and odd dollars. It seemed to me perfectly plain that no criticism of the department or anybody else could be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think there would be a criticism if there was any doubt about the expenditure of the money when they had the power to call for an opinion of the comptroller in advance and did not do it.

Mr. MANN. That may all be, but they do not call for an opinion from the comptroller every time some one wants to build a $900 building. I suppose the comptroller was right, although I doubt whether the decision was correct, if he had not made it. He settles the law. If we had the provision in the bill before us no one would have supposed that that limitation applied to a building in the case that he held it to apply to. Now, why not put a limitation on this provision?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to the gentleman putting in such a limitation.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am in doubt whether to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can ask it of anybody and see if anybody can answer it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I am much in doubt of getting a correct answer, for the two gentlemen disagree too much. I am under the impression that there is an appropriation asked for to maintain these parks as well as the national monuments. I think the appropriation asked for is $75,000. I see the gentleman from New York shrugs his shoulders. Whenever an appropriation is mentioned the gentleman from New York shrugs his shoulders, and I think it would be the same with 75 cents as if it was $75,000. The gentleman from New York has the atlas of the world upon his shoulders at the present time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very few persons can shrug their shoulders with the atlas of the world on them.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It is not because the atlas weighs so much, but because there might be an untoward wind that might drive the atlas off, and then what in the world would become of us?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, ask the question.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Is it not true that there is an appropriation asked for both for the maintenance of parks and national monuments, and would not that cover this appropriation that is in here, and why should you make an exception of national parks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All of the national parks are specially provided for. There is a special appropriation made for the various national parks and the monuments for which there is any expenditure made.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The point is that there is a bill here asking for a general appropriation for not only the present national parks, but for the future national parks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not familiar with that bill. There is a bill which has been introduced for the creation of a bureau in the Department of the Interior to have charge of all of the national parks, but that would be merely an administrative bureau.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I do not want the gentleman to understand me as objecting to this appropriation. I believe in all appropriations for national parks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the following amendment be agreeable to the gentleman from New York: To insert, after the word "building," in line 11, "costing in the case of any building exceeding $1,000," so the paragraph would read:

No expenditure for the construction of administration or other building costing in the case of any building exceeding $1,000 shall hereafter be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would make it $500.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that I have any objection to that. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order and offer this amendment: In line 11, after the word "building," insert the words "costing in case of any building exceeding $500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On and after July 1, 1912, permanent appropriations heretofore made of revenues derived from national parks shall be expended only for construction, improvement, and repair of roads, trails, and bridges in the respective parks and for no other purposes whatever.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. Does the gentleman think that this provision is desirable?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The revenues do not amount to much, and it is important in this respect. There is a desire to use the revenues where permanently appropriated in the repair of roads; there is a decision of the comptroller that wherever a special appropriation is made for roads the revenues can not be used for that purpose. We wish to do two things by this. We wish to compel the expenditure of the accumulated surplus on these particular things most important, and to make it possible to expend the revenues on roads, trails, and bridges, in this instance, where specific appropriation has been made.

In the Yellowstone Park the appropriation for roads is under the War Department, and the revenues collected are under the Interior Department. The Interior Department wished to transfer a portion of the revenues for making imperative repairs to the roads, and it is impossible to do so.

Mr. MANN. Are the collections used by the Interior Department in payment of the ordinary expenses? Is not a part of the money derived now from the Yellowstone Park used for the ordinary expenses under the Interior Department, or is the entire money turned over to the War Department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what it should be, but I think in the Yellowstone Park there are only two guides outside of the Army.

Mr. MANN. Who pays them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are paid out of a special appropriation made for them, which the gentleman will find on page 106, lines 8 and 9, of the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is the administration. I will withdraw the point of order, but, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in line 14, to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yosemite National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement of the Yosemite National Park and the construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads other than toll roads, $50,000.

Mr. NEEDHAM and Mr. SHERLEY rose.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 106, after line 23, insert the following:

"So much of the appropriation of $12,000 made in the sundry civil act approved June 25, 1910, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to examine into the data required to be submitted by the city of San Francisco with reference to a water supply for that city from Lake Eleanor and adjacent watersheds partially within the Yosemite Park, or from any other available sources of water supply, and to collect such independent data and information as may be necessary in the premises, including all incidental expenses of the officers of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army detailed by the Secretary of War as an advisory board to the Secretary of the Interior in connection therewith, as remains unexpended on the 30th day of June, 1912, is hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year 1913 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue such work during that period.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment, but I desire to offer one in advance of it affecting the amount of the appropriation. Is it in order now, or would it be in order after this amendment is agreed to?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have this amendment adopted. I do not know what the gentleman is going to propose. This represents the view of the committee and is the extent to which the committee feels justified in going.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I simply desire to offer an amendment adding $50,000 to the amount already appropriated, and thought it better be done in advance of the gentleman's provision. I do not want to lose any of my rights.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman would better offer his amendment now.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in line 23, page 106, the figures "$50,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 106, line 23, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, the estimates submitted by the Interior Department for the Yosemite National Park for the next fiscal year amount to $274,820. The committee has recommended $50,000, which is less than one-fifth of the amount estimated. The situation with respect to the Yosemite National Park is this: Some years ago the Yosemite Valley Railroad Co. built a railroad from the city of Merced to El Portal, which is upon the park line. From El Portal to the Yosemite Valley there was no wagon road to the valley. The railroad company built a wagon road at an expense to them of $100,000, and the Government of the United States has had the use of this road since. The travel which goes into the Yosemite National Park by rail goes over the Yosemite Valley Railroad and thence by stagecoach from the end of the railroad into the valley proper.

The $100,000 which it cost to construct this road was paid by the railroad company. It is not a well-built road. It is narrow and runs along the canyon of the Merced River, and during this past tourist year one person was killed and several were injured in passing over the road. The fact of the matter is that the road is not in a safe condition, and of the estimates submitted a part are for the purpose of making this road safe and the balance for trails and roads to reach the principal scenic features of the park.

I understand the Government, in fixing the basis of concession charges, exacts of the stage company for going over this road $1 for every tourist carried. In other words, the Government obtains for every tourist who goes into the park over this road a concession charge of $1. The Government also receives a concession charge for each tourist from the hotels and camps.

In the year 1915 we expect to have a great number of people who will visit the State of California. Tickets sold to the exposition in San Francisco during that year will include a trip to the Yosemite National Park.

It is in the interest of the Government, in the interest of the revenues of the Government, that the roads of the Yosemite National Park should be put into such condition that the people who will visit the park may do so safely and comfortably. It is imperatively necessary that we begin now to make these improvements. That is the reason why the estimate of $274,820 was submitted by the Interior Department. It will be an investment, in my judgment, and will bring to the Government during the year 1915 alone, over $100,000. It seems to me that the amendment I offer should be adopted without question, because unless we do improve these roads it will be impossible to transport the crowds that will desire to visit the park during that year.

In the five minutes allowed me I can not go into a description of the beauties of the Yosemite Park or the desire of the tourists to visit it when visiting the State of California. Its fame and beauty is such that there is no doubt but that a large number of people who go to San Francisco to visit the exposition in 1915 will desire to include in the trip a visit to this wonderland. I trust the Committee of the Whole will adopt the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the committee has recommended an appropriation of the exact sum that was given last year and the exact sum that was given the year before, if you exclude from it $12,000 that was to provide a part of the sprinkling apparatus which has now been supplied. If the Committee on Appropriations listened to the demands that were made upon it in connection with the public parks, there would be no limit to the sums that we would be called upon to appropriate. There have been asked, not only for this park, but for several others, sums three and four and five and six times the amount heretofore appropriated by Congress. It is a very serious question as to how far we should go in the development of the various park systems that we have. Every time there is discovered in any of the States any property that, by any stretch of the imagination, can be thought to be desirable for a national park and therefore maintained at national expense, local pressure is brought to bear to induce Congress to appropriate, first, money for the purchase and afterwards for the maintenance of it as a national park. Yet the fact remains that a very insignificant number of people, very much less than a fraction of 1 per cent of the people of America, annually visit these national parks. For my own part I believe the time has come in America when we should impose upon those citizens who get the special benefit of the parks some of the burdens of them, and I should like to see adopted a provision by which every person entering these parks would be charged a reasonable entrance fee.

I appreciate that the average Member on first blush would say that we ought not to require a payment to visit a national park, but when you consider the expense in attending a park is such as to make a fee of a dollar or two simply an incident to the other expenses, it would have the effect not of deterring anybody but simply of providing some revenue to enable us to more rapidly improve the park.

Mr. WARBURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WARBURTON. In talking with the superintendent of the parks, and also the man who has charge of the national parks, Col. Thompson, it has been suggested, which I think probably meets the gentleman's suggestion, that when you give a license to hotel men, for instance, in a park, you should require them to collect, say, 20 cents a day from each visitor. Some go into the park to remain there three or four days or a week, and others remain only a day. I think that has been done in the case of Mount Rainier National Park. There is a revenue collected nearly equivalent to $1 from every man, woman, and child who has entered the park ever since it has been established. It seems to me it could be done in that way, and very easily, even if you put it at a small amount, say 10 or 20 cents a day.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to any plan that will occasion the people who use the park to pay some of the burden of the maintenance of the park. Now, the point is this, that a good deal of the agitation and what you hear described as public sentiment in connection with parks is simply a sentiment of local communities that are beneficiaries of the park system or of the railroads that naturally want to advertise the park and induce travel there in order that they may get the revenues for hauling people across the continent, and at this time there has been an undue pressure under the plea of the exposition at San Francisco that therefore we should make elaborate improvements. Here is an estimate for $274,000 for roads and trails in the Yosemite. Manifestly the committee would not have been warranted, in view of the policy of Congress in the past, in appropriating any such sum. The appropriation in 1903 was $6,000 for the Yosemite; in 1904, it was $6,000; in 1905, it was $5,400; in 1906, it was $5,400; then a special act of $20,000; then in 1907, it was $5,750; in 1908, it was $30,000; in 1909, it was $30,000; in 1910, it was $30,000; in 1911, $62,000, $12,000 of which I have explained; in 1912, $50,000. The committee this year has recommended the maximum sum that has ever been allowed by Congress for the Yosemite if we exclude the $12,000 for the special purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I know the gentleman has traveled extensively. Will he tell this committee where in the world, not only in the world but anywhere in our country, when you went into a park you had to pay an admission fee?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; I recall several in England I visited where I paid admission, and I recall one not owned by the Government in Colorado where I paid admission.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Please tell me where in England you went into a park where you had to pay a fee to get in.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not recall the place, but I recall what is known as the Torrent Walk, in a park in England, I had to pay an entrance fee, and I am quite sure that is true of some places in Switzerland. But that is neither here nor there.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is, to the guide?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it was not to a guide. But that is neither here nor there, whether England or the other countries do it or not. If it is right I think it ought to be done, and if it is not right we should not do it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I do not think it is right here. I do not think there is a necessity for going to that sort of thing, even if other countries do.

Mr. SHERLEY. The proposition is simply this: Here is the Yellowstone, our greatest national park. Last year 23,000 people attended the Yellowstone National Park. Now, out of 90,000,000 people 23,000 enjoyed that park. Does the gentleman think it would be any great hardship to charge those people in addition to the sums that they voluntarily pay to the transportation companies an entrance fee of a dollar a person?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No; I am going to get my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to answer the gentleman upon that.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether, after all, the ques ion is, how will people consider it who will be charged a direct charge. The gentleman of course would not charge United States citizens for coming into the Capitol to inspect it. We would not think of that. I do not think anyone would think of charging people for going to see the Congressional Library, although it is well worth seeing. We would not think of that, not because people might not properly be charged for the maintenance, but because it would appear to them as a niggardly and stingy act on the part of the Government. If it could be done indirectly as suggested by the gentleman from Washington, perhaps——

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I am not so much concerned about whether it is done directly or indirectly as I am about this. It is perfectly manifest that Congress is not going to be willing with the present light attendance at these parks to expend the money that gentlemen representing these parks insist ought to be expended, and the result is that we must proceed along the lines we are proceeding, which are very slow, or we must provide some other method of adding to the revenues that are to be spent on the parks.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Is it not true we are now getting indirectly this revenue by charging the transportation companies for the privilege of transporting passengers?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is true that last year we got $35,000, all of which is expended, in addition to the money which is appropriated.

Mr. NEEDHAM. That is quite an amount—$35,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and that is in addition to what we have appropriated. And yet the estimates call for $270,000 this year for the Yosemite National Park, away beyond anything that the committee would be warranted in giving.

Now, I had the pleasure of visiting the Yosemite. I appreciate the beauty of that park, and I realize how easy it is for any gentleman, knowing its beauty and representing the State in which it is situated, to urge upon Congress the building of any number of roads and trails in that park in order that its beauties may be enhanced and the more easily seen by tourists; and yet I submit to the House that the committee would not be warranted in recommending the appropriation of anything like the sum that is asked for, in view of the policy that has been pursued heretofore.

I agree that in the past there has been an absence of an enlightened policy. We ought, perhaps, to create a head to look after all the national parks and devise a system for their improvement along fixed lines. But under the circumstances the committee did not feel warranted in going fast.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Did not the committee some years ago adopt the policy in regard to the Yellowstone National Park of making a lump-sum appropriation of a million dollars a year, and were not roads built in pursuance of that policy?

Mr. SHERLEY. Congress appropriated at different times large sums for the improvement of the Yellowstone, and yet the Yellowstone people to-day are just as loud, and perhaps a little louder, in their protests against the treatment that Congress has given to that park than the gentleman from California with respect to the Yosemite; and if to-day we gave every dollar that is asked for here, we would still be confronted with just the same number of demands. The fact is that the demand is measured by the liberality, and the more that is given the more they ask. The railroads, that particularly profit by it, and a few magazines that want to publish special articles on the beauties of America continue to present what they claim is public opinion on that subject, and yet in fact there is so little public opinion upon the subject that the attendance in those parks is but a negligible quantity.

Mr. WARBURTON. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, as one of the Members who have a park asking for appropriations, that I agree, in a large measure, with the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. As a matter of fact, visitors in the three larger parks now are assessed the equivalent of a dollar a head for every man, woman, or child who enters the park. In the Yosemite Park last year the Government received $3 a head for every man, woman, and child that entered it.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, is not this the accurate statement: Not a dollar was charged for entering the park, but a charge was made against the automobiles using a certain road that led to the park?

Mr. WARBURTON. I do not know how that is with respect to the Yosemite, but that is the way it is done in the park I am interested in—Mount Rainier National Park.

Mr. SHERLEY. We do not charge people for entering the parks?

Mr. WARBURTON. No. We are glad to pay for entering the park. We do not object to that, but when we do that we want to have a road improved. Last year 700 automobiles entered the park, to which they contributed $3,500.

Mr. SHERLEY. Where did that $3,500 go?

Mr. WARBURTON. That will go to the improvement of the national park during the coming year.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WARBURTON. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman think that the contributions of the automobiles equal the damage done by them to the roads?

Mr. WARBURTON. I think they do. In the park I am interested in I am sure it is true. If you give us a road, the park will be self-sustaining from the charges made to people entering the park. It can be done in an indirect way. It is done in that way now. For instance, the hotel keepers in those parks pay so much license for running the hotels. The people who operate a 'bus pay so much for the privilege of operating a 'bus; and if you enter with your own vehicle and drive in with a team or an automobile, you pay so much for entering the park. We are not asking for a reduction on that point at all. The charge is equivalent in the three larger parks to $1 a head. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM] offers an amendment, on page 106, line 23, to strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000." The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. A division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], which was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the new paragraph offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, it is a long amendment to reappropriate money for a survey in California for Lake Eleanor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the provision with regard to the Yellowstone National Park, lines 8 to 12, on page 106. I desire to offer an amendment at the end of line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 106, after line 9, insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of War to prepare an estimate of the cost per mile and the aggregate cost of widening and surfacing the main-traveled roads and bridges of the Yellowstone National Park, to make them suitable and safe for the use of both teams and motor vehicles, $10,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is asked in order that the roads in the Yellowstone Park may be surveyed and investigated with a view of admitting automobiles to the park. The automobile owners of the country have for years been seeking entrance to the Yellowstone Park and to the system of park roads. The Secretary of the Interior and others having charge of the park have been of the opinion that if motor vehicles were alowed in the park in the present condition of the roads there would be danger of serious accidents. At some points the roads are rather narrow. At some points there are very sharp curves. It would probably be necessary either to provide for additional roads at certain points or for the widening of the roads in order to enable those using the park with automobiles to go through it without interfering with the park coaches and with the ordinary travel of those who use their own vehicles.

This is the largest and the finest of all the national parks. It has a wonderful system of roads and there is a constantly increasing demand on the part of those fortunate enough to own automobiles to be allowed to utilize the park. I think it would greatly increase travel to the park if automobiles were allowed in it. Automobile owners are to a constantly increasing extent making long trips across the country with their machines. The coming of the San Francisco Panama Exposition is going to lead to a largely increased transcontinental travel by the use of automobiles, and it ought to be possible for these owners of automobiles to go through the national park. As the matter now stands, they can reach the borders of the park with their machines. It is impossible for them to go through the park with their machines, and therefore they are required to make a long detour of several hundred miles in order to view the park and proceed on their journey with their automobiles.

I think the amendment is not subject to a point of order. In any event, I hope the point of order will not be insisted upon and that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the ground that the amendment is new legislation and not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 106, after line 9, insert the following:

"For the improvement and repair of the east and south roads into Yellowstone National Park through the national forests, $50,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order; that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman make the point or reserve it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I make the point. The appropriations for the building of roads in the forest reserves are carried in the agricultural bill. We are now under the Interior Department, and there is no authority for an appropriation of this kind on this bill at all, and particularly at this place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would very much prefer to discuss the merits of the amendment, rather than the point of order. If the gentleman insists on making the point, I want to say that the amendment is clearly not subject to a point of order. It is true that these roads are partly within a forest reserve. The words "within the forest reserves" are used only to indicate a certain portion of these roads. My amendment does not apply to the improvement of the entire length of the east and south roads. It applies only to the improvement of the parts of the east and south roads that are in the forest reserve. The east and south roads are part of the Yellowstone system of park roads. Appropriations for their improvement and repair have been carried in the sundry civil bill for the last 10 years. There has not been a sundry civil bill in that length of time, except this one, which has not carried an item of this kind for the improvement of the east and south roads.

A short time ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objected to appropriations which were simply requested by representatives of the people. He wanted some higher authority for the granting of these appropriations. In this particular case I have a recommendation from the superintendent of the park for this appropriation. It is too long to read, but I shall insert it in the RECORD. He itemizes the needed repairs and improvements, totaling approximately $50,000. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT,
Yellowstone Park, Wyo., January 17, 1912.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, transmitting copy of bill (H. R. 14475) appropriating $50,000 for the improvement of the East and South Roads into Yellowstone Park, together with copy of a letter from Hon. F. W. MONDELL in relation thereto, and after conferring with the United States Engineer Department in the park and securing notes on the roads in question the following is submitted:

As to the East Road in the forest reserve:

The East Road, together with the bridges and culverts, were put in a fair condition of repair during the season of 1911. In the regular estimate for park roads for the fiscal year 1913, the sum of $4,500 was included for improvement of this approach, but this amount was calculated to cover the necessary repairs to the road, bridges, and culverts only. To replace the bridges on the North Fork and Elk Creek Fork, as suggested by Mr. MONDELL, by new wooden bridges with concrete abutments would cost about $12,000 additional. This road is used considerably by automobiles, and a few "turning-out" places constructed at frequent intervals along the narrow portion in the passes would add greatly to the safety of passing teams. Much in this line could be done for $1,500. Total needed for East Road, $18,000.

As to the South Road in the forest reserve:

From the southern boundary of the park to Moran, Wyo., a distance of 24 miles, and from Moran to Jackson, Wyo., 24 miles, the roads are in fair condition except that the bridges and culverts need repairing or replacing. From Moran to Dubois, Wyo., 70 miles, the bridges and culverts need repairing, and, in addition, if the road is to be made passable for automobiles the location must be changed in places in order to reduce the grades, and many small streams that are now forded by teams must be provided with bridges. I am informed that this part of the road is in very poor shape; that the grades in many places are excessive—20 to 40 per cent and even as high as 45 per cent in a few places. It is also stated that these grades could be reduced to 15 per cent without increasing the distance appreciably. In the annual estimate for roads and bridges in the park for 1913 the sum of $1,500 was included for these 118 miles of road, but this was intended only to provide for a crew to go over them in the spring and make necessary repairs, and not for material improvement in the way of cutting down grades or supplying new bridges. The Engineer Department estimates that the necessary repairs could be made, the grades cut down to 15 per cent, and new bridges furnished where necessary, so that the road would be passable for automobiles for $30,000.

This makes a total of $48,000 needed for the East and South Roads if they are to be put in condition for automobile travel.

As to the necessity for and advisability of the enactment of the legislation contemplated in the bill, I can only say that the necessity is apparent if it is considered advisable to keep these roads open at all, and it is well known that the more excellent roads there are leading into the park the more popular and accessible the park becomes.

Very respectfully,

L. M. BRETT,
Lieutenant Colonel First Cavalry, Acting Superintendent.

My amendment is drawn for the purpose of providing for the improvements and betterments which the superintendent of the park has recommended. The east and south roads are the most picturesque public roads in the United States. One of them passes through the famous Jacksons Hole country into the park from the south. The other passes into the park from the east, through the Hoodoo Mountain country, past the great Shoshone Dam, the highest in the world; and it is probably the finest 60 miles of road in America, built under appropriations carried in the sundry civil bill and repaired under appropriations carried in this bill.

There is no other way in which the improvements of these roads can be continued except by an item in this bill. For a considerable distance the roads pass through forest reserves. That does not change their character; they are a part of the system of park roads, and appropriations for park roads will be used to a certain extent on these roads. But there is an urgent necessity for improvement of the portion of these roads that lie in the forest reserves. Therefore I have drawn the amendment so it will be in addition to the general appropriation for park roads, but still an appropriation for park roads, and therefore not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, on page 63 in this bill is a provision, under the head of Yellowstone National Park, for the maintenance and repair of improvements, $70,000, which would be the only point, if any point in the bill, where the gentleman's amendment would be in order. But the fact that there has been in this bill in the past various items for the improvement of roads through the forest reserve in Yellowstone Park, while it speaks a good deal for the zeal and diligence of the gentleman in getting appropriations, it does not, in any sense, show the law for the provision.

There is carried now half a million dollars in the argricultural bill for the purpose of improving roads through the forest reserve. It has never been held that any law exists authorizing in this bill such an item, and the gentleman has cited no authority, but simply made the statement that this was in order, and I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment striking out the words "through the forest reserve."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 106, after line 9, insert the following:

"For the improvement and repair of the eastern and south roads in the Yellowstone National Park, $50,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on two grounds; one is, that there is nothing to show that these roads are in the national park, and therefore in order, and the other is that if in order on this bill it would only be in order on page 63 of the bill, where there is provision made under the War Department. The building of roads and the improvement of roads is not under the Department of the Interior, but under the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the words stricken out do not relieve it from being subject to the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard. The east road has been so known for years——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Chair having ruled, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood that the Chair desired further information. The gentleman said there was nothing in the appropriation to indicate that the roads are in the park. But the gentleman knows that the roads are in the park. East road, I was going to explain to the Chair, begins at the outlet of the Yellowstone Lake, crosses the Yellowstone River on a bridge built under an appropriation identical in language to this, extends from that point easterly through Silver Pass to the eastern border of the park, and thence through the forest reserve. The south road begins at Yellowstone Lake and extends south to the southern boundary of the park, just above Jackson Lake. These roads are a part of the park system. It is true that they extend beyond the boundaries of the park, and if this item were adopted there could be no part of the appropriation used outside of the park, the fact still remains that it would be available for the part of the road within the park, and the gentleman will not deny that the eastern and south roads are within the park as I have stated. They are a part of the park system of roads and are within the Yellowstone Park.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Crater Lake National Park, Oreg.: For protection and improvement of the Crater Lake National Park and repairing and extension of roads, $3,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 107, line 9, add as additional sentence the following:
"For the construction of a wagon road and necessary bridges through the Crater Lake National Park, Oreg., in accordance with the recommendations contained in the report of the War Department, published as House Document 328, Sixty-second Congress, second session, for the commencement of such improvements, $50,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered pursuant to a survey authorized in the sundry civil bill of 1910 to provide for a system of roads, to make available the natural beauties of this park. The counties on either side of the park have constructed roads through their own lands up to the Government possessions, and these roads are good and efficient roads.

I left Medford one day in an automobile, traveled 84 miles, climbed more than 5,000 feet into the air in less than eight hours' time, and part of the road was new construction. That proves the character of the county roads.

This park is in the southern part of the State of Oregon. It is within 6 miles of the present extension of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and on what will be the main line from San Francisco to Portland, Oreg. It has in it inefficient roads. A large number of people visit the park every year, and a great many more desire to do so if they could get from one side of the mountains to the other side through the park.

The lake itself is located in the ruin of an old volcano. Mount Mazama was formerly a mountain of some 15,000 feet elevation. Some six or seven thousand feet of the top of the mountain have been blown out or have dropped down in some great convulsion of nature, leaving a cavity 4,000 feet deep. This cavity is half full of water, the water being 2,000 feet deep. The surface of the lake is 6,177 feet above the surface of the ocean. The highest point of the rim is about 2,000 feet above the level of the lake—8,000 feet above the surface of the ocean. The lake is about five and a half miles in diameter and covers 22 square miles in area.

The painting exhibited here was made by Miss M. Russell and shows the western portion of the lake, and is an excellent representation of the lake and the western rim. Maj. Morrow, who made the survey, said the lake is the most magnificent sight he has ever seen in his life.

I think that is the unvarying opinion of all who have seen the place. The counties on either side have made the park available as far as they can. They have constructed their roads up to where the Government lands begin. The War Department made the survey authorized in the document referred to. It has recommended a system of roads, including a road around the rim of the crater. From the very highest point of the rim you can not only overlook the lake, but see as well several eternal snow-clad mountains, great valleys on the east, and also one of the most magnificent of our western forests.

During the San Francisco exposition a very large number of people will desire to see what there is in the West in the line of scenic grandeur. The $50,000 I am asking for will put the roads in such condition that the people who go from the railroads can reach the rim of the lake and then return to the railroad or go through to the Southern Pacific line across the mountain. It is said that thousands of our people visit Europe every year, and expend in seeing the parks and grandeurs of the mountains and lakes of Europe millions of dollars. They are not attracted to travel through this country to see what there is to be seen here, because of the inaccessibility of our places of natural beauty. A few hundreds or thousands of dollars, making these places reasonably available, will cause thousands and tens of thousands of our people to visit these parks and to expend in this country the millions of dollars they now expend in Europe. Better than all that, however, it will give them an opportunity to inform themselves of what the United States contains.

I hope the committee will see fit to grant this moderate amount that I have asked. [Applause.]

I earnestly urge upon the Committee of the Whole the adoption of this amendment. It is based upon the report of the engineers of the United States Army. It proposes a system of roads and other improvements so that visitors can secure access to the park and the places of interest in it. These improvements are similar to those made in other national parks. The park can be approached both from the east and west sides, and the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad to Klamath Falls, and its northward extension will make access to the park comparatively easy. Inside the park are most beautiful and comfortable camping places, with abundant pure water, fuel, and grass. Hotels are being operated and enlarged for transient visitors. But the great hindrance to the use of the park and the enjoyment of the places of beauty and grandeur contained in it is the lack of roads within the park. Our European neighbors have made their wonders of nature accessible by systems of roads, and have found such improvements to be very profitable investments. The United States has done comparatively little in making our wonders of nature accessible.

Large numbers of our people desire to "see America first," but until necessary improvements are made they are precluded from doing so, both on account of inaccessibility and prohibitive cost. It would be of incalculable value to this country if its people could freely visit its places of great natural interest; and when this park is made readily accessible it will become one of the most famous and most frequently visited of our places of scenic grandeur.

It is impossible to adequately describe the wonders of nature in this park, chiefest of which is Crater Lake. It is one of the places that must be seen to be even faintly appreciated.

GEOLOGICAL HISTORY OF CRATER LAKE, OREG.

(By J. S. Diller, United States Geological Survey.)

"Of lakes in the United States there are many and in great variety, but of crater lakes there is but one of great importance. Crater lakes are lakes which occupy the craters of volcanoes or pits (calders) of volcanic origin. They are most abundant in Italy and Central America, regions in which volcanoes are still active; and they occur also in France, Germany, India, Hawaii, and other parts of the world where volcanism has played an important rôle in its geologic history.

"The one in the United States belongs to the great volcanic field of the Northwest. Crater Lake of southern Oregon lies in the very heart of the Cascade Range, and, while it is especially attractive to the geologist on account of its remarkable geologic history, it is equally inviting to the tourist and others in search of health and pleasure by communion with the beautiful and sublime in nature. By the act of May 22, 1902, a tract around this lake having an area of 159,360 acres was set aside as a national park.

"According to W. G. Steel (The Mountains of Oregon, by W. G. Steel, 1890, p. 13) the lake was first seen by white men in 1853. It had long previously been known to the Indians, whose legends have contributed a name, Llao Rock, to one of the prominences of its rim. They regarded the lake with awe as an abode of the Great Spirit. Prospectors were the earliest explorers of the lake. (The discovery and early history of Crater Lake, by M. W. Gorman, Mazama, Vol. I, No. 2, Crater Lake number, 1897, 159 pages. This number contains much valuable information concerning Crater Lake in addition to that referred to.) The first travelers of note who visited the lake were Lord Maxwell and Mr. Bentley, who in 1872, with Capt. O. C. Applegate, of Modoc War fame, and three others, made a boat trip along its borders and named several of the prominences on the rim after members of the party. (The names Watchman, Glacier, Llao, and Vidae, which appear on the map of the lake, have been adopted by the United States Board on Geographic Names.) Mrs. F. F. Victor saw the lake in 1873, and briefly describes it in Atlantis Arisen. (Atlantis Arisen, by Mrs. Francis Fuller Victor, p. 179.) The same year Mr. S. A. Clarke gave an interesting account of the lake in the December number of the Overland Monthly.

"The first Geological Survey party visited the lake in 1883, when Everett Hayden and the writer, after spending several days in examining the rim, tumbled logs over the cliffs to the water's edge, lashed them together with ropes to make a raft, and paddled over to the island. In 1886, under the direction of Capt. C. E. Dutton, many soundings of the lake were made by W. G. Steel, and a topographic map of the vicinity was prepared by Mark B. Kerr and Eugene Ricksecker. Dutton was the first to discover the more novel and salient features in the geological history of the lake, of which he has given from his entertaining pen an all too brief account. (Science, Vol. VII, 1886, pp. 179–182, and Eighth Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, pp. 156–159.)

"Under the inspiration of the 'Mazamas,' a society of mountain climbers at Portland, Oreg. (The National Geographic Magazine, Vol. VIII, 1897, p. 58), a more extended study of the lake was made by the Government parties from the Department of Agriculture, the Fish Commission, and the Geological Survey. (Crater Lake National Park, United States Geological Survey Professional Paper, No. 3, 1902, 167 pages, 13 plates, by J. S. Diller and H. B. Patton.)

"Crater Lake is deeply set in the summit of the Cascade Range, about 65 miles north of the California line. It may be reached by two routes, one from the Southern Pacific Railroad at Medford or Ashland on the west, and the other from the Southern Pacific at Klamath Falls or Big Spring on the east. Ashland and Medford are in Rogue River Valley, which marks the line between the Klamath Mountains of the Coast Range on the west and the Cascade Range on the east. The journey from Medford by private conveyance 80 miles to Crater Lake affords a good opportunity to observe some of the most important features of this great pile of lavas. The Cascade Range in southern Oregon is a broad, irregular platform, terminating rather abruptly in places upon its borders, especially to the westward, where the underlying Cretaceous and Tertiary sediments come to the surface. It is surmounted by volcanic cones and coulees, which are generally smooth, but sometimes rough and rugged. The cones vary greatly in size and are distributed without regularity. Each has been an active volcano. The fragments blown out by violent eruption have fallen upon the volcanic orifices from which they issued and built up cinder cones. From their bases have spread streams of lava (coulees), raising the general level of the country between the cones. From some vents by many eruptions, both explosive and effusive, large cones, like McLoughlin, Shasta, and Hood, have been built up. Were we to examine their internal structure, exposed in the walls of the canyons carved in their slopes, we should find them composed of overlapping layers of lava and volcanic conglomerate, a structure which is well illustrated in the rim of Crater Lake.

"The journey from Ashland by the Dead Indian road crosses the range where the average altitude is less than 5,000 feet. The road passes within a few miles of Mount McLoughlin and skirts Pelican Bay of Klamath Lake, famous for its fishing. After following northward for some 20 miles along the eastern foot of the range, it ascends the eastern slope, along the castled canyon of Anna Creek, to the rim of Crater Lake.

"From Medford or Gold Hill the trip is a trifle shorter by the Rogue River road. It affords some fine views of the canyons and rapids of that turbulent stream and of the high falls, where it receives its affluents. Striking features along both roads, within 20 miles of the lake, are the plains developed upon a great mass of detritus filling the valleys. Across these plains Anna Creek and Rogue River have carved deep, narrow canyons, with finely sculptured walls, which the roads follow for some distance.

"With the completion of the railroad on the east the approach to the lake was greatly facilitated. Leaving the railroad near Klamath Falls, a small steamer crosses Upper Klamath Lake and connects with automobile stages to the lake.

"Within the park, approaching the lake from any side, the observer sees a broad cluster of gentle peaks rising about a thousand feet above the general crest of the range on which they stand, but not until after he has left the main road, 3 miles from the lake, does he begin to feel the steepness of the ascent. The way winds over a large moraine littered with lava bowlders and well studded with firs. Arriving at the crest, the lake in all its majestic beauty comes suddenly upon the scene, and is profoundly impressive. Descending the wooded slope a short distance within the rim to Victor Rock, an excellent general view of the lake is obtained. Upon the left is the western border of the lake and upon the right its southern border. The eye beholds 20 miles of unbroken cliffs, ranging from over 500 to nearly 2,000 feet in height, encircling a deep blue sheet of placid water, in which the mirrored walls vie with the originals in brilliancy and greatly enhance the depth of the prospect.

"The first point to fix our fascinated gaze is Wizard Island, lying nearly 2 miles away, near the western margin of the lake. Its irregular western edge and the steep but symmetrical truncated cone in the eastern portion are very suggestive of volcanic origin. We can not, however, indulge our first impulse to go at once to the island, for the various features of the rim are of greater importance in unraveling the earlier stages of its geological history.

"The outer and inner slopes of the rim are in strong contrast; while the one is gentle, ranging in general from 10° to 15°, the other is abrupt and full of cliffs. The vertical interval of the contours is 50 feet. Upon the inner slope the contours are crowded close together to show a slope so steep that one needs to travel but a little way to descend 50 feet, while upon the outer slope the contours are so far apart that to descend 50 feet one needs to travel a considerable portion of a mile. The outer slope at all points is away from the lake, and as the rim rises at least 1,000 feet above the general summit of the range, it is evidently the basal portion of the great hollow cone in which the lake is contained.

"In addition to the strong contrast between the outer and inner slopes of the rim the map shows the occurrence of a number of small cones upon the outer slope of the great cone. These adnate cones are of peculiar significance when we come to consider the volcanic rocks of which the region is composed. The rim is ribbed by ridges and spurs radiating from the lake, and the head of each spur is marked by a prominence on the crest of the rim. The variation in the altitude of the rim crest is 1,456 feet (from about 6,700 at Kerr Notch to 8,156 feet at Glacier Peak) with seven points rising above 8,000 feet. The crest generally is passable, so that a pedestrian may follow it continuously around the lake, with the exception of short intervals about the notches in the southern side. At many points the best going is on the inner side of the crest, where the open slope, generally well marked with deer trails over beds of pumice, affords an unobstructed view of the lake.

"Reference has already been made to the glacial phenomena of the outer slope of the rim. There are scattered bowlders upon the surface, and also in piles of glacial moraine, which contain besides bowlders much gravel and sand. Such glacial drift is spread far and wide over the southern and western portion of the rim, extending down the watercourses in some cases for miles to broad plains, through which the present streams have carved the deep and picturesque canyons already observed on the ascent. At many points the lavas are well rounded, smoothed, and striated by glacial action. This is true of the ridges as well as of the valleys, and the distribution of these marks is coextensive with that of the glacial detritus.

"A feature that is particularly impressive to the geologist making a trip around the lake on the rim crest is the general occurrence of polished and striated rocks in place on the very brow of the cliff overlooking the lake. The best displays are along the crest for 3 miles northwest of Victor Rock, but they occur also on the slopes of Llao Rock, Roundtop, Kerr Notch, and Eagle Crags, thus completing the circuit of the lake. On the adjacent slope toward the lake the same rocks present rough fractured surfaces, showing no striæ. The glaciation of the rim is a feature of its outer slope only, but it reaches up to the very crest. The glaciers armed with stones in their lower parts, that striated the crown of the rim, must have come down from above, and it is evident that the topographic conditions of today afford no such source of supply. The formation of glaciers requires an elevation extending above the snow line to afford a gathering ground for the snow that it may accumulate, and under the influence of gravity descend to develop glaciers lower down on the mountain slopes. During the glacial period Crater Lake did not exist. Its site must then have been occupied by a mountain to furnish the conditions necessary for the extensive glaciation of the rim, and the magnitude of the glacial phenomena indicates that the peak was a large one, rivaling, apparently, the highest peaks of the range.

"The Mazamas held a meeting in August, 1896, at Crater Lake in connection with the Crater Lake clubs of Medford, Ashland, and Klamath Falls, of the same State. Recognizing that the high mountain which once occupied the place of the lake was nameless they christened it, with appropriate ceremonies, Mount Mazama. The rim of the lake is a remnant of Mount Mazama, but when the name is used in this paper reference is intended more especially to that part which has disappeared.

"The inner slope of the rim, so well in view from Victor Rock, although precipitous, is not a continuous cliff. It is made up of many cliffs whose horizontal extent is generally much greater than the vertical. The cliffs are in ledges, and sometimes the whole slope from crest to shore is one great cliff, not absolutely vertical, it is true, but yet at so high an angle as to make it far beyond the possibility of climbing. Dutton Cliff on the southern and Llao Rock on the northern borders of the lake are the greatest cliffs of the rim. Besides cliffs, the other elements of the inner slope are forests and talus, and these make it possible at a few points to approach the lake, not with great ease but yet, care being taken, with little danger. Southwest of the lake the inner slope, clearly seen from Victor Rock, is pretty well wooded, and from near the end of the road, just east of Victor Rock, a steep trail descends to the water. Where fresh talus slopes prevail there are no trees, and the loose material maintains the steepest slope possible without sliding. Such slopes are well displayed along the western shore opposite the island and near the northeast corner of the lake under the Palisades. At this point the rim is only 575 feet high, and a long slide, called from its shape the Wineglass, reaches from crest to shore.

"The best views of the rim are obtained from a boat on the lake, which affords an opportunity to examine in detail the position and structure of the cliffs. They are composed wholly of volcanic conglomerate and streams of lava arranged in layers, as shown in figure 12, that dip into the rim and away from the lake on all sides. Both forms of volcanic material are well exposed on the trail descending the inner slope, and, although most of the cliffs are of lava, many are of conglomerate.

"On arriving at the water's edge the observer is struck with the fact that there is no beach. The steep slopes above the surface of the lake continue beneath its waters to great depths. Here and there upon the shore, where a rill descends from a melting snow bank near the crest, a small delta deposit makes a little shallow, turning the deep-blue water to pale green.

"As the boat skirts the western shore and passes toward Llao Rock the layered structure of the rim is evident, although it is fairly well illustrated on all sides. On the whole the lava streams predominate, although there is much conglomerate. Of all the flows exposed upon the inner slope that of Llao Rock is most prominent and interesting. In the middle it is over 1,200 feet thick and fills an ancient valley down the outer slope of the rim. Upon either side it tapers to a thin edge against the upper slope of the valley. To the lake it presents a sheer cliff—that is, it is abruptly cut off—and one wonders how much farther it may have extended in that direction. Beneath the rock the outline of the valley in cross section is evident. It rests upon pumice and many layers of older lavas, forming the rim down to the water's edge. The direction of flow in this great lava stream forces us to believe that it was erupted from a large volcano which once stood upon the site of the lake. Every layer of lava in the rim is a coulee, dipping away from the lake. This is especially well shown in the canyon of Sun Creek, cut in its outer slope. The sections of these radiating flows exposed upon the inner slope of the rim all tell the same story as to their source. By projectng the lavas in their course toward a common center we can reconstruct in fancy the great volcano, Mount Mazama, which once occupied the place of the lake, and, like Shasta or Rainier, formed a great landmark of the region.

"Proceeding eastward from Llao Rock the rim loses somewhat in height, and at the head of Cleetwood Cove one sees the remarkable spectacle of a lava stream descending the inner slope of the rim. It is the only one that has behaved in this way, and its action throws much light upon the disappearance of Mount Mazama.

"The Palisades are less than 600 feet in elevation above the lake, and are composed almost wholly of one great flow. The streams of lava extending northeast from this portion of the rim are broad and much younger in appearance than those forming the great cliffs south of the lake, where the flows are thinner and more numerous.

"Roundtop is a dome-shaped hill over the eastern end of the Palisades, and is made up chiefly of the lava stream that formed the Palisades, overlain by two sheets of pumice separated by a layer of dacite. The upper surface of the Palisade flow, where best exposed upon the lakeward slope of Roundtop, bears glacial striæ, that extend beneath the layers of pumice and dacite of later eruption from Mount Mazama. It is evident from this relation that Mount Mazama was an active volcano during the glacial period. The occurrence of eruptions from a snowcapped volcano must necessarily produce great floods, and these conditions may account in some measure at least for the detritus-filled valleys of the streams rising on the rim of Crater Lake.

"Returning from this glacial digression to the boat trip on the lake, it is observed upon the eastern side of the lake that Redcloud Cliff is rendered beautiful by the pinnacles of reddish tuff near the summit, where it is capped by a great, dark flow of dacite, filling a valley in the older rim and extending far to the northeast. Here the springs begin to gush from the inner slope and cascade their foaming rills to the lake. They recur at Sentinel Rock, Dutton Cliff, and especially under Eagle Crags, as well as farther westward. Their sources in many cases can be seen in the banks of snow above, but in others they gush forth as real springs, whose water must find its way in from the snow upon the outer slope.

"The boldest portion of the rim, excepting perhaps Llao Rock, is Dutton Cliff, which is made more impressive by the deep U-shape notches on either side. The notches mark points where the canyons of Sun and Sand Creeks pass through the rim to the cliff overlooking the lake. These canyons, due to erosion on lines of drainage, belong to the period when the topographic conditions in that region were quite unlike those of to-day. They were carved out by streams of ice and water descending from a point over the lake, and their presence, ending as they do in the air hundreds of feet above the present water level, affords strong evidence in favor of the former reality of Mount Mazama.

"The Phantom Ship is a craggy little islet near the border of the lake under Dutton Cliff. Its rugged hull, with rocks towering like the masts of a ship, suggests the name, and, phantom like, it disappears when viewed in certain lights from the western rim. Standing in line with an arête that descends from an angle of the cliff, it possibly marks a continuation of the sharp spur beneath the waters, or perhaps, but much less likely, it is a block slid down from the cliff. Whatever its history, it attracts everyone by its beauty and winsomeness.

"At times of volcanic eruption the lava rises within the volcano until it either overflows the crater at the top or, by the great pressure of the column, bursts open the sides of the volcano and escapes through the fissure to the surface. In the latter case, as the molten material cools, the fissure becomes filled with solid lava and forms a dike. The best example of this sort about Crater Lake appears along the inner slope directly north of Wizard Island, and is locally known as the Devils Backbone. It is shown in figure 5 across the left end of Wizard Island, and in figure 18 a nearer view from the island itself. This dike rock, standing on edge, varies from 5 to 25 feet in thickness and cuts the rim from water to crest. Dikes are most numerous in the older portion of the rim under Llao Rock. They do not cut up through Llao Rock, and are clearly older than the lava of which that rock is formed. Dikes occur at intervals all around the lake and radiate from it, suggesting that the central volcanic vent from which they issued must have been Mount Mazama.

"There is another important feature concerning the kinds of volcanic rocks and their order of eruption and distribution about the rim of Crater Lake, as shown on the accompanying reconnoissance map, figure 13, that is of much interest to the geologist. All the older lavas comprising the inner slope of the rim, especially toward the water's edge, are andesites. The newer ones, forming the top of the rim in Llao Rock, Pumice Point, Roundtop, and the Rugged Crest about the head of Cleetwood Cove as well as at Cloudcap, are dacites. Other later flows, all of which escaped from the smaller adnate cones upon the outer slope of the rim, are basalts. The eruptions began with lavas containing a medium amount of silica (andesites), and after long-continued activity lavas both richer (dacites) and poorer (basalts) in silica follow, giving a completeness to the products of this great volcanic center that make it an interesting field of study. Furthermore, the remarkable opportunity afforded by the dissected volcano for the examination of its structure and succession of lavas is unsurpassed. It should be stated, before dismissing the kinds of lava, that there are some dacites in the Sun Creek Canyon south of the lake that appear to be older than those upon the north side, and that the final lava of the region on Wizard Island is andesite.

"The glaciation and structure of the rim clearly establish the former existence of Mount Mazama, but there may well be doubt as to its exact form and size. Judging from the fact that Mount Shasta and the rim of Crater Lake have the same diameter at an altitude of 8,000 feet, and that their lavas are similar, it may with some reason be inferred that Mount Mazama and Mount Shasta were nearly of equal height. The slopes of Mount Shasta may be somewhat steeper than those of the rim of Crater Lake at an equal altitude, but the glaciation of the rim is such as to require a large peak for its source. A restoration of Mount Mazama based on a photograph of the rim of Crater Lake as seen from the southwest is shown in figure 20.

"Wonderful as the lake, encircled by cliffs, may be, it serves but to conceal in part the greatest wonder; that is, the enormous pit or caldera which is half filled by the lake. The caldera is 4,000 feet deep. An impressive illustration of it is seen in figure 21, which was prepared from a photograph of a model of Crater Lake now in the United States National Museum. The water surface is represented by glass, so that one may see through to the bottom and get the full impression of the depth of this tremendous hole in the ground. It extends from the top of the rim, which is the very summit of the Cascade Range, halfway down to the sea level, and nearly a square mile of its bottom is below the level of Upper Klamath Lake at the eastern foot of the range. The volume of the caldera is nearly a dozen cubic miles, and if we add the volume of the lost Mount Mazama that amount would be increased by at least one-half. How was it possible to remove so large a mass and in process develop so great a depression?

"The caldera is completely inclosed, so that it can not be regarded as an effect of erosion. The volcanic origin of everything about the lake would suggest in a general way that this great revolution must have been wrought by volcanism, either blown out by a great volcanic explosion or swallowed up by an equally great engulfment. It is well known that pits have been produced by volcanic explosions, and some of them are occupied by lakes of the kind usually called crater lakes. Depressions produced in this way, however, are, with rare exceptions, surrounded by rims composed of the fragmental material blown out from the depression.

"At first sight the rim about Crater Lake suggests that the caldera was produced by an explosion, and the occurrence of much pumice in that region lends support to this preliminary view; but on careful examination we find, as already stated, that the rim is not made up of fragments blown from the pit, but of layers of solid lava interbedded with those of volcanic conglomerate erupted from Mount Mazama before the caldera originated. The moraines deposited by glaciers descending from the mountain formed the surface around a large part of the rim, and as there is no fragmental deposits on these moraines, it is evident that there is nothing whatever to indicate any explosive action in connection with the formation of the caldera.

"We may be aided in understanding the possible origin of the caldera by picturing the conditions that must have obtained during an effusive eruption of Mount Mazama. At such a time the column of molten material rose in the interior of the mountain until it overflowed at the summit or burst open the sides of the mountain and escaped through fissures. Fissures formed in this way usually occur high on the slopes of the mountain. If instead, however, an opening were effected on the mountain side at a much lower level—say some thousands of feet below the summit—and the molten material escaped, the mountain would be left hollow, and the summit, having so much of its support removed, might cave in and disappear in the molten reservoir.

"Something of this sort is described by Prof. Dana as occurring at Kilauea, in Hawaii. The lake in that case is not water, but molten lava, for Kilauea is yet an active volcano. In 1840 there was an eruption from the slopes of Kilauea, 27 miles distant from the lake and over 4,000 feet below its level. The column of lava represented by the lake of molten material in Kilauea sank away in connection with this eruption to a depth of 385 feet, and the floor of the region immediately surrounding the lake, left without support, tumbled into the depression. In the intervals between eruptions the molten column rises again toward the surface, only to be lowered by subsequent eruptions, and the subsidence is not always accomplished by an outflow of lava upon the surface. Sometimes, however, it gushes forth as a great fountain a hundred feet or more in height.

"The elevated position of the great caldera occupied by Crater Lake makes its origin by subsidence seem the more probable. The level of the lowest bed of the lake reaches the surface within 15 miles down the western slope of the range. That Mount Mazama was engulfed is plainly suggested by the behavior of its final lava stream. The greater portion of this last flow descended and spread over the outer slope of the rim, but from the thickest part of the flow where it fills an old valley at the head of Cleetwood Cove some of the same lava, as already noted, poured down the inner slope. The only plausible explanation of this phenomena seems to be that soon after the final eruption of Mount Mazama, and before the thickest part of the lava effused at that time had solidified, the mountain collapsed and sank away and the yet viscous portion of the stream followed down the inner slope of the caldera. It should be observed also that the lava stream collapsed and formed Rugged Crest.

"It has been suggested, but perhaps not in serious thought, that the cone on Wizard Island may represent the summit of the sunken Mount Mazama projecting above the water. To determine the truth of the matter we must cross over to the island. Wizard Island has two portions—an extremely rough lava field and a cinder cone. These parts may be distinguished in a view of the island from the Watchman, but are more distinct in an illustration as seen from the lake. Only a small portion of the lava field is shown in the foreground. The lava is dark and has a much more basaltic look than any seen in the main body of the rim. It has evidently been erupted from the base of the cinder cone in its present position. The cinder cone, too, is a perfect little volcano, with steep symmetrical slopes 763 feet in height, and surmounted by a crater 80 feet deep. It is so new and fresh that it is scarcely forested, and shows no trace of weathering. Instead of being a part of the sunken Mount Mazama, it is an entirely new volcano built up by volcanic action upon the bottom of the caldera since the subsidence. Were it not for the lake the whole bottom of the caldera could be examined, and it is possible that other small volcanic cones might be found. This suggestion is borne out by the soundings of the lake, which appear to reveal two other cases, but they do not rise to within 400 feet of the surface of the water. It is evident that the volcanic eruptions upon the bottom of the caldera have partially filled it up. Originally it may have been much more than 4,000 feet deep.

"Given the caldera with water-tight walls, there is no difficulty in forming Crater Lake, for in that region precipitation is greater than evaporation. Extensive observations upon precipitation and evaporation have not been made at Crater Lake, but, judging from those made at nearest points, the annual precipitation should be between 60 and 70 inches, while the annual evaporation is about 46 inches. The average diameter of the lake is nearly 5 miles. Its area, including Wizard Island, is about 21.30 square miles. The drainage area inclosed by the rim of the lake, according to Mr. E. C. Barnard, is 27.48 square miles. During the winter great masses of snow drift within the rim, and thus considerably augment the normal precipitation of the lake. The lake does not fill up and overflow. The surplus water must have a subterranean outlet, probably toward the southeast, where the region is traversed by extensive breaks in the rocks, and abounds in excellent springs.

"The color of the lake is deep blue, excepting along the borders, where it merges into various shades and tints of green. It is so transparent that even on a hazy day a white dinner plate 10 inches in diameter may be seen at a depth of nearly 100 feet. The fish it contains have been introduced. A small crustacean flourishes in its waters, and salamanders occur in abundance locally along the shore.

"The level of the lake oscillates with the seasons. During the rainy winter it rises, and in the summer it falls. In August, 1896, observations were made for 22 days, and the lake sank at the rate of 1 inch for every five or six days, depending somewhat on the conditions of the weather. The Mazamas have established a water gauge, and it was hoped that an extended series of observations would be obtained, but the ice broke it off the next winter. The annual oscillation of the lake is about 4 feet.

"The temperature of Crater Lake has been the subject of considerable investigation. While the earlier observations appeared to indicate that the lake received heat from its bottom, later observations show that the temperature of the lake everywhere below a depth of 300 feet is approximately 39° and the bottom contains no appreciable volcanic heat.

"Aside from its attractive scenic features, Crater Lake affords one of the most interesting and instructive fields for the study of volcanic geology to be found anywhere in the world. Considered in all its aspects, it ranks with the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, the Yosemite Valley, and the Falls of Niagara, but with an individuality that is superlative."

The following letter from the Acting Secretary of War explains the feasibility of the proposed improvement:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 18, 1911.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated 16th instant, together with a report from Maj. J. J. Morrow, Corps of Engineers, dated November 21, 1911, with maps, of a survey, with plans and estimates, for roads and trails in Crater Lake National Park, Oreg., made by him in compliance with a provision contained in the sundry civil act of June 25, 1910.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, December 16, 1911.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, for transmission to Congress, a report by Maj. J. J. Morrow, Corps of Engineers, made in compliance with the following provisions of the sundry civil act of June 25, 1910:

"Crater Lake National Park: For surveying, locating, and preparing plans and estimates for roads and trails in Crater Lake National Park, Oreg., and to cover all expenses incident thereto, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000."

Maj. Morrow estimates the cost of the proposed system of roads and trails at $642,000, with an additional $65,000 for a system of tanks and water-supply pipes to provide for sprinkling. The estimated cost of maintenance, including sprinkling, is estimated at $20,000 annually. He recommends that if the work be undertaken an initial appropriation of $100,000 be made to provide plant, shelter, buildings, and construction. Under the plans proposed by Maj. Morrow it is anticipated that the more important roads would be completed in three or four working seasons; the balance of the system in about seven years.

No estimate of funds for this work was made by the Engineer Department in its annual estimates this year. If Congress should decide to adopt the project, it is recommended that, as recommended by Maj. Morrow, the first appropriation be not less than $100,000, to be followed by others annually with a view to completion in seven years.

Very respectfully,

W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, FIRST DISTRICT,
Portland, Oreg., November 21, 1911.

The CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report on survey, plans, and estimates for roads and trails in Crater Lake National Park.

The sundry civil appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, contained an item in the following language:

"Crater Lake National Park: For surveying, locating, and preparing plans and estimates for roads and trails in Crater Lake National Park, Oreg., and to cover all expenses incident thereto, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000."

The duty of making this survey was assigned to this office July 15, 1910. Two field parties were organized and sent into the park about the middle of August, 1910, and continued the work until October 6, when further field work was interrupted by the first heavy fall of snow.

The field work was in charge of Junior Engineer H. L. Gilbert. Each party consisted of 1 transitman, 1 levelman, 1 topographer, 2 assistant topographers, 1 draftsman, 1 rodman, 2 chainmen, 1 back flagman, and 1 cook.

The method of the survey was that of a preliminary railroad survey. Control was by azimuth checked by frequent observations of the sun. Y levels were used and bench marks set about every half mile, using United States Geological Survey datum and bench marks. The transit line was referenced at about 1 mile intervals. Topography was taken on both sides of the line to develop a strip within which the final location would fall. Grades sought were maximum of 6 per cent for long distances, 8 per cent for fair distances, and 10 per cent rarely, and only for short distances. Least radius of curvature sought was 50 feet. Discharge measurements were made of springs and creeks within practicable reach of the road location.

The first season's work covered in all about 50 miles of preliminary lines and completed all survey work contemplated excepting about 6 miles of the 36-mile road encircling the lake, the 5 miles of road to the Pinnacles, and the 4 miles of road to the eastern boundary of the park. During the season just closed one party, constituted as each of the parties of the preceding season, was sent into the park in July, under the direction of Junior Engineer W. G. Carroll, and finished the work in about one month of field work.

In the office, after return of the field party, each season, all transit lines were computed and platted to a scale of 1/2400, the location was profiled, and preliminary estimates were made. The finished location was also platted on a map of the park to scale of 1/48000.

DESCRIPTION OF THE PARK AND ROADS DESIRED.

A complete description of Crater Lake Park is found in Professional Papers, No. 3, Department of the Interior, United States Geological Survey, entitled "The geology and petrography of Crater Lake National Park," by J. S. Diller and H. B. Patton: Government Printing Office, 1902.

Briefly, Crater Lake National Park was made a national park by the act of Congress of May 22, 1902. It is about 18 miles north and south by about 13½ miles east and west, and contains 249 square miles. It lies roughly about halfway between Portland, Oreg., and San Francisco, Cal., and about 50 to 60 miles east of the present main line of the Southern Pacific Railroad between those two cities, but not more than 10 miles west of the proposed new main line of the same road, known popularly as the Natron cut-off.

The park is now reached with considerable difficulty. The easiest method is by rail to Klamath Falls (about 88 miles from the main line), thence by boat to a landing on the shore of Upper Klamath Lake, whence the Crater Lake Co. operates an auto stage via Fort Klamath to their lodge on the rim of the crater (a run of about 30 miles). It may be reached by automobile from Klamath Falls or from Bend, Oreg., both approaching via Fort Klamath, or from Medford approaching from the west and about 100 miles distant. Upon the completion of the Natron cut-off the railroad will be within about 10 miles of the eastern boundary of the park, and a road will doubtless be at once constructed toward the lake along the valley of Bear Creek.

The roads now in the park are simple and crude. The headquarters of the superintendent, near the head of one fork of Anna Creek, is at the junction of the roads leading to Medford and to Fort Klamath. From this point about 5 miles of road follows up another fork of Anna Creek to the rim of the crater, just west of Garfield Peak. This road, especially the mile nearest the rim, is exceedingly tortuous and steep, some of the grades being nearly 30 per cent. All existing roads are improved only by sidehill excavation work, with occasional log revetments, are tortuous and narrow, and in the dry summer (the only season) become badly rutted, the soil being a light dry pumice. They are, however, extensively traveled by automobiles, the traffic showing a gradual increase as the beauty of the park becomes more widely known. There are no other roads in the park and but few trails, those that exist being gradually developed by the superintendent of the park for use of his rangers in protection against forest fires.

The central and dominating feature of the park is the lake which partially fills the crater in the wrecked mountain. The following extracts from the Diller and Patton report describe it briefly:

"On the rim of Crater Lake there once stood a prominent peak to which the name Mount Mazama has been given. Mount Mazama is practically unknown to the people of Oregon, but they are familiar with Crater Lake, which occupies the depression that resulted from the wreck of the great peak. The remnant of Mount Mazama is most readily identified when referred to as the 'rim of Crater Lake.' The wrecking of Mount Mazama was the crowning even in the volcanic history of the Cascade Range, and resulted from a movement similar to that just noted in Mount Thielsen, but vastly greater in its size and consequences. This volcanic activity culminated in the development of a great pit or caldera, which for grandeur and beauty rivals anything of its kind in the world.

GENERAL FEATURES.

"The rim encircling Crater Lake, when seen from a distance from any side, appears as a broad cluster of gently sloping peaks rising about 1,000 feet above the general crest of the range on which they stand. The topographic prominence of Mount Mazama can be more fully realized when it is considered that it is close to the head of Rogue, Klamath, and Umpqua Rivers. These are the only large streams breaking through the mountains to the sea between the Columbia and the Sacramento, and their watershed might be expected to be the principal peak of the Cascade Range.

"To one arriving by the road at the crest of the rim the lake in all its majestic beauty appears suddenly upon the scene and is profoundly impressive. The eye beholds 20 miles of unbroken cliffs, the remnant of Mount Mazama, ranging from over 500 to nearly 2,000 feet in height, encircling a deep, blue sheet of placid water, in which the mirrored walls vie with the original slopes in brilliancy and greatly enhance the depth of the prospect. The lake is about 4¼ miles wide and 6¼ miles long, with an area of nearly 20½ square miles."

To supplement this brief description it may be added that the surface of the water on the lake is 6,177 feet above sea level, while the lowest point of the rim is over 500 feet higher. The rim at most points is 800 feet high, rising at some points much higher and almost sheer. Near the western margin of the lake rises Wizard Island, almost a perfect cone with a diminutive crater in its peak, about 800 feet above the water. The Phantom Ship, a small pinnacle of rock near the southeast shore, marks the only other break in the sheet of water, which is of great depth, at points reaching nearly 2,000 feet.

Other interesting features of the park are the canyons of Anna Creek (of which excellent views may be obtained from the existing road to Fort Klamath) and the similar canyon of Sand Creek, where the formation has been given the name of "The Pinnacles."

The only roads at present in the park are the two from Fort Klamath and from Medford, leading to the superintendent's headquarters and thence to the rim of the lake. There are numerous trails constructed by the Forest Service from time to time.

In preparing a plan for improvement, as directed by Congress, it was considered of paramount importance to design a road encircling the crater as near to its rim as topography would permit, in order that the lake might be viewed from all possible points. It was believed to be necessary to construct roads from the rim road to the two existing entrances, utilizing the present existing roads as much as possible, and to provide also for a road to the eastern boundary, as this will shortly be the principal entrance to the park. It was also deemed advisable to construct a road leading to The Pinnacles, which road could later be extended into a fourth entrance if desired. About 100 miles of trails are necessary to connect with existing Forest Service trails and provide additional ones. They would be useful to the Forest Service in coping with fires, as well as facilitating the exploration of the park by camping parties. Trails are needed at three points at least leading from the rim road to the surface of the lake. Along these lines the plans have been prepared.

The road around the lake is planned to cross the face of the Watchman, pass behind the Glacier Peak, return to the rim before again passing behind Llao Rock, thence following the rim fairly close until Cloud Cap is reached. It then passes successively behind the mountainous masses of the inside slopes of Mount Scott and Dutton Cliff, but returns to the rim again at Sun Creek Notch, from which point it recedes, passing behind Vidae and Garfield Peaks. It returns to the rim at the site of the present lodge of the Crater Lake Co., following the rim thence to the Watchman. The total length of the rim road is between 35 and 36 miles. A trail a little over a mile in length is provided for those desiring to leave the road to obtain the view from Kerr Notch.

From about this same point in the rim road a road is planned to reach The Pinnacles. Its length is about 5 miles.

At the base of Garfield Peak the road to the southern and western entrances is planned to leave the rim road. It is a little more than 3 miles in length to the present superintendent's headquarters, where it forks. There are 7 miles more to the Fort Klamath entrance and about 6½ miles to the Medford entrance. These roads all follow fairly close the existing roads.

From near Round Top the eastern entrance road is planned, following the valley of Bear Creek. It is a little over 4 miles in length.

The total length of all these roads is 61.7 miles. All are shown on the map submitted herewith.

About 100 miles of trails are planned, to enable campers to reach adjacent points, taking advantage of water and pasturage for their camp sites. These trails have not been surveyed, as it was deemed unnecessary to locate them any more definitely than they can be located on the map prepared by the Geological Survey two years ago.

The road has been designed to permit of automobile traffic. It is believed that a regulation excluding automobiles from Crater Lake Park would be a grave mistake, as even now, with the poor roads, nearly all the visitors reach the rim of the lake in this way. The park is within fairly easy access by motor of the numerous growing cities between Portland and San Francisco, and the approaches will gradually improve as the country becomes more thickly populated.

CLIMATIC CONDITIONS.

The season for work in Crater Lake Park is very short. The section has a heavy precipitation, which is nearly all snow, as but little rain falls in the summer months. Most of the work, and nearly all of the heavy work, is at a high altitude, nearly 7,000 feet. Only in an unusually early season can the rim be reached by the middle of June, although there are portions of the approaches that could be worked on in June. July, August, and a part of September will be the usual working seasons, with hardly more than two months available for work on the Rim Road. After completion, similarly, provision will have to be made for watering the road, or for oiling it, as showers are exceedingly rare until near the close of the season.

WORKING CONDITIONS.

In addition to the short season the work of construction will be hampered by the remoteness of the locality, requiring the importation of all labor and a comparatively long haul of all supplies. The latter condition may be improved before the work can be completed, even if started at once, by the completion of the Natron cut-off. The question of water supply is not an easy one, especially for that portion of the rim road on the northeast side of the lake between the Watchman and Round Top (about 11 miles). No water has been located between Lighting Spring, south of the Watchman, and Cascade Spring, east of Round Top, and this latter, while a large spring, is at a level much below the road, besides being nearly 2 miles away. Rock suitable for macadam is plentiful on the south side of the lake, but none has as yet been located convenient for work over the same stretch of road where the water is lacking. The drift sand that is found at numerous locations is suitable for the small amount of masonry work that will be required.

The following springs and streams were gauged, and it is believed can be counted on to deliver water at all times in equal or greater quantity than was determined, the measurements having been made in September, at about low water:

	Cubic foot-seconds.
Spring below Crater Lake Co.'s lodge near mile 32, Rim Road	0.1
Cascade Spring (head of Bear Creek)	5.0
Anderson Spring (head of Sand Creek)	2.0
Sun Creek at elevation 6,000 (near mile 25½, Rim Road)	.3
Spring at elevation 6,850 (near mile 27½, Rim Road)	.1
Springs (near mile 29½, Rim Road), aggregating	.1
Spring at elevation 6,450 (near mile 30, Rim Road)	2.0
Arant Spring, at headquarters	1.8
Anna Creek, at mouth of Bridge Creek	40.0
Bridge Creek, above Fort Klamath Road	1.0
Lighting Springs (near mile 3, Rim Road), not gauged but estimated, about	.4

BASIS OF PLANS AND ESTIMATES.

As stated, the road is designed with maximum grade of 8 per cent, and this only for short distances, and with a minimum radius of curvature of 50 feet. Cross section in earth or rock is as follows: In embankment, width of subgrade, 16 feet; side slopes 2 on 3; in excavation, side ditches 1 foot deep, width at bottom 2 feet, and side slopes 1 on 1. Surface of broken stone 12 feet wide, 7½ inches at center to 3½ inches at edges. On grades of 2 per cent or higher, side ditches to be paved. Small culverts to be of corrugated iron or vitrified pipe 1 foot in diameter; large ones of concrete as required.

The unit prices adopted are as follows:

Grading:
Earth or sand	per cubic yard	$0.30
Hardpan or loose rock	do	.60
Solid rock	do	1.00
Grubbing and clearing	per acre	75.00
Crushed rock, in place, rolled	per cubic yard	3.80
Paving of ditches	per square yard	.50
Construction of rough pack trails	per mile	150.00

ESTIMATE FOR WATER SUPPLY.

The Rim Road can be supplied with water only with extreme difficulty. The question of water on the approaches is comparatively simple. It is estimated that a system of providing tanks and supply pipe for water, so that the road can be kept watered by carts during the season, will cost $65,000.

MAINTENANCE.

It is estimated that after completion of the work an appropriation of $20,000 annually will be required for repairs and maintenance, including sprinkling.

These estimates may appear high, but experience in road work in Yellowstone and Rainier National Parks, where conditions are not dissimilar, have proved that remoteness, short season due to altitude, and high cost of labor and supplies will all operate to increase the cost of construction. It is believed the estimates are not higher than is required for the character of work desired.

RATE OF PROGRESS AND PLAN PROPOSED.

It is believed that completion of the roads in the park, as herein outlined, can be best and most economically effected by a plan about as follows:

The approach from Fort Klamath to the rim of the lake at the present lodge of the Crater Lake Co. should be first constructed by grading only, and then the grading of the Rim Road from the lodge to near Round Top (about 20 miles) should be completed. (The principal hotel of the Crater Lake Co. will ultimately be located on the Rim Road near Round Top.) After completion of this work, if the Natron cut-off is completed, the Bear Creek Road should be graded and the Medford approach graded. These roads should then be improved by surfacing while the remainder of the Rim Road is being graded. The road to The Pinnacles should be undertaken last of all the road work, as a wagon trail can be easily opened up for use during the early work.

The initial appropriation for the work should be about $100,000 to provide plant, shelter, and camp buildings and stores, in addition to a working fund. For the succeeding two years the annual appropriation should be about $75,000, after which time it should be increased to about $100,000 annually, provided the Natron cut-off is completed, as is anticipated. Under this plan it will require about seven years to complete the work, but the grading from the Klamath entrance to the Bear Creek entrance, including about 20 miles of the Rim Road connecting the two establishments of the Crater Lake Co., together with considerable of the surfacing of this much of the road system, would be completed in three working seasons, and all of this road, together with the Medford entrance, could be graded and surfaced by the end of the fourth season.

It is the opinion of this office that as much of this work as possible should be completed prior to the San Francisco exposition of 1915. If this is done, a visit to this park will be one of the favorite side trips, especially as it can be included with a loss of but one day and at little expense by all tourists making the trip via Portland. More rapid progress than outlined above could be made if the work were authorized under some such system as the continuing-contract system used in some of the river and harbor work.

In closing this report this office desires to state that the improvement outlined herein is an exceptionally worthy one. It is doubtful if any view existing in the world to-day is as impressive and at the same time as beautiful as the view of this lake from its rim. Hundreds of people make the trip now year after year under adverse conditions for the pleasure of this view, and as the railroad approach is improved, as it shortly will be, the park should be made as accessible as possible for the thousands of tourists that annually travel between San Francisco and Portland.

It is desired also to acknowledge the courtesy of helpful advance sheets of survey furnished by the United States Geological Survey and assistance in numerous ways rendered by Mr. Arant, superintendent of the park, and Messrs. Will G. Steel and A. L. Parkhurst, of the Crater Lake Co.

Respectfully submitted.

JAY J. MORROW,
Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

(Through the Division Engineer, Northern Pacific Division.)

The following description of Crater Lake and its surroundings is given by Prof. J. S. Diller, of the United States Geological Survey:

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK ROADS.

STATEMENTS OF MAJ. J. J. MORROW AND MAJ. EDGAR JADWIN, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Maj. JADWIN. Mr. Chairman, you asked Gen. Bixby a few questions about the details of the Crater Lake estimates, and as Maj. Morrow, who made the survey and who has charge of the Portland (Oreg.) district, is now in the city, the general thought that he might give you the information desired.

The CHAIRMAN. "For protection and improvement of the Crater Lake National Park," etc., the appropriation for 1912 was $3,000, and you are asking $15,000 for next year?

Maj. MORROW. That is the appropriation for the superintendent of the park. That is for the maintenance of the present roads in the park. The question I am familiar with is the survey which was specially authorized two years ago for a comprehensive system of roads and trails in the park.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you just make a statement about that survey?

Maj. MORROW. The description of the park and the estimates are all in the document. The survey was completed last summer. These estimates came in about Christmas time. When Congress decided to make this survey they provided that the work of the survey be done under the direction of the Secretary of War. It went to the Chief of Engineers and came out to our office. It was a little late in the season, the season being very short, to complete the work. The appropriation did not pass until the 1st of July, and the notification of the fact that it had passed, which was an entire surprise to the Engineer Department, was not received until a month, perhaps, later. The survey and construction parties in the park had to get out before the 1st of October. It is right in the top of the Cascade Mountain Range. So it took two seasons to complete the survey after the estimate.

Mr. SHERLEY. How long a season have you there?

Maj. MORROW. About three and one-half months.

Mr. SHERLEY. Have you that much of a tourist season?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir; about the same thing. Tourists go in there about the 1st of July and they come out about the end of September. It is a little shorter than the Yellowstone season, but is entirely comparable with it.

Mr. CANNON. Is it about as long as the Mount Rainier season?

Maj. MORROW. Probably not quite as long.

Mr. MALBY. Are there any railroads which run near this park?

Maj. MORROW. The main line of the Southern Pacific from San Francisco to Portland runs east of it, north and south. The easiest way to reach the park is to run up to Klamath Falls, which is about 60 miles from the park. The railroad, however, is building what they call the Natron cut-off, and when that road is completed, which they say will be shortly, the railroad will be within a very few miles of the eastern limit of the park.

Mr. SHERLEY. How far?

Maj. MORROW. About 6 miles.

Mr. MALBY. Do you contemplate connecting up with the proposed new road or is it intended to connect up with the existing railroad lines?

Maj. MORROW. It is intended to have the principal entrance on the eastern side of the park, so that will be the place that will connect with this new cut-off line.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is at Crater Lake National Park besides the lake and mountains? Is there any unusual feature?

Maj. MORROW. There is nothing except a couple of gorges, which are very picturesque, precipitous rocks, 200 or 300 feet in height, called pinnacles, but the main feature which is really worth while is the beautiful lake.

Mr. SHERLEY. How large is the park area?

Maj. MORROW. About 250 square miles.

Mr. PAGE. What is the area of the lake?

Maj. MORROW. The lake is about 5 miles across, nearly circular.

Mr. SHERLEY. How many square miles?

Maj. MORROW. About twenty-odd square miles.

Mr. SHERLEY. How much of a road system is it contemplated to construct?

Maj. MORROW. There is a map in the document which shows the road around the lake, going as near to the edge of the crater as can be done at as many points as possible, and roads would go east to connect with the new railroad line and south and west to the present entrances.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it proposed to run the road through the forest reserve?

Maj. MORROW. That ultimately would be done.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any record of the people who have gone there heretofore?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. How many people have gone each season?

Maj. JADWIN. There were 5,000 in 1911.

Mr. SHERLEY. Where from?

Maj. MORROW. They all come in from Klamath Falls or Medford.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mostly from the State of Oregon?

Maj. MORROW. No. They come from Oregon and California. A great many of them are tourists who are coming from San Francisco or Portland and stop over.

Mr. MALBY. What is the elevation of the lake?

Maj. MORROW. The elevation of the lake is a little over 6,000 feet, and the rim is from 500 to 3,000 feet higher.

Mr. MALBY. It is an extinct crater?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir; the top blown off the mountain or sunk into the mountain. The water has filled up the lake to a depth of as much as 2,000 feet. It is the deepest body of fresh water in the world, certainly the deepest I know anything about. The sight of it is perfectly magnificent; the most beautiful I have ever seen.

Mr. MALBY. Is there any outlet?

Maj. MORROW. No; except seepage and evaporation.

Mr. MALBY. Is there much of an intake?

Maj. MORROW. It is fed by the snow which falls there during the winter and drifts in during the storms. The wind blows the snow in there and it can not get out.

Mr. CANNON. There is no river running into it?

Maj. MORROW. No, sir.

Mr. CANNON. It is fresh water?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir. There are little streams feeding it from the snowdrifts.

Mr. MALBY. Are there any fish in the lake?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir. They have a regulation limiting the catch to six.

Mr. MALBY. What kind of fish?

Maj. MORROW. Trout and some bass.

Mr. MALBY. Lake trout?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir. Six are about all you want to carry up the hill, climbing right up an incline of about 45°.

Mr. CANNON. Are the fish healthy?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALBY. This system of roads, does it include a road to the railway 6 miles away?

Maj. MORROW. Here [indicating] is the road which runs right around the lake. The map shows it. Here [indicating] are the three approach roads planned.

Mr. MALBY. Where does it go?

Maj. MORROW. Ultimately to Medford.

Mr. MALBY. How far away is that?

Maj. MORROW. One hundred miles.

Mr. MALBY. Through the forest reserve?

Maj. MORROW. A portion of the distance; yes, sir.

Mr. MALBY. And the balance private land?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALBY. Has the Government expended any money on that up to the present time?

Maj. MORROW. I think the forest people have improved that road only as much as necessary to get around the range.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any reason in the world for building roads other than around the rim of this lake and to a point outside by which the public can get in? There is not anything in particular about the scenery away from the lake that would justify the Government in building an elaborate system of roads for automobiles?

Maj. MORROW. No, sir; but you want one road to get in.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but you do not want several roads to get in.

Maj. MORROW. If the people come in automobiles it is a good thing to have them go out on a different road from the one on which they come in.

Mr. SHERLEY. If it is not too much of an expense for the benefit of a limited number of people wealthy enough to own automobiles and who visit a lake of that kind.

Mr. CANNON. What is the distance to this entrance?

Maj. MORROW. About 6 miles.

The CHAIRMAN. How many miles around that lake?

Maj. MORROW. Thirty-five miles.

The CHAIRMAN. What character of road was the estimate based on?

Maj. MORROW. On a roadway surface 16 feet wide with 12 feet of macadam in the center, the width not entirely covered with macadam, but 16 feet of excavation, principally excavation.

Mr. SHERLEY. You estimate $20,000 annually to maintain these roads after built?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. That contemplates how much mileage of roads?

Maj. MORROW. That contemplates the entire mileage—something like 62 miles.

Mr. SHERLEY. Sixty-two miles of roads and $20,000; that is three hundred odd dollars a mile for maintenance?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. I notice that you contemplate sprinkling. Have you considered or estimated at all on the cost of oiling?

Maj. MORROW. That was gone into to a certain extent. The chances are that at this place oil will be used on the road, either in the shape of a bituminous construction or oil for maintenance.

Mr. CANNON. Is it soft or hard rock?

Maj. MORROW. It is hard rock. It will grind up—all rock will—but it is much better than ordinary limestone.

The CHAIRMAN. This survey which you made contemplates how many miles of road?

Maj. MORROW. 61.7; about 62 miles.

The CHAIRMAN. You spoke about 35 miles; would that cover the entrance?

Maj. MORROW. There are 39 miles, the circle around the lake and the distance to the entrance, to what will be the principal railroad entrance to the park.

The CHAIRMAN. And the total estimate of building that 61.7 miles is what?

Maj. MORROW. $627,000 for the 62 miles.

The CHAIRMAN. What would be the cost of the 39 miles?

Maj. MORROW. $468,000.

The CHAIRMAN. It would take 10 years to complete the entire system, according to your statement?

Maj. MORROW. Not 10 years; about 7 years, altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any roads there now?

Maj. MORROW. Just mountain roads. You can get over them with an automobile, but they are very kinky and in very bad shape. During the season there are probably now anywhere from three to seven automobiles which go up to the rim of the lake every day, besides the ones run by this company that has a lodge up there.

Maj. JADWIN. Mr. Chairman, you asked Gen. Bixby about the way the estimate was prepared and whether he could handle the work relatively economically. Maj. Morrow may throw some light on that.

Maj. MORROW. That point came up in the hearing with the general the other day as to whether the work of construction should be transferred to the Interior Department. The general spoke to me about it and suggested that possibly there were reasons he had not touched upon why the work might better be constructed by the engineer office out there. There is one point that should be emphasized: I have in the office at Portland an organization for river and harbor work for the Celilo Canal, where we are spending $600,000 to $800,000 a year, and that job contemplates a lot of excavation work. I have four steam shovels and a big land dredge on that work, in addition to the plant for putting in concrete. It just so happens that the high-water season in the Columbia River agrees absolutely with the working season in the Crater Lake National Park. The Columbia River flood begins in May or June and comes down in August. If this work were done there would be the advantage of being able to shift a portion of the force, and in that way enable the parties to get in there with a little more facility and to use part of the plant by transfer at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. How far apart are these places?

Maj. MORROW. About 300 miles. But I am confronted just at this time and at this season of every year with the proposition of having to reduce the force at Celilo for three or four months; some of the men have to be laid off and are laid off. If this work were going on in the same office there would be that advantage of having a place to shift a considerable portion of them.

The CHAIRMAN. You state that three, five, or seven automobiles go through the park during a day?

Maj. MORROW. I say go up to the lodge.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they private cars or cars operated by the company?

Maj. MORROW. They are private cars; the company operates one and sometimes two automobiles to carry the people up to the lodge; but these are private cars in addition to those operated by the company, and sometimes there are seven or eight up there overnight.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the company carry many people?

Maj. MORROW. They carry anywhere from five to a dozen a day during the season in this machine that runs up from Klamath Falls. They charge $10 for that round trip in the automobile.

The CHAIRMAN. I asked that because I notice the fee paid by that company is $30.

Mr. MALBY. Is it an automobile company?

Maj. MORROW. No, sir; it is the Crater Lake Co., which runs this lodge or camping place at the rim of the lake.

Mr. SHERLEY. And they pay $30 for that privilege?

Maj. MORROW. I did not know they paid anything. They have a dozen or twenty tents there, and a big house which they use as a kitchen and dining room.

Mr. MALBY. And they accommodate anybody who goes there?

Maj. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Maj. JADWIN. Maj. Morrow has made reference in his report to a probable large increase in the number of tourists who will travel at the time of the San Francisco Exposition.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 17, 1912.

Mr. JAMES C. COURTS,
Clerk Committee on Appropriations, House of Reprcsentatives.

SIR: * * * A memorandum, prepared in this office, is attached giving information concerning the cost of maintenance of wagon roads by the use of oil and by sprinkling with water, along lines suggested by questions asked by some of the members of the committee in connection with Maj. Morrow's testimony.

Very respectfully,
W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

[Memorandum concerning the cost of maintenance of wagon roads by the use of oil and by sprinkling with water. Prepared in the office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, April 17, 1912.]

PARK AND COUNTY ROADS AND SUBURBAN STREETS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The cost of oil constitutes about two-thirds of the cost of work of oiling the county roads and suburban streets in the District of Columbia. Oils of several kinds were used, including a considerable amount of emulsified oil; this latter oil was found to be better adapted to residence streets where there is much pedestrian traffic on account of being less adhesive to the feet when first applied; it is also less expensive. The heavier oils were found to be best adapted to roads having considerable automobile travel and the lighter oils to roads having heavy hauling and where the surface is loose. These oils are used instead of sprinkling with water, with the result that the dust is kept down at all periods of the day instead of drying out at intervals. The cost of laying varied from about 3 cents to a little over 6 cents per square yard; the cost of watering was about 2½ cents per square yard. While the expense of oiling is greater than of watering, the additional advantage of preservation compensated for the increased expense, for the life of the roadway is considerably increased.

WASHINGTON PARK SYSTEM: PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The cost of treating with oil and tar is, on an average, 2½ cents per square yard, with oil at 6½ cents per gallon. The roads were, in general, good macadam roads. At this price a 16-foot road would cost about $235 per mile per annum for oiling. Average cost of sprinkling with water in past years was 3.2 cents per square yard, or about $300 per mile for a road 16 feet wide.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES (FROM HANDBOOK OF COST DATA, GILLETTE, PP. 154 AND 155).

Mr. E. W. Howe gives the cost of sprinkling macadam park roads (locality not stated) as follows per mile per year: Water (16 cents per 1,000 gallons), $187; teaming, $533. The road was sprinkled 10 times daily to keep the dust down, a sprinkler with fine holes being used. The cost of maintaining these roads was about $200 per mile per year, distributed thus: Screenings, $130; teaming, $50; labor, $20.

ROADS IN EUROPE, NEW JERSEY, AND MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. L. Y. Grabill, superintendent of county roads, Washington, D. C., expresses the opinion that the good condition of the ordinary country roads in Ireland and Scotland is due to the character of rock used which, under ordinary travel, keeps well compacted as the result of the high degree of moisture in the climate.

In the New Jersey report for 1907 an estimate is made for cost of maintenance for the entire State of $300 per mile, and the report states that that estimate is considered low. One county in New Jersey in 1907 expended $436 per mile for maintenance. The cost of maintenance of the highways in the vicinity of Newton, Mass., in 1910, was $541 per mile for maintenance only.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The estimated cost of oil delivered in the park is about 10 cents per gallon.

An estimate made in 1903 indicated that the cost of oiling a 10-foot road in the park would be approximately $440 a year. The question is now being carefully investigated again. The average cost of sprinkling roads in the park during the past three years has been about $300 per mile.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the report to which the gentleman calls attention recommends that $627,000 be expended in the construction of 62 miles of road in this national park. Last year there were 4,500 visitors at the park, and the receipts obtained from the various concessions in the park by the Federal Government amounted to $389. A 20-year concession has just been granted to the so-called Crater Lake Co., so that if this system of roads that is contemplated is to be constructed at the rate contemplated in the gentleman's amendment it will take 14 years to complete it. The committee believed, in its investigations of these various parks, that before any very extended appropriation should be made for improvements in them it is of the utmost importance that some definite plan of control and development be determined upon by Congress. The estimate for these roads was made under a survey made by the War Department. This appropriation, if granted, would be expended under the Interior Department.

The roads in the Yellowstone National Park have already been built under the Army engineers. This money, if appropriated as now proposed, would be expended by the Interior Department. This park has roads now. Maj. Morrow said they are just marked roads, but that you can go over them with automobiles. Before Congress should undertake to enter upon a scheme of expending $627,000 for roads in this park, to build 62 miles of roads at a cost of $10,000 a mile, some plan should be adopted by which these concessionaires should make reasonable return to the Government, and some fixed policy should be adopted regarding all of the parks. The Federal Government has rather overdone the matter of national parks. Some of them are well worthy of development, but as concerning others very serious questions arise.

In the Glacier National Park, for instance, there are within the limits of the park a number of homestead entries, and one of the most attractive and beautiful lakes in the entire park is surrounded by homesteaders, so that every dollar expended by the Federal Government in the development and improvement of that park prior to the acquisition of these private rights within the park will simply tend to enormously enhance the value of the private holdings in the park.

The committee believed, in view of all the facts developed in the investigations regarding the parks, that it would be unwise at this time, until opportunity has been afforded to consider a plan that had been proposed to consolidate the question of management of these parks and the defining of some policy toward the development, to undertake these very extraordinary improvements. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAWLEY) there were—ayes 20, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mesa Verde National Park, Colo.: For protection and improvement of Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., including the lands within 5 miles of the boundaries of said reservation, which, under the act of June 29, 1906, are to be administered by the same service established for the custodianship of the park, $7,500.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not believe there is anything which so thrills the human body as the contemplation of enjoyment, and commensurately, in opposite degree, disappointment. It does not happen that this gem of creation, the Mesa Verde National Park, is in my district. At the same time, however, speaking for Colorado, as a Member from the West, being looked upon as one of the most voracious individuals, looking for everything that might be had from the Government, looters of the public domain, and so forth, I feel I must raise my voice in favor of one of the grandest sights there is in the Western Hemisphere.

I believe that this Goverment has done a very generous thing to give us $7,500. [Applause.] I am going to disappoint my friends over there in not allowing them to raise a point of order. I consent to the amendment that is offered by the committee for the $7,500, and we are very thankful for them. We hope that they will do the same thing for us next year. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For protection and improvement of Mount Rainier National Park, construction of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads, $5,400.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following at the end of line 20, page 107, Mount Rainier National Park: "For the improvement of the Government road between the National Park Inn, in the Mount Rainier National Park, to a point where the Government road leaves the national forest reserve, $35,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. This part of the bill has reference to national parks. The gentleman is speaking of some road leading to the national park.

Mr. WARBURTON. No; the amendment is offered for the appropriation of $35,000 for the improvement of that part of the road in the national park extending——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a Government road; it is not on Government land.

Mr. WARBURTON. But the gentleman is mistaken; it is a Government road.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the point of order.

[Mr. WARBURTON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement made by the gentleman very greatly impressed the committee when it was made on another occasion, and it rather inclined the committee to favorable action upon this improvement or to serious consideration of some relief of the situation. But the committee was subsequently furnished with information which the gentleman has not been kind enough to give to this committee. From the entrance of the park to the limit of the forest reserve there is only one available route for a road, and along that route there was a roughly cut road that enabled the Forest Service to take out timber; and if any road is to be constructed it must be constructed along that line.

It is 3 miles from the limit of the boundary of the park to the boundary of the forest reserve, and practically every foot of that land through which that road must go from the park to the boundary of the forest reserve is in private ownership, having been taken up by homestead entries.

That information did not come from the gentleman who is now offering this amendment. It was furnished by the Forester of the Department of Agriculture, who called the attention of the committee to the fact that this road was just as much a county road as any other road in the county about which the gentleman speaks, as having been improved at the expense of the county, and it would mean that the United States would enter upon the policy of building roads upon private holdings in the several States.

With that information before the committee, the complexion of this entire matter changed very materially. In view of the fact that there was no authority to build roads of this character, that the proposed road was not upon the public domain, and that it was not in a forest reserve, although it would very greatly enhance taxable values in this county, the committee believed it would be absolutely indefensible to make an appropriation for any such purpose.

I insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman, in as much as this road is not upon Government land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Mr. WARBURTON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a question. The gentleman from New York said that this 3 miles of road within the exterior limits of the forest reserve and outside of the park was on private land.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not in the forest reserve at all, because it had been taken up in homesteads.

Mr. MANN. I say, it is within the exterior limits of the forest reserve, it is not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there not a road used by the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is such a road.

Mr. MANN. Does not the road belong to the Government? How could the Forest Service have a road there otherwise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They were permitted by the people to get through there. It is the only feasible place to do it.

Mr. MANN. If there is a road dedicated there——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a road dedicated.

Mr. MANN. A road dedicated by practical use is a road dedicated, just the same as if it were done by a formal proceeding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Even if it is a dedicated road, it does not belong to the Federal Government, because they could not give it to the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. If there is a road within the exterior limits of the forest reserve, and it is a public road, I take it that it does belong to the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The forester states that this is not in the forest reserve. If the land is taken up in homesteads, it is not within the forest reserve.

Mr. MANN. It is within the exterior limits of the forest reserve.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not agree with the gentleman's statement that it is within the exterior limits, because the forester says it is not in the forest reserve. It can not be in the forest reserve, because these are homesteads.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any difference between us——

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are private holdings, and the Government can not include them in any forest reserve.

Mr. MANN. I understand that in making a forest reserve the President has the power, and exercises it, to cover all the public lands within certain exterior limits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not public land.

Mr. MANN. It covers all the public land within those exterior limits. Now, a road is public land in one sense. If there is a road there, I think we do have jurisdiction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, this road is over the private holdings of private individuals.

Mr. NORRIS. Are not these private holdings within the forest reserve?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they can not be within it.

Mr. MANN. They are within the exterior limits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. I looked at the map.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, they are within the limits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are not within the forest reserve, because the fact that they are taken up by private holdings makes it certain that they are out of the forest reserve.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, if the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are connected right up with the rest of the county there.

Mr. MANN. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman—going into the merits of the proposition—if this road should be constructed, would not the principal beneficiary of it be the Government, which owns the park and the forest reserve?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so sure that it would be. I think the principal beneficiaries would be the owners of the property through which this road would be constructed. It would add immensely to the value of those private holdings.

Mr. MANN. Here are a few quarter sections homesteaded. Those people do not need a macadamized road for automobiles, do they?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but, if the gentleman will permit me, they have so located their claims as to take up the only available route for a road. It must have been done with deliberation, to take advantage of the Government in this situation.

Mr. WARBURTON. That is not so.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, it is perfectly apparent, from the statement which was made the other day by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON], that that road, only 3 miles long, ought to be improved to connect with the roads on each side of it. Here is a road—I do not remember how many miles long—outside of the forest reserve, and a road in the park, and for the lack of a connecting link 3 miles long these two roads are unconnected. It is perfectly patent that somebody ought to build the road. Is there not some way of having the Government contribute at least a portion of the cost of the building of the road within the forest reserve?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggested to the forester that the Agricultural Department had half a million dollars with which it could build a road in the forest reserve, and the forester made the statement that it is not in the forest reserve.

Mr. SIMS. Was that road built over private land at the expense of the Government, for the purpose of saving a greater expense to the Government in going over a worse or more inconvenient route? That was the statement made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON].

Mr. FITZGERALD. The so-called road amounts to the cutting and clearing of the standing timber off a stretch through which they can take the cut timber. That is all.

Mr. SIMS. Could the Government have constructed a road that would have answered the purposes of the Government without going over this particular private land?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it could, although it would not have been quite as convenient.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will not the people who get the most benefit from this road be the people in the town right near there, who have the advantage of this national park in such close proximity, and who are getting revenues out of it because of the attractions in the park?

Mr. SIMS. I will not controvert that, because I am asking for information; but if the Government built the road through private property at its own request, in order to save money to itself, it does not seem to me that it ought to be regarded as a private enterprise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WARBURTON. I should like to have a couple of minutes, just to answer the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact these settlers went there many years before the park was ever created. They did not go there with any idea of getting in the way of the Government. Nobody could have told at that time where the Government road would go. They took their homesteads along the river, in the valley, as people naturally would do. The Government went to these settlers and asked them for a right of way, on the theory that it was going to build and maintain the road. The Government owns it to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Government could not take property without special authority of Congress.

Mr. WARBURTON. The Secretary of War has in his possession to-day the deeds of all these roads in forest reserves excepting this 400 feet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken; the Government can not take it without special authority of Congress.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the settlers did not settle there with a view to speculation.

Mr. WARBURTON. No; they did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the amendment it is proposed to appropriate $35,000 for the improvement of the Government road between the National Park Inn, in the Rainier National Park, and the point where the Government road leaves the national forest reserve.

The question which is most important to the Chair hinges upon the word "improvement." If the word "repair" were used instead of the word "improvement" the Chair would overrule the point of order; but, under the word "improvement" in the amendment, the money could be used in the purchase of ground to widen the road. In the District of Columbia we frequently appropriate money for the repair of streets, but there must be an authorization for the improvement of a road which would necessitate the purchase of ground to widen the road. Because of the word "improvement" in the amendment, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment again, substituting the word "repair" for the word "improvement."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that at this point of the bill we are carrying appropriations for the maintenance of national parks and that the provision for a Government road outside of a national park is not germane to this part of the bill and not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, in relation to the amendment now before the House, which uses the word "repair" instead of "improvement," the Chair invites attention to Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 534, where the following language is used:

An appropriation for repair of an existing Government road to a national cemetery is in order on a general appropriation bill as in continuance of a public work.

An appropriation to build a new road to a national cemetery was ruled out of a general appropriation bill as not being a legitimate continuation of the cemetery as a public work.

The Chair therefore holds that this amendment is now in order, and overrules that point of order. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WARBURTON) there were 23 ayes and 43 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the words "thirty-five thousand" and insert the words "twenty thousand."

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Washington reoffers the amendment with $20,000 inserted instead of $35,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let it be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by adding the following at the end of line 20, page 107:

"Mount Ranier National Park: For the repair of the Government road between the National Park Inn in the Ranier National Park and the point where the Government road meets the national forest reserve, $20,000."

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I will change that from $20,000 to $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington modifies his amendment by making it $15,000, and the question is on the amendment as modified.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WARBURTON) there were 27 ayes and 42 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. WARBURTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by inserting immediately preceding line 21, page 107, the following:

"That from and after the date of the passage of this act the wagon road to the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington, constructed over private and national forest lands under the direction of the Secretary of War, pursuant to acts of Congress approved March 3, 1903 (32 Stat. L., p. 1130), and April 28, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 498), shall be, and is, placed under the administrative jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, who is hereby authorized to make and execute rules and regulations for the protection, control, supervision, and maintenance of the said road."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment. I thank the gentleman for admitting what I have contended for.

Mr. WARBURTON. That is done at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, who inserted the word "private." I did not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not care who requested it. The gentleman from Washington is not to blame. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that that is clearly legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107, after line 20, insert the following:

"Wind Cave National Park, S. Dak.: For the improvement and protection of the Wind Cave National Park, $2,500."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee at this late hour. I wish to say that this appropriation has been carried heretofore for the Wind Cave Park, S. Dak. It is estimated for, I believe, at $4,100. I am unable to find any reference to the matter in the published hearings, but in the examination of the bill of last year this seems to be the only park for which an appropriation is not provided for in this bill, and I assume that it was inadvertently omitted from the bill. I therefore hope the amendment will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to contradict the gentleman's statement that this was inadvertently left out. It was deliberately left out. If there is any excuse for Wind Cave National Park, nobody has ever been able to discover it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Considering that this is campaign year, does the gentleman not think that we can afford to appropriate something for Wind Cave Park?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; we do not want the wind confined to that cave.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from New York that I discovered that Platt National Park is included in the bill, and I could not form any other conclusion than that Wind Cave National Park must have been inadvertently left out of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is aware of the fact that those interested in Platt National Park have not displayed any great enthusiasm over the recommendations made by the committee regarding it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glacier National Park, Mont.: For administration and improvement of Glacier National Park, the construction of roads, bridges, telephone lines, and the repair of roads, trails, bridges, $50,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item provides for the improvement of one of the newest and one of the finest of all of the national parks. I have not offered an amendment increasing the amount because I know that it would be entirely useless to do so.

We have had this evening a beautiful illustration of the way in which this appropriation bill has been prepared. As we have read item after item Members interested in the public service proposed to be provided for have one after another risen in their places and offered reasonable amendments for necessary improvements, and they have all been voted down. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, and yet my guess is that when we again consider this bill after its journey elsewhere practically every item offered this evening will be in the bill, and in the course of time the gentleman from New York in charge of the bill will bring in a conference report agreeing to those items. What is the result of that sort of policy adopted by the committee in connection with this bill? It is to take from the Members of this House whatever influence they may have, whatever standing they ought to have, in the matter of securing needed and necessary appropriations for the public service. The result is to wear out the marble floor between here and another place by the tread of the Representatives of the people going elsewhere to obtain those things which are denied them in the body of which they are Members. So year after year this thing goes on.

I suppose it will go on if the gentlemen in control of this bill continue in their present position, and the prestige of the House falls lower and lower. Who so short sighted, who so foolish as to approach a Representative asking him to secure a needed appropriation for his district, when he knows that there is little possibility of securing it? No; he goes elsewhere to another body, and so the committees of this House deprive the Members of the opportunity to serve the people they represent, and thus enhance the prestige of another body. Incidentally they give us an exhibition of how a committee of this House can and does refuse Members of the House even a decent hearing in regard to the matters of appropriations relating to their districts.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the other body to which the gentleman is referring the one that gave the city of Sundance $175,000 for a post-office building—the aforesaid Sundance having only 275 inhabitants? Is that the body to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, here is another gentleman who has got Sundance on the brain, and I am delighted to have the beautiful city of Sundance receive this advertisement. Come up to Sundance, breathe the pure air of her mountain heights and get a broader view of things. But Sundance is not at issue at this time, and I trust that this committee will in the future mend its ways and give some heed to the amendments of Members for worthy objects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Platt National Park: For maintenance, bridging, roads, trails, and sewerage, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment increasing the amount to $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. What authority is there for sewerage in this park? Is there any law authorizing the Government to build sewers in Platt National Park?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are doing our best to prevent it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the amount there is not sufficient to build any sewers, and if the gentleman desires I will consent to have that stricken out.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can let it go out on a point of order and then reoffer it, or he can ask unanimous consent that the words "and sewerage" be stricken out.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the words "and sewerage," in line 2, page 108, be stricken out, and the word "and" be inserted before the word "trails."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to increase the amount by striking out "$5,000," in line 3, page 108, and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000."

This park is estimated for, and the amount of the estimate is $53,455.

I understand from the statement of the chairman of the committee that he does not want to commit the Federal Government to any large expenditures in these parks until some definite arrangement can be arrived at respecting them. I have offered to increase the amount only sufficient to cover little necessary repairs to keep what is there from going to wreck and ruin. As I said before, the estimate is more than $50,000. I have offered only fairly enough to take care of some items that will keep the park from going to wreck and ruin. I hope the chairman will accept the amendment. There is one item of $140 for a revetment wall. There is another item of $50 for improvement of a little spring and another one for $75 and a few little remnant items.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I move to strike out $5,000 and insert in lieu thereof $10,000. It ought to be for the full amount of the estimate.

I am well aware of the value of the time of the House and also the lateness of the hour, and I do not want to yield to anybody. Please permit me to proceed in my own way, at least for the present.

Mr. FOSTER. I have some sympathy with the gentleman——

Mr. FERRIS. I appreciate the gentleman's sympathy. I will also appreciate his vote.

Mr. FOSTER. But if I can not get the information I will have to vote against the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will let me proceed, as I do not desire to unduly detain the House. I shall try to give him the information. The situation is this: This park is located in the center of our State and has, approximately, 800 acres. It is an 800-acre park with 33 beautiful mineral springs, with beautiful timber, cataracts, and beautiful hills, in the middle of a prairie State. It is the only institution of the kind in the State or in the Southwest. The Government is not surfeited with parks. We do not get anything for rivers and harbors, we do not get any of the appropriations that most of the States get. We have more than one-third of all the Indians of the United States, whose lands are nontaxable. The recent tax decision has stricken from the tax rolls of our State pretty nearly all of the taxable areas in the eastern part of the State. This is a small item, and I hope the chairman of the committee will accept this amendment. I think it is not too much to ask.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says this is the only thing in Oklahoma upon which the Federal Government can expend money. The gentleman understands that is not my fault. I did my best to give this great, magnificent national park to the State of Oklahoma——

Mr. FERRIS. We thoroughly understood the generosity of the gentleman on former occasions.. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the amount be increased for the full amount of the estimate, which aggregates $53,455, but for the fact that the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill has stated that it was not his intention to incur any large expenses in any of the parks until some well-defined and well-mapped-out plan had been adopted with reference to them. Of course I, with others who have been disappointed in the size of their park appropriations in this bill, would like to cure that disappointment by having an amount sufficient appropriated to do the things necessary to make the park what it should be. I am only asking at this time an amount sufficient for the park to make a few needed improvements and keep things in repair until such time as the park may be given a regular status, and properly appropriated for in proportion to her natural advantages.

It has been said by this committee in the past on this floor, and it has been said to me in person when presenting the matter to different members of the committee, that this park had been offered to the State and she had refused to accept it. This is a true statement of the situation, and the State does not now desire to accept it; not because it is not of value, but because it has natural attractions, national in character, that induced the Federal Government to purchase it and establish it in the beginning—to make it a national park, not a State park. It has those same attractions now, and even more; the beautiful city of Sulphur has been built up about it. It has been partially improved and beautified, the value and medicinal qualities of the water are now well and favorably established, and why should the Federal Government now undo or take the back track on their former position?

I know this is a time of intense economy, but surely the time has not arrived when the National Government should purchase and establish a park at great cost in 1902 and later, in 1904, adding thereto by an addition, and then in the good year 1912 throw that away. I do not believe the Appropriation Committee are performing any service in constantly attacking these parks. The State of Oklahoma is proud of the park. The State of Oklahoma appreciates, visits, and uses the park. Her visitors from other States use and enjoy the park. There is no other park near this one. The park was purchased from the Indians to the end that it might not be despoiled. Oklahoma has more than one-third of all the Indians in the United States. I think it is not too much in deference to them alone to beautify, improve, and make something of this park. They were the aboriginal owners of it all once, now we own it all. It is not a large sum.

It has 33 mineral springs of which the whole State and every visitor to the park is thrice proud. During the years of 1910 and 1911, respectively, more than 30,000 visitors visited and were benefited by the waters and the park. This shows it is of benefit. This shows it is appreciated.

The park abounds in beautiful scenery, healthful water, a delightful climate, a hospitable people, and her natural advantages are certainly all that could be asked.

It has been contended by the members of the committee that the park has no nation-wide advantages which entitle it to longer recognition as a national park. On this I join issue squarely. I could insert testimonials from the best physicians of the country as to what the water has and will accomplish, but I will not now detain the House with that phase of the matter.

The park has been estimated for by the department. They recognize its worth. They recognize the necessity for this appropriation. They see no reason to change their view that it is still a park of sufficient proportions and value. I have the Book of Estimates before me, and I will present the items for which the department has estimated that there be appropriated $53,455.

Platt National Park, Okla.:

For protection and improvement of Platt National Park and the construction of a sanitary sewer (acts July 1, 1902, vol. 32, p. 655, sec. 1; Apr. 21, 1904, vol. 33, p. 220, sec. 1; Mar. 4, 1911, vol. 36, p. 1420, sec. 1)	$53,455.60	$10,000.00

The gentleman from Illinois objected to the item for the sewer and it was eliminated, but it should not have been done. Due to the topography, the park took in the only tangible or, I might say, possible outlet for the city sewer. In creating the park they were compelled to move the town of Sulphur, or at least a large part of it, twice to accommodate the Government and help the Government with the institution, and now they will not allow the city to use the natural sewer that nature gave them, neither will they construct their share of the sewer from the line of the park across and on their own property. However, I consented to allow the word "sewer" to be omitted in deference to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] inasmuch as the amount carried would not be sufficient to construct the sewer anyway.

Every item of the estimate is not only needed, but is badly needed. In deference to the statement of the chairman and the general paring down of all the appropriations I am not asking the full amount, but do want to emphatically assert that we do not concede that any of it should go out.

On the subject of the necessity of this item I can not do better or furnish better information on the subject than to quote from a letter recently received from the Hon. C. B. Emanuel, Sulphur, Okla., addressed to me on the subject. I will read it:

The first town of Sulphur was built around the Hillside and Pavilion Springs. There a thriving little village sprang up and everything was growing and prosperous. The agents for the United States Government discovered these springs and their wonderful curative and medicinal qualities, and then came the first segregation. The town builders moved off willingly to a southeastern direction and started a town or town site on the land that I have circled with a pencil. In a few months Sulphur had a population of approximately 3,000. The question of sewerage came up, and from the report of Mr. H. V. Hinkley it was learned that the city could carry its sewerage to a southwesterly direction and by the expenditure of $8,000 empty all of this sewerage into Rock Creek, one-half mile below the Bromide Spring.

As from the second town site the sewage would have a natural drainage in the southwestern direction. From the records of the old city recorder I note that the actual taxable valuation of the real estate of this second town was more than $1,000,000. Just when they were getting ready to vote bonds for a sewer and water system the second segregation came. From the geological lay of the land they could not move any other direction than onto the present town site of this city, therefore there is absolutely no other direction for the city's sewage to flow other than the route it is now going. From the business portion of this city it is uphill both north, east, and west, therefore the sewage must go as it is now going—south. At present this city has a population of 5,000. Its actual taxable valuation is $2,800,000. We have paved streets, $90,000 water system, $56,000 sewer system, and more than $100,000 invested in our public-school buildings. This sewerage system, as I have heretofore stated, is a menace instead of a benefit to this city; for this reason: I have designated by a small square at the entrance of First Street west to the park the east side septic tank, or the place where all of this city's sewage empties. This method of the waste from a city is absolutely a failure. The sewage does not stop in the tank, but goes on down—the ditch I have indicated by a blue line—and empties into Travertine Creek. Last summer the smell or oder from this creek was so bad that one could not go within a block of it. Furthermore, this septic tank is only half block from the business portion of the town. It could not be placed elsewhere on account of the location or lay of the land, and for the reason that the Government would not cooperate with this city. The west side septic tank is located at a point I have indicated just south of the Santa Fe Railroad station, and that sewage also goes into Rock Creek, all of the sewage flowing through the park. What we want the Government to do is to construct an 18-inch sewer along the route indicated by the green line, keep the sewage out of the creeks, and empty it into Rock Creek outside of the reservation down below the Bromide Spring. The city will construct a line of sewerage along the routes indicated by red lines, and deposit its sewage into the Government sewerage, and it can be carried through the reservation to the place I have stated. The $300 item for revetment wall is for the purpose of constructing a cement wall for the purpose of keeping the embankment from caving into the Bromide Springs. I have indicated on this map just where it is to be built. Another very important item is the $10,000 administration building. I have indicated on this map where this building is to be constructed; and if it is built it will certainly be a great addition to Platt National Park and the city of Sulphur. The $1,200 item for driveways and trails is very, very important. I am sorry that it is not $12,000, as that amount will only be a starter that can be used in this direction.

C. B. Emanuel is a bright young lawyer and a member of the legislature from that county, and has the matter well in hand. His law partner, Mr. Broadbent, from Sulphur, made a trip here this winter to assist the committee and the Oklahoma delegation in making known the facts. He has been helpful to us. He has been helpful to the committee. The amount in the bill is the only complaint we have, and it should be enlarged here and now.

One word further about the proposition of ceding the park to the State of Oklahoma. The legislature of the State has spoken upon the proposition by a resolution. I incorporate it here so the House can observe the situation:

Resolution.

Whereas the Legislature and Senate of the State of Oklahoma, by house concurrent resolution No. 13, duly and regularly passed in December, 1910, and signed by the governor, did cede all right, title, and interest that the State of Oklahoma had or might have acquired in and to Platt National Park, by virtue of the supplementary agreement, to the United States of America, copies of which concurrent resolution were duly forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior, to the honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each member of the delegation in Congress from the State of Oklahoma; and

Whereas up to this time the said resolution has not been presented to the Federal Congress for adoption and acceptance; and

Whereas the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, by virtue of the supplemental agreement, relinquished, ceded, and conveyed the lands contained in the said park to the United States of America, to be by it held, controlled, and owned absolutely and without any restriction as a national park for the use and benefit of all mankind forever; that the State of Oklahoma is unable financially to hold and maintain said park in a manner in accordance with the original intention of the Indian tribes; and that should the Federal Government not retain said park it must eventually fall into the hands of individual speculators; and

Whereas the patronage from the entire Southwest to Platt National Park has grown to such large proportions as shown by the records of the superintendent of said park for the years 1909, 1910, and 1911 that improvements should be made for the better accommodation of the growing number of annual visitors who avail themselves of the medicinal springs, as well as for the protection of the springs themselves, and that it is meet and fitting that this park, located as it is in the heart of the last home of the red man, should be held and controlled by the National Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, By the people of Sulphur and vicinity, in mass meeting assembled, in behalf of themselves, the Indian tribes, and the entire Southwest:

First. That we earnestly urge the acceptance by Congress of the aforesaid concurrent resolution of the Oklahoma Legislature forever fixing the title to the Platt National Park in the Federal Government; that we request that the appropriation for the park as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior be made by Congress at once; and, in addition, we urge the Congress of the United States to inaugurate such a course as will result in so improving and beautifying the park as to make it a fitting memorial to the Indian race so long as time shall last.

Second. That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Hon. C. D. CARTER, Hon. BIRD MCGUIRE, Hon. DICK T. MORGAN, Hon. J. S. DAVENPORT, our Representatives in Congress; to Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker of the House of Representatives; and to the Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN and Hon. THOMAS P. GORE, our Senators.

H. W. BROADBENT.
N. P. WEGD.
P. S. WILSON.

Unanimously adopted in mass meeting this 1st day of May, A. D. 1912.

GEO. C. BOLEND, Chairman.
P. S. WILSON, Secretary.

Our State is new, and there are many burdens to carry in a new State. We do not share the usual Government appropriations for waterways, shipbuilding, and so forth. I think it is not too much, with our large nontaxable Indian-land areas, for the new State to respectfully yet firmly ask the Federal Government to retain the park and provide well for it, as they ought to do.

The House ought to afford the park the full estimate of $53,455, but surely it will be entitled to the small increase asked for by my amendment. I ask for a vote and for the adoption of the amendment just offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To carry out the good faith in the treaty made many years ago with the Indians. I did so because I believed it desirable to keep faith with these wards of the Nation. According to the statement of residents of Oklahoma, there are in this national park springs of medicinal character unrivaled on the face of the earth. And a prospectus issued by a gentleman living in Sulphur Springs set out how the lame, the halt, and decrepit were carried from railroad trains in the evening to these springs in the park and, after taking one long, exhilarating draft, immediately walked away with the youth, health [laughter and applause] of the most vigorous man that the country possesses.

And this treasure, this very valuable property, the Congress endeavored to give to the State of Oklahoma, and the gentleman from Oklahoma and his colleagues resented any attempt to take from the United States this most valuable possession. Now, I do not believe the gentleman should complain that after the United States endeavored to give this valuable park to his State that it does not squander any unnecessary money upon it.

Mr. HOWARD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not a fact that they moved the town back twice to get this Sulphur Springs Park? I understand the town was lower down and it was moved back to get the benefit of these springs. Now, does not the gentleman think, in view of that fact, the gentleman from Oklahoma ought to have the limit increased?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have given all the money they can possibly expend in salaries, and there is nothing else to do. There is nothing to protect. The 833 acres of land will not go to rack and ruin. They will stay there and the springs will continue and the grateful multitudes will continue to come to those springs and go away rejoicing, benefited by their sojourn.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by my colleague from Oklahoma will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is there an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. MANN. It was not reported.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported once, but the Clerk will report it again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, the estimate, as stated by my colleague, for the improvement of this park was in excess of $50,000. There is no question but all these improvements should be made. There is no question but what the Platt National Park ought to have the same consideration as other national parks in the United States, and I hope that this little increase of from $5,000 to $10,000 will be carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma will be granted. [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted. [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over the items under the heading of Government Hospital for the Insane, under the head of Howard University, and under the head of Freedmen's Hospital. I ask that they be passed over temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request. [After a pause.] No objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans.: For continuing construction of the new United States Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $100,000, to be available immediately and to remain available until expended, all of which sum shall be so expended as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of said penitentiary.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to this paragraph, that the amount of $100,000, in line 25, page 111, be changed to $167,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 111, line 25, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$167,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides that the sum appropriated shall be expended so as to give the maximum employment of the inmates of the penitentiary. That is a very necessary provision at that institution. The object of it is to keep the prisoners employed. The appropriation as carried in the bill of $100,000 will not do this. The Department of Justice asks for $167,000 with that idea in view, and if the bill is allowed to be enacted into law carrying only $100,000 the project on foot there for construction will be but half completed. During the present year the convicts will be kept in idleness for fully six months in the year and will bring about a condition there that will result in manifest injury to the convicts. It is a well-known fact that a convict maintained in ideness simply rots in his cell. It would be not only an injustice to these poor men confined behind the bars, but it would be a definite loss to the Government in the loss of the labor of these men. The convicts in that penitentiary are now engaged on the work of constructing new buildings. They are constructing a new penitentiary. If they are not given the required amount of money to carry on this work the Government simply loses the result of their labor. Therefore I ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that the department has asked for $167,000 in order to give this maximum of employment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. An estimate of $167,000 was submitted.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Can the gentleman state how much has been expended at that institution since July 1, 1911, in construction work?

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not give the exact figures. I understand it is considerably more than the amount called for in the present bill.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I will say this, that I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Kansas that a sufficient amount ought to be given to utilize the time of the convicts there. I notice, however, that at the beginning of this fiscal year there was a balance on hand of about $120,000, a surplus coming over from the preceding year; and in addition to that an appropriation of $100,000 was made for construction work, which would make about $220,000. I have not any information as to the amount that has been expended or the amount that is likely to be expended during this fiscal year.

Mr. ANTHONY. If that is the case, I should say the amount should be reappropriated in order to carry out the present plans that are under way.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I think it has been.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is aware, in his Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, that the department has already purchased there over $100,000 of structural material, which is lying there on the ground and ought to be utilized. This committee should appropriate the amount to enable the men there to work that structural iron into those buildings, and I hope the amount will be raised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in 1908 and 1909 $100,000 was annually appropriated for this purpose. For the fiscal year 1910 $212,000 was estimated and $100,000 was appropriated. For the current year $125,000 was estimated and $100,000 was appropriated.

There is a very good reason for continuing this work at this rate. It is practically the only work available upon which to utilize the convicts. It is not desirable that the work should be rushed and finished quickly. One hundred thousand dollars a year enables the Department of Justice to furnish employment to the convicts in this prison and to keep the work going on at a rate sufficiently rapid as not to impair the efficiency with which the work is done.

In view of the history of this work, and in view of the fact that the committee believed that it would be advisable, before the work proceeded much further, to recommend or have enacted some legislation that would put an end to the contracts under which the architects are obtaining very extraordinary fees, as appeared to the committee, there is no special reason why more rapid progress should be made in the next year than has been made in the last five years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. MANN. My information is that these appropriations have been available under the law until expended. Is the gentleman able to say how much of a balance there will be at the end of this fiscal year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They spend substantially this amount each year.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] to say that there was available at the end of the fiscal year 1911 over $100,000.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. One hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What year?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. At the end of the last fiscal year there came over a balance of $121,000, according to my information. Just what that balance will be for the present fiscal year I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall; but since 1908 the appropriations have been $100,000 a year. There was no good reason, no good grounds shown, for that increase.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] what is his authority for saying that there was a balance of $121,000 left at the end of the last fiscal year? That is pertinent, as showing how much they need to expend in a fiscal year.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. As chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, I have had an extended correspondence with the Attorney General's Office in regard to the construction work at Leavenworth, and from information received from that office I prepared a table that went into one of the hearings. That shows that $121,000 was left over as a balance at the beginning of the present fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman quite sure that that $121,000 came out of this appropriation?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. For construction?

Mr. MANN. I think there is only the one.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It comes out a balance, $121,000 of money that has been appropriated for construction work at the Leavenworth Penitentiary. That is my information.

Mr. MANN. If it came out of this item, of course that would indicate that they had not been expending as much as $100,000 a year.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. In some of the previous years there had been appropriations in excess of $100,000. Those appropriations were available until expended, and there was an accumulation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] stated that the amount appropriated since 1908 was $100,000 a year. Those appropriations remain available until expended, as I recall, under the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, and in each instance, with the exception of 1911, the estimate was in excess of the amount appropriated. These appropriations were made immediately available, and continue available until expended. The next bill will become a law before the 4th of March next, and this money will be supplemented by another appropriation at that time. There has been expended about $1,800,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if it is not a fact that it is probable that this apparent balance will be taken up when contracts now outstanding are payable? For instance, suppose they make contracts for structural iron and other materials that may not be paid for at the termination of the fiscal year, but will be paid a few months later, if the appropriations are continued?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, in the year 1907, for example, appropriations were made to the amount of $300,000. There seem to have been two appropriations. Only $170,000 was spent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In 1907 the appropriation was $200,000.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. No; it was $300,000. There was one appropriation of $200,000, and on March 4, 1907, another appropriation of $100,000. On May 27, 1908, there was another $100,000. In that year $123,000 was spent. The next year there was $100,000, and $100,000 spent. The next year there was an appropriation of $100,000, and $108,000 spent. The next year there was an appropriation of $100,000, and $120,000 spent. Total appropriation for Leavenworth Penitentiary, $1,789,000. Total expenditures there for construction work, $1,667,000, leaving a balance on hand June 30, 1911, of $112,000, instead of $121,000, as I stated a moment ago.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the necessity for the increase of this amount for construction, I am informed that a reduction of this estimate means that the overcrowding in the institution, which brings about such bad results, will be continued for another year. One of the facts developed in the hearings before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice was that with the present limited cell capacity there was the necessity for putting two convicts into one cell. That is a practice that is recognized to be a bad one in all penal institutions, and it is a situation that the Department of Justice is very anxious to remedy. This additional money is needed to build a new block of cells there, and I absolutely believe, and I believe that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice believes, and I believe the gentleman from Georgia, who is familiar with the institution in his State, believes that there is the utmost necessity for a cell for each convict in these institutions which are now being constructed by the Government. There is no question but that the additional amount asked for should be given.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows that there is no excuse for crowding these prisons. There is a very large appropriation, $500,000, to provide for them in State penitentiaries.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; but the department does not want to scatter all their prisoners in that way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They ought to do that rather than put them in cells under conditions that can not be defended. Congress gives an appropriaton for that purpose.

Mr. ANTHONY. The addition of about $40,000 more for construction at each of these institutions will obviate that difficulty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not. They could not expend it before the next bill becomes a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ANTHONY) there were—ayes 15, noes 32.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "penitentiary," in line 3, page 112, the following:

"Provided, That not exceeding $3,500 of the above appropriation of $100,000 shall be paid as compensation in any form for the services of any architect or architects."

[Mr. BEALL of Texas addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is a good one. I believe it is possible to carry on the work of construction at Leavenworth and at Atlanta, and that the amount carried in the amendment will be sufficient to provide necessary architectural superintendence. The fact is that the Government now owns the plans for both of these institutions. As I understand it, it had already, in its previous contracts with these architects, purchased their plans. It has the present working plans, and all that is necessary at either of these institutions now is to provide a sufficient salary to pay a constructing architect to supervise the carrying out of the plans the Government now owns. I do not believe there is the slightest necessity for paying 5 per cent on the cost of construction from this time on.

The facts are, on the other hand, that I do not believe blame can be attached to the Department of Justice for the making of the 5 per cent contract. As I understand it, 5 per cent is the usual fee asked by the American Institute of Architects upon such work. It is the usual fee which the Government pays in the Treasury Department to architects for supervising the construction of Government work.

Take the great work at Annapolis, where the Naval Department has finished the expenditure of $10,000,000 in rebuilding that institution. I investigated that in looking up the developments brought out before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice in reference to these prisons, and I found that at Annapolis we have paid out nearly $500,000 to architects for fees. I found that at Key West, where the Government has expended about $7,000,000 for new construction work, we have paid out to architects 5 per cent on that amount, nearly $350,000. I consider that an exorbitant charge and extravagant, and yet it is the usual fee that architects are paid for private work.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. That 5 per cent of which the gentleman speaks would be a fee that would be paid an architect when he began the work, for services in planning, designing, and supervising the construction of the building. Here this 5 per cent was agreed to be paid these architects years after the construction of the buildings had begun, when hundreds of thousands of dollars of construction work had already been erected, when the general design must have been adopted, and the general plans and specifications approved.

Mr. ANTHONY. And yet on the other hand the Department of Justice fears that if these architects would withdraw from the work, which they were carrying on at that time, the Department of Justice would be unable to continue with that work. As I understand it, the new contract was entered into on account of a threat of the architects to withdraw from the work.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that that is entirely new to me. I never before heard a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The new contract was entered into because of the expiration of the old contract.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have a very high regard for both the ability and the fairness of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL]. I have been impressed with what he has said, and yet my recollection is that the fee now prescribed by the American Institute of Architects is 6 per cent and not 5 per cent. I am not sure about that, but I think that is the case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is 6 per cent. That is the rate within recent years that members of the American Institute of Architects are compelled to charge if they enter into competition; but they are permitted to make any charge they please if they do not do work as a result of competition.

Mr. MANN. Then my understanding that the rate is 6 per cent is correct. It is quite probable that that rate ought not to be paid at the Fort Leavenworth Penitentiary, and very likely the gentleman is absolutely correct in his deduction that $3,500 is sufficient now to pay. I have no doubt whatever, if the gentleman would get all the facts, that he would say that there was nothing improper in entering into this contract, and that probably it was to the interest of the Government where Congress had not acted.

If we say that not more than $3,500 can be paid for architects' services, we take that responsibility, and the administrative officers are relieved from responsibility in case the work does not progress or in case the architect services do not provide a proper building.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would state to the gentleman that I have endeavored to ascertain all the facts that can be ascertained in connection with the making of the new contract, and I have never been able to find any reason why the original contract was modified, except the fact that the architect wanted an increase of compensation.

Mr. MANN. I presume that was the reason.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I never heard any suggestion that there was any threat of their discontinuing their services or of the work being interrupted in any way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I long ago learned by observation, if not by experience, that very few people appreciate the value of professional services, except those who render them. Professional fees always seem high to those upon the outside, and very often to those who pay them. I have heard this question of architects' fees discussed in the House here for a good many years at different times, denunciations of the American Institute of Architects, and it may be that their fees are too high and ought not to be paid.

But they go ahead collecting that, as a rule, from private individuals. As I understand, in the opinion of the gentleman, and as I said before I have a very high regard for his opinion, if this limitation is put on the bill it will not affect the constructon of this work.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, it would. In my judgment, instead of appropriating $3,500 a year, we ought not to appropriate anything for architects, because I think the superintendent of construction with the material that he has available will be able to continue the work upon that building.

Mr. MANN. While I have a high regard for the gentleman's judgment, I would not agree with him on that. I believe it is desirable in the construction of a building anywhere to have the services of an architect in addition to the services of a constructor. I think anyone who constructs a building would agree as to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not oppose the amendment. The only doubt in my mind is whether it either goes far enough or whether this work should not be done under the control of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will admit that will probably cost more than $3,500 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not, and I can explain very easily. The plans have been prepared and all paid for. For the four years from 1909 to the present time $400,000 was appropriated, and the architects got 10 per cent of that amount. Under their contract 1 per cent was for design, 1½ per cent for general drawings and specifications, 1½ per cent, if I recollect correctly, for supervision. Their contract contains some interesting features. They are paid in addition to the fee:

The actual, reasonable, and necessary traveling expenses of the architects or their representatives or employees while engaged in the performance of the work covered by this contract, it being understood that it will be necessary to some extent to travel, especially between St. Louis, Washington, Atlanta, and Leavenworth.

Telegraph, telephone, and messenger service reasonably necessary to conduct by the architect of the contract service.

The reasonable expense of surveys and of chemical and mechanical tests.

Franked envelopes and wrappers and official stationery, reasonably adequate to the needs of the architect to perform the contract work, shall be furnished to them by the United States, to be used by the architect only in accordance with the law and with the regulations of the Post Office Department.

The feature of the contract which I believe is open to the most severe criticism is the manner in which the value of the building is reached in order to estimate the compensation of the architect. They do not figure upon the material and value of the labor put into the building, convict labor being used, but the contract provides for the payment of compensation on the market value of the completed building. Gentlemen can easily understand what a margin there may be for estimation as to what may be the market value of a building when completed. Now, under this contract the United States is required to employ and pay at both of these penitentiaries competent superintendents of construction to carry out the plans and designs of the architect. It is very easy, it seems to me, to put this work entirely on the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, but it was because the committee was not in a position to come to some definite conclusion as to the wisest course to pursue that no recommendation was contained in this bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL] last summer went into the matter exhaustively, and I am prepared to follow whatever his judgment may be in this matter.

[Mr. BEALL of Texas addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to state there is a very good reason for ordering that steel in advance? Now, it takes three or four years to build one of these steel houses, and when you order the steel it is necessary, as I understand it, to order the entire amount of steel that will be needed for one of these houses. They can not order the amount which will be needed for one year only, but the entire amount of steel must be fabricated at once, and I understand that is the reason why they have that steel on hand that will not be used for a year or two.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas that there is 1½ per cent under the contract for superintendence and 1 per cent for detailed plans. That would make 2½ per cent of the 5 per cent, and under the gentleman's provision they might pay as much as 3½ per cent out of this appropriation.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. At least we will have the assurance they will not get but $3,500 during the next 12 months, and we would not repeat the experience that we had of paying $32,000 in eight months.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman answer me this? I am in thorough sympathy with this and I think the gentleman is right, yet we have this contract. It may be the Attorney General had the right to make it. How are we going to get away from it?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not imagine they will receive the appropriation unless Congress makes the appropriation for it.
